of the King's counsell, such as they shall think conve-ient, shall proceed to judgment; and the terror of the terror of records, and the grievances of such judgments delayed, be remanded before the judges before whom the plea did defend;
and they shall give judgment according to the same record;
and in case the difficulty be so great that it may not well determined without ailent of parliament, the said terror shall be brought by the said prelate, ears and barons, intest to parliament, and there shall be a final acc-taken what judgment ought to be given; and by advice of the said prelate, ears and barons, be it ordined to increase the number of the officers when need shall be, and to diminish in the same manner.

Stat. 4 H. 4, cap. 29. After judgment given in the court of the King, the parties and their heirs shall be there in peace until the judgment to be undone by artaint or error, as hath been used.

Stat. 20 Car. 2, cap. 3. fol. 14. Any judge or officer of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, that shall sign any judgments, shall without fee set down the day of the month and year upon the paper-books, docket or record which they shall sign; which day and month, &c.
shall be also entered upon the margin of the same record.

Sect. 15. Such judgments, as against purchasers for valuable consideration of lands, shall in consideration of law be judgments only from such time as they shall be signed, and shall not relate to the first day of the term.

Stat. 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. cap. 20. fol. 2. The clerk of the exoffign of the Common Pleas, every clerk of the doggets of the King's Bench, and the master of the office of pleas in the Exchequer, shall in every Election term put into an alphabetical doggett by the defendant names a particular of all judgments for debt, by confession, non est inventun or notis dictus, entered in the said respective courts of the term of Hillary preceding, which shall contain the names of the plaintiff, the names of the defendants, their places of abode, title, trade or profession (if any such be in the record) and the debt, discharges and costs recovered; and in what county, city or parish the suit was laid, and the number-roll; and in every clerk of the judgments, and every other clerk of the Common Pleas and King's Bench, shall bring to the clerks of the doggets notes of the judgments by them entered in the said term of St. Hillary, upon verdicle writs of inquiry, demurrer, and every other judgment for debt or damages as aforesaid; and the clerk of the judgments, and every other clerk of the Exchequer, shall bring to the master of the office of pleas the like notes of all judgments by them entered in the said term as aforesaid; and the respective officers and clerks of the said judgments shall likewise before the last day of every Michaelmas term make the like doggett, containing all such judgments of debt as shall then and there be, and shall likewise before the last day of every Hilary term make the like doggett, containing all such judgments of the term of St. Michael then last past; and it such doggotts shall be kept in books in parchment in the two respective offices, to be searched by all persons, paying the same toll as is due for the term's search for judgments against any one person 4d.; and upon pain that every clerk before mentioned shall for every term in which he shall neglect his duty in the premises forfeit 100 l. to the moiety the party aggrieved, and the other moiety him who shall sue for the same in any of their majesty's courts at Westminster.

Sect. 2. No judgment, nor doggett as aforesaid, the affect any lands as to purchasers or mortgagees, or any preference against heirs, executors or administrators in their administration.

Sect. 4. There shall be paid by the plaintiff in the ev't of the said judgments to be entered, over and above the fees now due, 4 d.
2. When judgments are to be signed and entered.

Four days after the plaintiff's attorney doth bring the process into the court, if the rule for judgment is out, he may send to the court of the place, that the court of the place, Mich. 22 Car. B. R. except the defendant do not then, or before, move some thing to the court in arrest and stay of judgment; but no judgment upon a verdict ought to be entered until a rule given, and such rule out. 2 L. P. R. 95.

If a verdict be given after the term, although by adjournment, no judgment can be given upon that verdict, until the next term following, for such proceedings cannot be in the vacation time, for the judgment is the act of the court, and if the term is not broken, and there is a return of the process at the day in bank, no warrantable judgment can be given. 2 L. P. R. 111.

After verdict it was moved in arrest of judgment, that there was a mis-trial which was afterwards held well enough; but before the court had delivered their opinion of the plaintiff's death; it was prayed notwithstanding, that judgment might be entered, there being no default in the plaintiffs, but the delay by act of the court, and that it was within the statute of Car. 2. that the death of the party before verdict and judgment should not abate the action, and that it was in the discretion of the court, whether to take notice of the death in this action, for the demand of the plaintiff has no day in court to plead, there being no continuances entered after the return of the process, and cited 1 Es. 187, Missy's cafe, and Mr. q. and the court were of opinion, that judgment ought to be entered, and there being no continuances, it may be entered as if immediately upon the return of the process. Yet. 90. Trin. 22 Car. B. R.

A judgment to bind the goods, may be signed after the defendant's death, notwithstanding the statute of frauds and perjuries; because that statute was made only to help purchasers. 2 L. P. R. 117. cites Pabo. 2 Jas. 2. 2. B. Freckleton v. Moore.

In an action on the cafe brought against the sheriff or a return of nulla bona upon a fieri facias; although judgment was signed after the telle of the writ of fieri facias, and both the judgment and fieri facias were of Hilary term, but the judgment not signed until March afterwards, yet it was held good; and the court declared, that they would not make any use of the day of signing of the judgment, but only to relieve parcharis as the statute intended. 2 L. P. R. 118. cites Hill. 2. 3 Jas. 1. Stampy v. Kinley.

If the plaintiff will not bring his process into the court söventh and eighth days of the course, the defendant may have time to speak in arrest of judgment, the court will not stay the judgment until the plaintiff shall move for judgment; which he cannot do without bringing his process into court, and giving notice thereof to the defendant's attorney, and he may think himself for this trouble and charge or not bringing in of his process as he ought to have done. He may not bring in like law it is in case of a writ of inquiry. 2 L. P. R. 115.

Upon a writ of inquiry, either on demurrer or judgment by default executed the last day of the term, the plaintiff may enter judgment the 5th day after, and not after. 1 Salk. 399. Trin. 5 W. & M. Clerk v. Rowland.

After rule entered, judgment shall be signed on the 8th day after inclusively in Hilary and Trinity term. 12 Med. 40. Pabo. 5 W. & M. Annu.

Indictment for a misdemeanour, was tried three days before the end of the term, and judgment entered the same term, so that defendant had not four days to move in arrest of judgment. The question was, whether this entry was regular, and whether it should not have been signed till the term following; and per Hil. Ch. J. If there are four days and more between the trial and the entry of judgment, defendant not to be entered within the four days; if the difference be less than four days, the term and the party is tried within two or three days before the end of the term, the judgment shall be entered that term, tho' there are not four days to move in arrest of judgment; and so he said it was settled in the case of Knox v. Lennox. Upon conference between Serreys Ch. J. and Sir William Jephson Attorney General, contrary to the report of Sir Samuel Afyery. 1 Salk. 77. Pabo. 117. 3. B. R. Annu.

By the ancient rules of the court, the judgments of one term ought to be entered on the roll before the efton day of the next term; and the late act of parliament for docketting of judgments was only in imitation of the ancient course in aid of; per Hilt Ch. J. 6 Med. 184. Trin. 3. Ann. B. R. in the case of Herring v. Corder.

The plaintiff, by a special injunction out of Chancery, was restrained from signing judgment near 12 months after rule given to plead; he may, after such injunction dissolved, file a new petition without giving a new rule to plead. Notes of Gages in C. B. 156. Mich. 6 Gen. 2. theobum v. Jachem.

Tho' no appearance be actually entered, yet if defendant's attorney undertakes to appear, it is sufficient to support the judgment. Notes of Gages in C. B. 156. Mich. 6 Gen. 2. theobum v. Jachem.

If defendant demandsoyer of an indenture, which is given, the defendant has the same time to plead after declaration is verified by the oyer as he had at the time of oyer demanded, and therefore judgment being signed the next day after oyer given, and the oyer having been annulled after 12 days before the rule for pleading was out, the judgment was yet good. Notes of Gages in C. B. 156. Mich. 6 Gen. 2. theobum v. Jachem.

The capias was returnable the 27th of October last, and judgment signed November 7th following; it was moved to set aside the judgment as signed the 12th day after the return of the writ, which was one day too soon, the defendant having, by the late act of parliament, eight days to appear after the return of the writ, and by the practice of the court, four days afterwards to plead, and the court made a rule to sue caufe; thereupon it was shewed for cause, that the declaration was left in the office de bono off, (petition to the rule of court made in Middleman term 3 Gen. 2.) on the third day of the term, and that day served upon defendant, and a rule to plead given the same day; and on the 7th of November, defendant not having appeared, plaintiff, upon the usual affidavit, entered an appearance for him; and afterwards, the same day, signed judgment, which the court held to be regular, and discharged the former rule. Notes in C. B. 167. Hill. 7 Geo. 2. Charlton v. Hankey and another.

The writ was returnable tres Mich. and an appearance entered by the plaintiff. The declaration was left in the office November the 6th, and rule to plead then given; notice of the declaration filed was served upon the defendant November 11th, defendant moved left term to set aside the judgment, and obtained a rule to sue caufe, which was made absolute upon hearing counsel on both sides. The declaration not being delivered de bono off, was only well delivered from the time of the notice; and before that time no plea was entered. Notes in C. B. 172. Hill. 8 Geo. 2. Grey v. Saunders.

After rule to plead expired, defendant obtained, and served a judge's summons for time to plead. Plaintiff's attorney, notwithstanding the summons, signed judgment; defendant moved to set aside the judgment, and on pleading the cause, held the judgment to be regular. A summons for time, after rule to plead expired, is not a supersedeas or stay of proceedings. The judge was imposed upon; he would not have granted the summons, Judgment was given in debt upon a bond against an executor in C. B. and upon error brought in B. R. errors were assigned; and because, upon the record it did not appear that the monies are yet payable, rule was given to refer the judgment, nls, &c., and the counsel of the defendant in error said, he could not maintain the judgment, and therefore prayed the reversal of it for his client's execution; who intended to bring a new action, by which it was reversed absolutely. 2 Saund. 106, 108. Pajch. 22 Car. 2. Holilipp v. Ortony.

A femme covert who lived by herself, and acted as a feme foie, gave a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment, &c., and afterwards moved to set aside the judgment; the court would not relieve her, but put her to her writ of error. 1 Salt. 400. Mich. 10 V. 3. B. R. Anst.'

Upon payment of costs, the court will set aside a judgment, tho' it be regularly entered, if the plaintiff hath not lost a trial; and fo is the common course in C. B. 1 Salt. 402. Mich. 3 Ann. B. R. Sylf'd v. Lea.

Stat. 5 Geo. c. 13, enacts, That where a verdict shall be given in any action in any court of record in England or Wales, the judgment shall not be final for any defect in form or substance in any part of the proceedings.

Baynes moved to set aside the judgment, upon an affidavit of a demand of over of the bond on the 29th of May, (being the same day wherein a plea was demanded) and of the service of Mr. Justice Parkes's summons the same day of oyer, and time to plead. Darrell for plaintiff opposes the motion, and produced an affidavit that oyer was not demanded, nor summons served till after the rule to plead; and the court refused to make any rule. Notes in C. B. 161. Trin. 6 & 7 Geo. 2. Farrance v. Brignall.

A motion was made against judgment for plaintiff upon the issue of null & vacuo. The case was, Plaintiff had mistak'en commoration in his declaration; defendant had pleaded in abatement, and annexed affidavit of the truth of this plea; plaintiff brought a new action, and the defendant pleaded the former action depending; upon which plaintiff of his own head, without leave of the court entered a nil cognitum per breve. The officers were asked their opinions, who all agreed it to be the custom and practice; and the court allowed it. But when another question arose, whether the plaintiff could have made such an entry, in case the false plea had not been in abate- ment, and defendant had pleaded nulla mens abatement; but Coke thought it might be in all cases; the court said, it was impossible to be so, and held it confined to abatements. Notes in C. B. 185, 189. Pajch. 11 Geo. 2. Ofonne v. Holdcuck.

The defendant's attorney left a note at the house of the plaintiff's attorney, of double remittance in this manner, viz. I plead nil debit, yours, &c., and the plaintiff's attorney without making notice to the defendant's attorney, that he expected a plea in form, signed judgment; and upon a motion to set the judgment aside, it was held to be regular, and the note aforesaid to be no plea. Pleas delivered to attorneys must be drawn up in the same manner as to be left in the office. Notes in C. B. 156. Mich. 6 Geo. 2. Martyn, qui tam v. Skinner.

It was moved to set file a judgment signed for want of a plea, upon an affidavit of the delivery of a plea to the plaintiff's attorney in due time, which was a plea of an outlawry against the plaintiff in B. R. pleaded in bar, and moved for a remitter, and assailed the same as a peremptory summons, and that the plaintiff, therefore, was infil'ted, that the outlawry not being pleaded fab pecte fi Gilli, plaintiff was not bound to accept it, and therefore might regularly sign judgment, and cited 1 Salt. 217. Carewbe 220. They ordered it to be moved again; and when the motion came on the second time it was moved a rule, but before it was taken it was found the defendant's attorney differed it from the cafe quoted on the other side, and quoted Coke's Inst. 128. 1 Lutw. 40. 2 Med. 267. Atkins & Bayk. It was replied, that Lord Ch. J. Holt's words in Carewb and Saffold, go both to pleas in bar and abatement, where the outlawry is in another court, 4th Wiltph's Cases. Carewbe 213. 2 Vent. 282, quoted (are of) pleas in bar, not dilatory; plaintiff cannot take upon him to judge of the plea in bar; he shou'd apply to the court or demur; rule made to set aside the judgment. Notes in C. B. 160. Trin. 6 & 7 Geo. 2. Panter v. Coppin.

A rule to plead was given in Trinity term last; and defendant obtained time by Mr. Justice Reeves's order to plead 'till the first day of this term; and for want of a plea the plaintiff signed judgment of this term, with out giving a new rule to plead; which the court held to be regular, the rule to plead, given last term, being en- larged by the judges order to the first day of this term. Notes in C. B. 165. Mich. 7 Geo. 2. Anst v. Panter.

The writ was returnable the first return of this term, whereunto defendant appeared by his attorney, and plaintiff in Tervibre, gave a rule to plead, and, after demanding a plea, signed judgment for want thereof in four days; defendant moved to set aside the judgment; and the quizzon before the court was, whether in this case the defendant should have four or eight days to plead. And the court held, that pursuant to the rule of court made in Michaelmas term, third of his present Majestie, in all cafes upon writs returnable the first or second return of any term, if the plaintiff doth not declare in London or Middlesex, or the defendant lives about 20 miles from London, the defendant hath eight days time to plead; but therefore set aside the judgment. Notes in C. B. 165. Mich. 7 Geo. 2. Lasonby v. Bradley.

Defendant pleaded a tender, but brought no money into court; he gave a rule to reply, and for want of a replication signed a non praes; plaintiff looked upon the plea as a non praes; money not being brought into the signed judgment after the non praes obtained, and now moved to set aside the non praes. The defendant moved to set aside the judgment, infiting that the plaintiff could not regularly sign judgment 'till the non praes was set aside; and of that opinion was Sir George Coke, but the two other prothonatories reported the prudler contrary; and the court was of opinion, that the non praes not being rightly obtained, plaintiff might proceed in the same manner, as he might have done in case of

Sect. 2. Upon every first writ of habeas corpus or disfringens with a nisi prius delivered of record, the sheriff shall return in issues upon every person impanelled at leat, and at the second writ, 301, and the third writ, and upon every writ further to double the issues, until a full jury be sworn; upon pain to forfeit for every return contrary to the form afofead, 31.

Sect. 3. If any sheriff or other minister return any person in any jury, wherein he shall for default of appearance lose any issues, where in truth such person shall not be summoned, the same sheriff, &c., shall forfeit to the person so returned double the value of the issues lost.

Sect. 4. If any sheriff, under-sheriff, &c., or bailiff of franchises, shall take any money or other profit, or any agreement to have any profit for the not returning of any person to be sworn as juror for the trial of any issue joined before any justices, every sheriff, &c., to offending shall forfeit 5l, the one moiety to the Queen, and the other moiety to such person as shall sue for the same in any court of record at law.

Stat. 7 Will. 3. cap. 32. sect. 1. If any plaintiff or demandant in any cause in the courts at Westminster, which shall be at issue, shall sue forth a written facit, upon which any baileys corpora or dirigentes with a nisi prius shall issue, in order to the trial of such issue at the assizes, and such plaintiff, &c. shall not proceed to trial at the first assizes; in all such cases (other than where vews by jurors shall be directed) the plaintiff, &c. whenever he shall think fit to try the issue, shall use forth a new venire in this form: Shall de novo venire facias coram &c. et delebatur libra de vicinato de A. et qui fuerit facias coram &c. et delebatur libera de vicinato de A. quam visquit libret decem librat terre, tenementorum vel redditionem per annum ad minus per quas, &c. et qui nec, &c. which writ being returned and filed, a baileys corpora or dirigentes with a nisi prius shall issue thereupon (for which the ancient fees shall be taken, as in case of nisi prius baileys corpores or dirigentes; upon which the plaintiff, &c. may proceed to trial, as if the matter were against facias coram, &c. and to be tried before venire facias having been filed, and so tates quotes; and if any defendant or tenant, in any action in the said courts, shall be minded to bring to trial any issue, when by the course of the court he may do the same by facias, such defendant, shall issue a new venire facias and proceed the same by baileys corpora or dirigentes, with a nisi prius, as though there had not been any former venire ensued or returned, and so tates quotes.

Sect. 3. In every writ of baileys corpora or dirigentes, with a nisi prius, where a full jury shall not appear, or where the jury alone is to be returned; for any such writs, the sheriff shall upon the awarding the tates, return freetholders or copyholders of the county, who shall be returned upon some other panel to serve at the same assizes, and not others, if so many of the other panels be present; and either of the parties shall have his writ of procuration for the said sheriff, or copyholder, as the sheriff shall return upon the tates, being above, shall be called, and not appear; or shall willingly withdraw himself, the judge of assizes shall then sit upon such person.

Sect. 4. The sheriffs may be the better informed of persons to be returned for trials of issues joined in the courts of Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas or Exchequer, or to serve upon jurys at assizes, elections of eyre and terminer, general gaol-delivery and feessions of the peace; all constables, tithingmen and headboroughs, shall yearly, at the quarter-fees, in the week after St. Michael, upon the first day of the feessions, or upon the first day that the feession shall be held by adjournment at any particular division, return a list of the names and places of abode of all persons within the places for which they serve, qualified to serve upon such jury, with their adoptions, between the age of one and twenty years and seventy years, to the justices; which justices, or two of them, shall cause to be made an impression of the list, by the clerks of the peace to the sheriffs, on or before the first of January, and cause the lists to be entered by the clerk of the peace, among the records of the feessions; and no sheriff shall impanel any persons to try issues joined in the said courts, or to serve at any assizes, elections of eyre and terminer, gaol-delivery or feessions of the peace, that shall not be named in the list; and any constable, tithingman or headborough, failing to make the return aforesaid, shall forfeit 5l. to his Majesty.

Sect. 5. Every summoner of any person qualified to the offices of sheriff, under-sheriff, chief officer or deputy, shall be made by the sheriff, his officer or deputy, six days before the giving of notice to every person so summoned, the warrant under the seal of the office; and in case any juror be absent from his habituation, notice of such summonses shall be given, by leaving a note in writing under the hand of such officer, at the dwelling-house of such juror, with some person there present; and if the sheriff shall not return the juror to be present, he shall be liable for the costs incurred.

Sect. 6. The said return to the justices shall be a good excuse for the sheriff, for such summonses and returns; and if any action shall be brought against any sheriff for such return, the sheriff may plead the general issue; and if the plaintiff be non-suited, &c. the plaintiff or defendant shall have treble costs; and if the sheriff, his deputy or bailiff, shall summon any freetholder or copyholder otherwise than as aforesaid, or neglect their duty in the services required by this act, or excuse any person to favour or reward, or allow of any writ of non prosectio in assist & juratis, or other writ, to excuse any person for.
from the service of any jury, under the age of seventy years; such sheriff, &c., shall forfeit 20l. to be recovered by such party, or whom else shall sue for the same, in any of the courts at Westminster.

Sect. 7. Any sheriff shall be required to serve upon any of the assizes or general-delivery for the county of York, or at any feessions of the peace for any part thereof (the city of York and town of King'ston upon Hull excepted) above once in four years; and every sheriff of the said county shall keep a register, wherein the names of all who have served as jurors, with their additions and places of abode, and the times and places of such their services shall be alphabetically entered, which register shall be delivered over to the succeeding sheriff within ten days after he shall be sworn into his office, and every juror who shall serve at any of the said assizes, or seessions of the peace, or be a member of any of such registers, &c., repair to the sheriff to have his name entered in the same, whereby he shall have a certificate, upon request, gratis.

Sect. 8. Only one panel, consisting of forty-eight (each person having fourcore pounds land per annum) shall be returned to serve on the grand inquest, and no more than ten panels, consisting of twenty-four jurors each, shall be returned to serve for the trial of any circuit or petty cause, at any assizes for the county of York (except where special justices or registers are directed by rule of court) and at no one quarter-sefions of the peace for the said county, or within any of the ridings within the same, or in any place where there shall be held a baronial adjournment within the said county, shall be returned above the said number of jurors, to serve either upon the grand inquest or other service there.

Sect. 9. The inhabitants of the city of Westminster shall be exempted from serving in any jury at the sefions of the peace for Middlesex.

Sect. 10. The act 4 Will. & Mar. cap. 24, as to so much as doth relate to the returning of jurors, shall be of force, together with this act, for seven years, from the first of May 1696, and to the end of the next sefion of parliament.

Sect. 11. This act, or the said act, shall not give the jurors any longer time for the furnishing of jurors, to any jury, than the time now required for the same, as according to their own discretion, or as shall be directed; and as the same, he might have been before the said act.

Sect. 12. This act shall not extend to the city of London, nor to any county of any city or town, nor to any city or town corporate that have power by charter to hold a baronial sefion or any sefions of the peace.

Further continued by 1 Ann. cap. 12, for seven years, and to the end of the next sefion, and continued farther for 11 years, &c., to 10 Ann. cap. 14, and continued farther for 7 years, &c., to 9 Geo. 1. cap. 8, and referred to by 3 Geo. 2. cap. 25, which act of 3 Geo. 2. cap. 25, is made perpetual by 6 Geo. 2. cap. 37.

Stat. 9 Will. 2. 3. All juries of peace are required at their sefions next before the feast of St. Michael yearly, to issue precepts to the confables, requiring them to make such return of persons to serve upon jurors, as by the act 7 Will. 3. cap. 32. is directed.

Stat. 1 Ann. fs. 2. cap. 13, sect. 5. No person interested in such estate as will qualify him to serve on jurors of the yearly value of 150l. shall serve as juror at any of the said sefions of the peace, or be admitted to serve upon any jurors of the yearly value of 150l. or of greater value, shall be returned to serve upon any jury, at any sefions of the peace for any part of the county of York, upon the penalty of 20l. to be forfeited by any sheriff, or other officer making such return and summons, to be redeemed of any person, and lawful, for the same, in any of the courts of record at Westminster, by action of debt, &c.

Stat. 3 Ann. cap. 18. sect. 3. If any sheriff of the county of York shall, during the continuance of the said act 7 Will. 3. cap. 32. neglect to keep such register, as in the act is directed, or shall neglect to enter the names of the jurors in any appeal or quarter-sefion, as in the said act is directed, or shall neglect, within ten days after the succeeding sheriff shall be sworn into his office, to deliver over as well the registers that shall be made in the year wherein he shall have served sheriff, as also all such other registers as were prepared in the heretoforewick of any of his preceding sheriffs, at the same, and which were delivered over to him, shall the sheriff, &c., deliver such certificate gratis, as in the said act is mentioned; every such sheriff of the county of York shall forfeit 100l. one moiety to her Majesty, and the other moiety to such person as shall sue for the same, in any of her Majesty's courts at Westminster.

Sect. 4. If any such sheriff of the said county, his deputy or bailiff, during the continuance of the said act, shall knowingly summon or return any person to serve on any jury at the assizes or seessions of the peace, who shall within four years before such summons or return, have served on any jury at any sefions or within the county, and shall not, upon producing such certificate, discharge the summons or return, and thereof give notice to the party summoned, five days before such seessions or seessions of the peace; the said sheriff, &c., shall forfeit to the party summoned 20l. to be recovered as before-mentioned, with costs.

Sect. 5. The justices of peace for all counties within England or Wales, shall yearly during the continuance of the said act, at the quarter-sefions next after the 24th of June, issue their warrants to the head-confables of every hundred, lathe or wapentake, requiring them to issue their precepts to the tithingmen and headboroughs, requiring them to meet together with the head-confables, within fourteen days next after, at some usual place, where the confables, &c., shall prepare a list signed by them, of the names and places of abode of all the persons within the places for which they serve, qualified to serve on jurors, according to the said act 4 Will. & Mar. cap. 24, with their additions, between the ages of 21 years and 70 years, as by the said act 7 Will. 3. cap. 32. is directed; which list the confable, &c., yearly at the quarter-sefions in the week after St. Michael, upon the first day of the sefions, or upon the first day that the said list shall be held by adjournment at any particular place, shall return to the justice, and any head-confable failing to issue his precept to meet with the confables, &c., shall forfeit 10l. and any confable, &c., failing to meet the head-confable, and failing to prepare a list, and to return the same to the justices as aforesaid, shall forfeit 5l. and every such head-confable and tithingman for offending, shall be proceeded against as the justices shall think meet, for the misdeeds of eyer and terminor, or general goad-delivery, or seessions of the peace, and the justices of the peace, and the quarter-sefions, after the 24th of June yearly, shall cause the said falfd acts to be read in court.

Continued by 10 Ann. cap. 14, along with 7 Will. 3. cap. 32.

Stat. 10 Ann. cap. 14. sect. 5. The statute 7 Will. 3. cap. 32. shall be continued to extend, not only to any seessions of the peace to be held for any of the ridings within the county of York, but also to any seessions that shall be held by adjournment for any part of the said ridings.

Sect. 6. If any person interested in such estate as will qualify him to serve on jurors of the yearly value of 150l. shall serve as a juror at any of the said seessions or adjournments, he shall not thereby be exempted from serving as a juror or any of the seessions or the court of York.

Stat. 3 Geo. 2. cap. 35, sect. 7. The persons required by 7 & 8 Will. 3. cap. 32. and by a clause in 3 & 4 Ann. cap. 18, to give in, or who are by this act to make up, lists of the names of persons qualified to serve on jurors, shall (on request to any parish-officer, who shall have in his charge the list of the rates for the poor, or land-tax) have liberty to send such names, of such persons qualified dwelling within their precincts and shall yearly, twenty days at least before Michaelmas, upon two Sundays, fix upon the door of the church, within their precincts, a list of all such persons intended to be returned to the quarter-seessions, and leave a duplicate of such list with a churchwarden or overseer.
poor; and if any person not qualified shall find his name mentioned in such lift, and the person required to make such lift, shall refuse to omit him, the justices at their quarter-seessions, on satisfaction of the party complaining, or other proof, shall order his name to be struck out.

Sect. 2. If any person, required to give in or make up any such lift, shall wilfully omit any person whose name ought to be inserted, or neglect any who ought to be omitted, or fail to deliver any such lift, he shall, for every person so omitted or inserted, forfeit 20s. on conviction before one justice of the county, &c. where the offender shall dwell, on the confession of the offender, or proof by one witneses on oath; one half to the informer, the other half to the poor of the parish, &c. for which the lift is returned; and if such penalty shall not be paid within five days, it shall be levied by diffrets and sale of goods, by warrant from one justice; and the justices before whom such person shall be convicted shall certify the name to the next quarter-seessions, which shall direct the clerk of the peace to insert or strike out the name, and duplicates of the lift, when delivered to the justices and entered by the clerk of the peace, shall, during the sessions, or within ten days after, be transmitted by the clerk of the peace to the sheriff, and the sheriff shall take care that the names be entered alphabetically, with their additions and places of abode; and every clerk of the peace neglecting his duty, shall forfeit 20l. to such person who shall prosecute for the same, till the party be convicted upon an indictment at the quarter-seessions.

Sect. 3. If any sheriff or officer shall summon and return any persons to serve upon any jury before the justices of af sidel, nisi prius, or judges of the great sessions in Wales, or of the sessions for the counties palatine, whose name is not inserted in the duplicates transmitted to him by the clerk of the peace; or if any clerk of affide, judge's associate, or other officer, shall record the appearance of any person so summoned and returned, who did not really appear; then any judge of affide, nisi prius, &c. the sheriff, or any other officer, shall be fined for such omission, for every person so summoned and returned, and for every peron whose appearance shall be so falsely recorded, as the said judge shall think fit, not exceeding 10l. nor less than 40s.

Sect. 4. No perons shall be returned as jurors at any assizes, nisi prius, or judges of the great sessions in Wales, or of the sessions for the counties palatine, whose name is not inserted in the duplicates transmitted to him by the clerk of the peace; or if any clerk of affide, judge's associate, or other officer, shall record the appearance of any person so summoned and returned, who did not really appear; then any judge of affide, nisi prius, &c. the sheriff, or any other officer, shall be fined for such omission, for every person so summoned and returned, and for every person whose appearance shall be so falsely recorded, as the said judge shall think fit, not exceeding 10l. nor less than 40s.

Sect. 5. Every sheriff, &c. shall register the names of such persons, as shall be summoned and serve as jurors at any affide, &c. alphabetically, and the times of their services; and every person so summoned and serving shall, upon application to the sheriff, &c. have a certificate certified by his attendance on the sessions, which the sheriff, &c. is to give without fee; and the book shall be transmitted by the sheriff, &c. to his successor.

Sect. 6. No sheriff or other person shall take any reward, to excute any person from serving on juries; and no officer appointed to furnish juries, shall summon any person other than such name is specified in a mandate signed by the sheriff, &c. And if any sheriff or officer shall wilfully transgress in the said cases, any judge of affide, &c. may, on examination and proof of such offence, in a summary way, set a fine upon such officer, not exceeding 10l.

Sect. 7. If any sheriff, or other person shall take any reward, to execute any person from serving on juries; and no officer appointed to furnish juries, shall summon any person other than such name is specified in a mandate signed by the sheriff, &c. And if any sheriff or officer shall wilfully transgress in the said cases, any judge of affide, &c. may, on examination and proof of such offence, in a summary way, set a fine upon any person so offending, not exceeding 10l.

Sect. 8. Every sheriff, &c. shall certify the names of any convicts, felons, or heads of families, after they have completed the lifts for their precincts, according to 7 & 8 Will. 3. cap. 32. and 3 & 4 Ann. cap. 28. and this act, to subscribe the same in the presence of one justice for each county, &c. and at the same time to attach the truth of such lifts, upon oath, to the belief of their knowledge or belief; and the lists shall be delivered by the constables, &c. to the high constables, who are to deliver in such lifts to the quarter-seessions, attending upon the special receipt of such lifts from the constables, &c. and that no alteration hath been made since their receipt thereof.

Sect. 9. Every sheriff, &c. shall, upon the return of every venire facias (unless in causes intended to be tried at bar, or where a special jury shall be struck by the sheriff, &c. annex a panel of jurors, containing the names, additions and places of abode, of a competent number of jurors named in such lifts, the names of the same persons to be inserted in the panel annexed to every venire facias, for the trial of issues at the assizes; which number of jurors shall not be less than fifteen, without the direction of the judge appointed to go the circuit, or of one or both of them, by order under their hands; and the writs of habeas corpus or adjurations, subsequent to such venire, need not have inserted in the bodies of such writs the names of the persons contained in such panel; but it shall be sufficient to insert in such writs, corpus juris-s----rnam per varios in manulo haec brev anteannuntii nominatio, or words of like import, and to annex to such writs panels containing the names returned in the panel to the venire; and for making the said returns and panels, and annexing the same, no other fees shall be taken than what are not allowed.

Every sheriff or officer, to whom the return of jurors in the court of grand sessions in any county of Wales shall belong, shall, at least eight days before every grand sessions, summon a competent number of persons qualified out of every hundred and commune within such county, so as such number be not less than ten, or more than fifteen, without the direction of the judge of such sessions, by rule of court; and the officer shall return a lift, containing the names of the persons so summoned the first court of the second day of every grand sessions; and the persons so summoned, or a competent number of them, as the judges shall direct, and no other, shall be summoned in every grand sessions. And every venire, habeas corpus and adjurations, for the trial of causes in such grand sessions.

Sect. 10. Every sheriff or officer, to whom the return of the venire for the trial of caues before the justices of the sessions for the counties palatine of Cheshire, Lancashire, and Yorks, shall be delivered, shall, at least eight days before the return of the venire, summons a competent number of persons qualified, so as such number be not less than 48, nor more than 72, without the direction of the judges, and shall, eight days at least before such sessions, make a lift of the persons so summoned; and such lifts shall be hung up in the sheriff's office; and from such persons may be tried in such courts, at a fee of 10s. and no others, shall be summoned or serve on juries at the next sessions; and the sheriff is to return such lift on the first day of the sessions; and the persons so summoned, or a competent number of them, as the judges shall direct, and no other, shall be named in every panel to be annexed to every venire, habeas corpus and adjurations in such sessions.

Sect. 11. The name of each person summoned and impanneled, with his addition and place of abode, shall be written in distinct pieces of parchment or paper of equal size, and shall be delivered to the marshal of the judge, &c. by the under-sheriff, and shall, by the direction of the marshal, be rolled up in all the forms in which they are kept, and put into a box or glass; and when a cause is brought to be tried, some indifferent person shall in open court draw out twelve of the papers; and if any of the persons drawn shall not appear, or be challenged and set aside, then a further number, 'till twelve be drawn who shall appear, and if in any of the twelve persons so named, their names being marked in the panel, and they being found, shall be the jury to try the cause; and the names of the persons so found shall be kept apart in some other box, &c. 'till the jury have given in their verdict, and the same is recorded, or 'till the jury be discharged; and then the same names shall be rolled up again and returned to the former box, &c. and be stored.

Sect. 12. If a carce shall be brought on to be tried before the jury in any other cause shall have been brought in their verdict, or be discharged, the court may order 12 of the residue to be drawn as before, for trial of the cause.

Sect. 13. Every person whose name shall be drawn, and to whom shall not appear, being called three times, on oath made that such person had been summoned, shall forfeit for every default (unless some reasonable cause of abstinence be proved by oath to the satisfaction of the judge) such fine, not exceeding 5l. nor less than 40s., as the judge shall think reasonable.

Sect. 14. Where a view shall be allowed, six of the jurors or more (who shall be contented to sit on both sides; or if they cannot agree shall be named by the proper officer of the court; or, if need be, by a judge, or by the judge before whom the cause shall be brought on to trial) shall have the view, and shall be first sworn, or such of them as appear on the jury, before any drawing; and so many only shall be drawn to be added to the viewers as shall make up the number of twelve.

Sect. 15. His Majesty's courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer at Westminster, upon the motion in behalf of his Majesty, or of the motion of any accuser or defendant, or on the indictment or information for any misdemeanor, or information of the nature of a quo warranto in the King's Bench, or in an information in the Exchequer, or on motion of any plaintiff or defendant in any cause depending in the said courts, are required to order a jury to be sworn before the proper officer of the court in trial of any such cause, in such manner as special juries are usually struck in such courts upon trials at bar.

Sect. 16. The person who shall apply for such jury shall pay the fees for striking it, and shall have no allowance for the same on taxation of costs.

Sect. 17. Where a special jury shall be ordered by rule or order given in the county of a city or town, the sheriff shall be ordered by such rule to bring the books of persons qualified to serve on juries within the same, in like manner as the freeholders book hath been usually ordered to be brought in order to the striking of juries for trials at bar, and the jury shall be struck out of such books.

Sect. 18. Any person having land in his own right of not yearly value of 20l. over and above the reserved rent, being held by lease for the absolute term of 500 years or more, or for 99 years or any other term determinable on one or more lives, the name of every such person shall be taken on the panel, and such person may be summoned to serve as a juror, and such freeholder may be summoned to serve on juries as reholders may.

Sect. 19. The sheriffs of London shall not return any person to try any issue joined in any of his Majesty's courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas or Exchequer, or to try any cause arising in the city, in the election of the peace to be held for the city, who shall not be a house-keeper within the city, and have lands, or personal estate to the value of 100l. and the same cause alleged by way of challenge, and found, shall be admitted as a principal challenge; and the person challenged may be examined on oath of the truth of the matter.

Sect. 20. The sheriffs or other officers shall not return any person to serve on a jury for the trial of any capital offence, who would not be qualified to serve as a juror in civil causes; and the same matter shall be a principal challenge; and the person challenged may be examined on oath of the truth of the matter.

Sect. 21. This act shall be read once in every year at the quarter sessions to be held for every county or place within England and Wales next after the 24th of June.

Sect. 22. This act shall continue till the first of September next, 1835. Made perpetual by 6 Geo. 4. cap. 37, sect. 4. cap. 7. sect. 1. The clause of 3 Geo. 2. cap. 25, sect. 4. shall not extend to the county of Mid-prius in the said county in the two terms or vacations next preceding, under such penalty upon the sheriffs, &c. as might have been inflicted for any offence against the said clause.

Sect. 3. All freeholders upon leases where the improved rents shall amount to 50l. per annum and above ground-rents, and all other reversionary, shall be liable to serve upon juries.

Sect. 4. Geo. 3. cap. 37. sect. 2. The justices of the se cion or affils for the counties palatine of Chriftjer, Longleather and Durham, upon motion on behalf of his Majesty, or of any accuser or defendant in any indictment or information for any plaintiff or defendant may, in case they think fit, order a jury to be struck before the proper officer of each court, in such manner as special juries have been usually struck in the courts at Westminster upon trials at bar.

Sect. 24. Geo. 3. cap. 18. sect. 1. The party who shall by virtue of any act summon special juries, and who shall not apply for a special jury, shall not only pay the fees for striking such jury, but shall also pay all the expenses occasioned by the trial of the cause by such special jury, and shall not have any other allowance for the same upon taxation of costs, than such party would be intitled to have in case the cause had been tried by a common jury; unless the judge before whom the cause is tried immediately after the trial certify in open court under his hand upon the back of the record, that the cause was a cause proper to be tried by a special jury.

Sect. 2. No person who serves upon any jury appointed by the authority of the said acts, shall be regarded as being summoned to serve on any panel of jurors, for want of a knight's being returned in such panel, nor any array quashed by reason of any such challenge.

Sect. 25. Geo. 2. cap. 19. sect. 1. Every person duly impanelled and summoned to serve upon any jury for the trial of any cause to be tried in any court of record within the city of London, or in any other city or town corporate, liberties or franchises within England, who shall not appear and serve on such jury after being called three times, and on proof on oath of the person to make default, having been duly summoned shall forfeit for every such default, such fine not exceeding 40l. nor less than 20l. as the judge of the respective court shall think reasonable, and such default is made shall impeach, unless some just cause for such defaulters abide be made appear by oath or affidavit to the satisfaction of the judge.

Sect. 2. If any person on whom any fine is imposed in pursuance of this act, refuse to pay the same to the person authorized by the judge to receive the same, it shall be lawful for the judge who imposed such fine, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause such fine to be levied by digestors and sale of the goods of the person on whom such fine was imposed, and the overplus, if any, after payment of such fine and the charges of such digestors and sale, shall be rendered to the person whose goods were so disfrained and sold.

Sect. 3. Every fine imposed in pursuance of this act, shall be paid by the person who receives or levies the same, to the proper officer of the city or town corporate, liberty or franchise, in which the court was holden; and the same shall be applied to such use as the digestors, or other fines sit in courts within such city, &c. are by charter, precept or usage applicable.

Sect. 4. If any action be brought for any thing done in pursuance of this act, such suit shall be brought within six calendar months next after the matter complained of is committed, and the same shall be applied to such use as the digestors, or other fines sit in courts within such city, &c. are by charter, precept, or usage applicable.

2. Who are exempted from serving on juries.

It seems to be agreed, that all persons whose attendance is required in the superior courts of justice, such as fequestors at law, counsellors, attorneys and other officers of the courts, are exempted from serving on juries; all peers of the realm are excluded, as not coming within the qualifications mentioned in the writ, viz. Ad factandum quoddam jurat patriae; for they are not pari patriae, but pari of a higher rank; and therefore it is clearly agreed, that if a peer be returned on a jury, and bring a writ of privileges, he shall be excused, even if it seems to be the better opinion, that even without such a writ he may challenge himself, or be challenged by either party. 4 Del. 314. Moir 167. 2 Rel. Abr. 648. Co. Lit. 157. 9 Co. 49. 6 Co. 53. 1 Jones 153.

But members of the house of commons from not to have any privilege to be exempt from serving on juries; yet in the case of Sir Edward Bainain, who being returned on a jury in B. R. the court would not force him to be sworn against his will, he being a parliament-man, and the parliament then sitting. Poph. 17 Car. 2. Sir Edward Bainain's case.

The opinion in ancient demesne are not to be impertinent to appear at Wymington, or elsewhere in any other court, upon any inquest or trial of any cause. 4 Inf. 269.

It seems agreed, that the King by his grant or charter may exempt one, two or more from serving on juries; but he cannot exempt a whole county or hundred, because in such cases there would be a failure of justice; alfo it seems that such exemption does not extend to jurors returned into the King's Bench, unless there be express words including that court; also by the better opinion, the sheriff cannot return such privilege of exemption, but each particular juror must come in, and demand it. 1 Sid. 127. 243. Ram. 113. Hard. 395. 46.

By the statute of Wym. 2. cap. 38. it is expressly provided, that no therd old men above the age of seventy years, nor persons perpetually sick, nor those who are infirm at the time of their summons, nor those who do not reside in the county, shall be put in juries or in the lesser affizes; in the construction of which it hath been held, that though such persons may sue out a writ of privilege for their discharge, grounded on this statute, yet if they be actually returned, and appear, they can neither be challenged by the party, or execute themselves from not serving, if there be not a sufficient number without them. 2 Inf. 446. 3 Bl. By the 6 W. 3. cap. 4. "Every person acting and executing the art of an apothecary in the city of London, or within seven miles thereof being free of the society of apothecaries in the said city, and who shall have been duly examined and approved, &c. for so long time as he shall exercise the said mystery, and no longer, shall be exempted from serving on any jury or inquest; and other persons exercising the said art of an apothecary in any other parts of this kingdom, who have served as apothecaries seven years, according to the statute 5 Eliz. shall likewise be exempted from serving on juries for so long time as they shall use and exercise the said art, unless such person voluntarily consent to serve." By the 7 W. 3. cap. 4. all regimented seamen are exempted from serving on juries.

By the 7 W. 3. cap. 3. in it is enacted, That no quaker, or reputed quaker, shall serve on juries.

3. Of the several kinds of juries, and jury procedure, and manner of compelling a jury to appear.

Juries are distinguished into grand and petit juries; the grand jury may consist of thirteen, or any greater number; for these being the grand inquisitors of the county, every indictment and preemption by them must be found by twelve at least; but it is not necessary that all above that number should concur in such preemption or indictment. 3 Inf. 30. 2 Inf. 38. 14 Co. 30. 11 P. C. 154.

Upon the summons of a seffion of the peace, and in cases of commissioms of oyer and terminer and gaol-delivery, there goes out a precept either in the name of the King, or of two or more justices, directed to the sheriff, upon which he is to return twenty-four or more out of the whole county, namely, a reckonable number out of every county, the number of which is fixed by the several seffions; if all the seffions of the peace, oyer and terminer, or gaol-delivery are taken, and sworn ad incarnationem pro domino regis & consortem eius. 2 Hal. Hisl. P. C. 154.

Those returned to serve on the grand jury must be free & legalles dominus, and ought to be of the same county where the crime was committed; and therefore it is a good exception at Common law to one returned on a grand jury, that he is an alien or villain, or that he is outlawed for a crime, or that he was not returned by the proper officer, or that he was returned at the instance of the prosecutor; but these exceptions must be taken before the indictment is found. 9 Co. 232. 2 Inf. 30. 12 Co. 99. 2 Red. Rep. 82. 2 Hal. Hisl. P. C. 154-5.

It is laid down by my Lord Chief Justice Hale, that at Common law every person returned on the grand jury ought to be a freetholder at least, and that the statute 2 Hen. 4. cap. 3. that requires jurors that pass upon the trial of a man's life to have 41. per annum. Treedel has been the measure by which the freethold of grand jurors has been measured in precepts of summons of juries. Hale Hisl. P. C. 155, but for this 2 Hawk. P. C. 216. Alto This general act of parliament it is provided, That those who serve on the grand jury be such as are duly qualified. See the fifth division, and particularly the acts 11 Hen. 4. cap. 9. and 3 H. 8. cap. 12. In the construction of the said act 11 Hen. 4. c. 9. the following points have been resolved.

That if a person not returned on a grand jury procure his name to be read among those that are returned, whereasupon he is sworn, &c. he may be indicted for a contempt of this statute. 12 Co. 99. 3 Inf. 33. 3 Inf. 34. 3. Sc. 237. 11 P. C. 134.

Any person arraigned on an indictment taken contrary to the statute, may plead such matter in avoidance of the indictment, and also plead over to the felony. 3 Inf. 34. 3 Co. Car. 134. 1 Jones 198.

That he who is outlawed on an indictment without any trial, may clearly stand in avoidance of such outlawry, that the indictment was taken contrary to the statute; but the court need not admit of the plea of the outlawry of an indictor in avoidance of any such indictment, unless he pleads it have the record ready, unless it be an outlawry of the fame court wherein the indictment is depending; in which case it is said, that any one as unius curiae may inform the court of it; 11 H 4. cap. 9. and if the indictment, that no exception against an indictor is allowable, unless the party takes it before trial. 3 Inf. 34. 3 Co. Car. 147.

That if any one of the grand jury who find an indictment, be within any of the exceptions in the statute, he vitiates the whole, though never so many unexceptionable persons joined with him in finding it. 11 H 4. cap. 9. 1 Jones 198. 3 Inf. 33. 3 Inf. 34. 3 Co. Car. 147.

That if a prisoner indicted for felony offer to take any such exceptions, he shall, upon his prayer, have count affigned him for his assisance. 3 Co. Car. 134. 147. 1 Jones 198.

The said act 2 Hen. 8. c. 12. extends not only to grand juries returned, but to all panels of the petty jury, commonly called the petty jury of life and death which may be returned by the Justices according to the act.
The juror is bound to return the panel so formed. 2 Hal. Hjjf. P. C. 156, 265.

It hath been held, that this statute does not take away the force of 11 H. 4, as to any point wherein both may conflict; and therefore if any indictor be outlawed, or returned at the nomination of any person, contrary to 11 H. 4, then the jury returned thereunder, and the verdict is to be returned. 3 Hif. 34; 16 Ed. 2d. 112; 17 Ed. 2d. 182.

The grand jury, as has been already observed, must consist of twelve at least, the petty jury of twelve, and can be no jury more nor less but it is said, that particular jurisdictions may consist of more or less than twelve. Trials per Pais 80. F. N. B. 107. Finch of Law 100, 484. A writ of inquiry of waite by thirtee"n was held good. 4 Car. 4, 414.

But on a writ of ejectment a judgment out of an inferior court was reversed, because being by default, the inquiry of damages was only by two jurors; and though a cuf- tom was alleged to warrant it, yet it was reversed, that there could not be less than twelve, though the writ of inquiry faith only per factam nonum probatum & legatum, and not duodecim as in a venire. 2 Vent. 113. Also it hath been frequently held, that a cuf"tom in an ancient county, is un"lawful, and that upon a writ of quo"rem custom is used in Woles, yet that by force of the statute 34 Hen. 8, which appoints that such trials may be by six only where the cufom hath been so. 6 Car. 259. 1 Sid. 233. 1 Kt. 526.

The first proc for conveying the jury is the venire, and that is far ab"sence, and thereupon in the Common Plead there issue on the habeas corpora or "finings jurates; but in the King's Bench and Exche"quer after the venire, they proceed on the "finings for; for the venire being in the nature of a summons, if the jury do not appear therein in those courts in which the King's Bench and Exchequer are the more immediate concern, they proceed on the rossent proc, viz. the "finings. Trials per Pais 64.

If the jury do not attend on the habeas corpora or "finings, which is to bring them into court, there ran an undecim, decem, or other tales, according as theumber was deficient, to force others to the King's court to try the issue; this was without a new summons or venire, because it was supposed that the first habeas corpora and "finings had given notice to the visibility that they ought to appear; and therefore the supplemental "is a jury were forced in without a particular summons on them. But if the whole jury be challenged off, then new venire is granted, and if none of the jury appear, a "finings jurates shall issue, and no tales. 4 Hal. Hjjf. P. C. 265.

Jurors being duly served with proc's are compulsory to appear; and therefore where more than one appear, not enough to take the inquest, but some of the three come within view, or into the town where the court is held, but refuse to come into court; in these cases the court may order those who appear to inquire of the third party, and it is said, that a jury is not amercable at all at the return of the first venire, except before justices of oyer and terminer. 2 Hal. Hjjf. P. C. 146, and several authorities there cited. Trials per Pais 200.

4. By whom the jury proc's are to be executed, and the jury convened; in what time such proc's are returnable, and what number to be returned.

The sheriff is the proper officer by whom the jury procès is to be executed, unless he be partial, that is, such a one, as from his confuquence or affinity, his being under the immediate power of either of the parties, or from some other cause is suspected to be an indifferent person, as every officer who hath any way to do with the administration of justice ought to be; and in every such case the procès shall be directed to the corones, if they are impartial, or to those of them, who are so, in case some of them lie under the aforementioned prejudices; and in case all the corones are partial or not indifferent, then the venire shall be directed to two elizers named by the court, and against whom, for that reason, no challenge can be taken. 4 Car. 4, 414. 158, a. 12, 2. 16 Ed. 2d. 112. 17 Ed. 2d. 182.

When procès is once awarded to the corones, &c. for the sheriff's actual partiality, the entry is sometimes made in the records, and in such case procès shall not afterwards be awarded to any new sheriff, but where it was awarded to the corones for that the sheriff is tenant, &c. it may be awarded to a new sheriff. 6 Car. 259. 1 Sid. 233. 1 Kt. 526.

Procès against two sheriffs may be returnable immediately into the King's Bench for the trial of an indictment found in the county where it sits; whether for a crime in such county; or for a treason beyond sea; but for the trial of an indictment removed by a certiorari from another county, there must be fifteen days between the issue and return of every procès. 17 Eliz. c. 15. 2 Vent. 113. 4 Car. 4, 414.

Juries in eyre, or of gaol-delivery, may order a jury to be returnable immediately for the trial of a prisoner, also it hath been adjudged, that justitces of oyer and terminer, or of the peace, might for the trial of an issue joined before them, award a venire returnable the same day on which the party is arraigned; but it is said, that there are strong authorities to the contrary, unless the prisoner consent, or the crime amount to felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. 460. and several authorities there cited.

A venire before justitces of oyer and terminer, returnable at a day certain, is erroneous, unless the seions appear to be adjourned to the same day, because otherwise it shall not be intended that their commission continued so long; but such venire may be returnable at the next assizes, and there tried by virtue of 1 Ed. 6, cap. 7. 2 Hal. Hjjf. P. C. 261. 2 Hawk. P. C. 460.

See the stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 32, in the first draft of this title.

Alsio by the words of the writ of venire facias, the sheriff is only to return twelve, yet by ancient course he was obliged to return twenty-four; and this, says my Lord Coke, is for expediency of justice; for if 12 should only be returned, no man should have a full jury appear or to be formed in respect of challenges without tales, which would be a great delay of trials. 5 Car. 36. 16 Ed. 2d. 557. 4 Car. 223.

The precept that issues before a seances of gaol-deliver, oyer and terminer, and of the peace, is to return 24, and commonly the sheriff returns upon that precept 48. 2 Hal. Hjjf. P. C. 263.

But the other the sheriff return is letter number, as where the sheriff return only 23, and a sufficient number appears, and try the issue, this will be aided by the statute of feases as a mitigation. 5 Car. 36. 16 Ed. 2d. 557. 4 Car. 223.

The precept that issues before a seances of gaol-delivery, oyer and terminer, and of the peace, is to return 24, and commonly the sheriff returns upon that precept 48. 2 Hal. Hjjf. P. C. 263.

But the aver proc's except to try the prisoner after he hath pleaded, is only seances facias 12, and 24 are returnable by the sheriff on that panel. 2 Hal. Hjjf. P. C. 265.
At Common law in civil causes, it forms the sheriff might have returned 24. if he pleaded; and therefore by the statute of Wexon, 2. c. 28, it is recited, that whereas in the sheriff were useful to furnish an unreasonable multitude of jurors, to the grievance of the people, it is ordained, that thenceforth in one aizize no more shall be returned than 24. Ga. 570. 1 Rot. 310.

See the statute 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 8. in the first division of this title.

5. In what cases and in what manner special juries are appointed.

Special juries are appointed on motion and application to the court for that purpose, on which, if the court think it reasonable, the sheriff is to attend the secondary or master with his book of freeholders, who, in the presence of the attorneys on both sides, names 48 freeholders, and then each party strikes out twelve, by one at a time, the plaintiff or his attorney beginning first, and the remaining 24 are returned by the secondary, as the jury, to try the cause. 2 Lit. Regist. 127. That the court may order a jury of merchants if they think convenient.

2 Lit. Regist. 132.

If the rule were entered into by consent, it is said to be a contempt in the attorney not to be prefect; but to remedy any inconvenience from hence, a rule was made, that when a master is to strike a jury, he may strike 14 out of the freeholders book, he shall give notice to the attorneys of both sides to be present; and if the one comes, and the other does not, be that appears shall, according to the ancient course, strike out twelve, and the master shall strike out other twelve for him that is absent. 2 Lit. Regist. 127.

And it is said, that if by rule of court the master is ordered to strike a jury, in case it is not expressed in such rule that the master shall strike 48, and each of the parties shall strike out twelve, the master is to strike 24, and the parties have no liberty to strike out any.

It is said, that a special jury may be granted to try a cause at bar without the consent of the parties, but never at nisi prius, unless for good cause shown. 1 Mod. Ca. Law and Equity 248.

Also it is said, to be contrary to the course of the court of B. R. in capital cases, to order the clerk of the crown to strike a special jury, as is done by the secondary in civil causes upon trials at bar. 2 Jan. 222.

See the statute 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 15. and 24 & 29 Geo. 2. in the first division of this title.

A rule was made for a special jury, which was entered into by consent; and afterwards when the parties attended the common court, strike twelve jurors and the court, and at the trial challenged the array for want of hundred, which the judge of assize allowed a good challenge; and this was held such a breach and contempt of the rule, for which an attachment was granted. 1 Mod. Ca. Law and Equity 245. The King v. Burrage.

But where in the trial of a case warrants, the defendant challenged the array of a special jury, that had been struck at his request, for partiality in the sheriff, and an attachment being moved for, and the cafe next above relied on, it was denied; and paid per curiam. That the attachment in the case Spira was granted by reason of the abuse of the rule; but here the only foundation is the jury's being so struck at his request, which is not alone sufficient, for he had a right to challenge the array on the proceed's being directed to a wrong officer; and the rule might have been fulfilled another way, viz. as the sheriff was partial, a proper entry might have been made, and proceed directed to the coroner. The King v. Johnson, Mitch. 8 Geo. 2. in B. R.

6. For what misdemeanors jurors are punishable.

In what cases juries are punishable by attaint, see Attaint. And as to the cases where they are otherwise punishable, we must consider jurors either in a multifacried capacity, as persons bound to attend the court, to do the business for which they are returned till they are discharged, and to act in a judicial capacity, as judges, if any trial be to try. In the former capacity they are liable to be punished in several instances, as, for refusing to appear, withdrawing themselves before they are sworn, or refusing to be sworn; for which every court of record may, of common right, impose such a reasonable fine on any one attached, or for being present, as shall form conven-

ent. 8 Ca. 38. b. 41. c. 2. 242. 2 Hal. Ejff. P. C. 309.

So if after they are sworn they refuse to give any verdict at all. 2 No 49. 3 Bab. 173. Vouge 152.

So if they endeavor to impose upon the court, as when a juryman is to strike a jury; and twenty-four are agreed by their whole number, where in truth some of them have not agreed to it, or where they agree upon two verdicts; and first, to offer one of them to the court, and so stand to it, if the court shall express no dissatisfaction to it; but if the court shall disafle it, then to give the other. 1 Bell. Atl. 110. Gen. Eliz. 1. 1 Hawk. P. C. 146. 2 Hal. Ejff. P. C. 309. S. P. and that in such case they shall be fined every, one a part.

So for misbehaving themselves after their departure from the bar; where they do not all keep together till they have given their verdict or, where any of them carry any thing catable with them in their pockets, or cut or write any thing on the table, it shall be fined and imposed from the court, before they have given their verdict, that they were agreed on it, and were also all the time in the custody of the bailiff appointed to take care of them.

Also where a jury, after they departed from the bar, being late on Saturday night, separated and went every one to his own house without giving a privy verdict, or without consulting upon the evidence, and gave a verdict according to the direction of the court; but for this misdemeanor they were fined each forty shillings, and judged and granted that hereby the statute 15 Geo. 1, that by legal trial both parties may be prejudiced; for the jurors going at large without consulting together, may well forget the evidence; and it is the right of the King's subjects to have their issues determined when the evidence is fresh in the memory of the jurors; and the suffering the jurors to go to their houses after a privy verdict is only by commissary, but by the rules of law ought not to be suffered. Pach. 27 Ger. 2. in B. R.

Also where the jury have been divided or in doubt about the evidence, and have agreed to determine the matter by throwing cros or pile, &c. and to give their verdict as the chance happens; this has been held such a gross and contemptible proceeding as is false, and for which they are punishable, and for which a new trial will be granted on the common rule of jurisdiction male se gignantis. 2 Lev. 149. 205. 3 Jon. 83. 3 Keb. 805.

Jurors are punishable for finding or for receiving instructions from either of the parties concerning the matters in question. 2 Hawk. P. C. 147.

So if a jurymen have a piece of evidence in his pocket, and after the jury sworn and gone together he fetch it to them, this is a misdemeanor fineable in the jury; but it avoids not the verdict, tho' the cafe appear upon examination. Gen. Eliz. 616. 2 Hal. Efiij. P. C. 306. As to the punishment thereof, it is in their judicial capacity, there are several instances where jurors acquitting great and notorious offenders, contrary to clear and manifest evidence, that contrary to the judge's directions, having been punished in the Star-Chamber, and have also, not only in the King's Bench, but also by judices of our own and territorial courts, who are usually judicial and imperial and bound over to their good behavior; but these methods were thought to be contrary to the opinions in the old books, and contrary to the general reason of the law, and being fully confid'd in Bontfif's cafe, it was then settled, and hath been ever since agreed to, that jurors are no way punishable, except by attaint, for giving

Justice, (Jurisdictio.) Signifies him that is deputed by the King to do right by way of judgment: the reason why he is called Juticis and not Judge is, because in ancient times the Latin word for him was Juticis, and not Juticis, because they had their authority by deputation, delegates to the King, and not juris magnifatus, and therefore cannot depose others in their stead, the justices of the forst only execute, who hath generally given him, by 2 Ed. 5. 75. for the Chancellor, Marshal, Admiral, and such like, are not called Juticiarum, but Judges: Of these justices there are diverse sorts in England; of the manner of whole creation with other appurtenances, read Fortescue, 5. 51. The Ch. Jul. had formerly that power alone, which afterwards was distributed to three other magnates, i.e. he had the power of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, of the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and of the Master of the Court of Wards. He usually sat in the King's palace, and they executed that office which was formerly performed pro curioso solatio. See Cramb. in his place all divers things which happened between the barons and other great men of the kingdom, and likewise causes both criminal and civil between other men. And this he did till the ninth year of Henry III. or rather till the 17th of King John, when, at the request of the nobilo... lity, the King 'granted that Commissi onis platica non sequatur curiam suam, sed in loco censentius.

He had the prerogative to be vicerect of the kingdom when any of our Kings went beyond sea, and was usually chosen to this office out of the greatest of the nobility. And his power was first dignified by Richard I, who made two other justices, and conformed to each other in the same jurisdiction, viz. to one the north parts of England, and to the other the south. And thus it continued till the beginning of the reign of Edward I, who reduced them to one court. And that wise King conformed that some former Chief Justices made use of their power in prejudice to his father and grandfather, did rather diminish their authority, both as to the dignity of their persons, and extent of their jurisdictions; for no more were chosen out of the nobility as formerly, but out of the common people, who were of men good morals, and skillful in the law. And now began the study of the Common law, and not before; and the Chief Justice was no longer filled with...

Jus or Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, hath also a Court of Law. And he enjoys his office, and is called Dominus Justiciarum et Commissariorum, vel Dominus Justiciarum de Banco, who, with his assidants did originally, and do yet, bear and determine all causes at the Common law, that is, civil causes, as well personal as real, between common persons; wherefore it was called The Courts of Common Pleas, in distinction from the Courts of King's Bench, or the Crown courts, which are special, and appertaining to him only. This court was appointed to be in a settled place, and not as other courts, to follow or attend the King's court or palace, as appears by the flat 9 Hen. 3. c. 11. Of its jurisdiction, see 3 Jef. fol. 93. The Justice's oath, see 18 Ed. 3. sect. 4. Justice of the King's Bench, (Justiciarum De aspiratione.) Is also a Lord by his office, and bears and determines all offences within the forest, committed against vert or venison: Of these there are two, whereof one hath jurisdiction over all forrest in this side Trent, the other of all beyond it. The chief point of their jurisdiction consisteth upon the articles of the King's charter, called Charta de forstis, made Anno 9 Hen. 3. concerning which see Com. Brit. p. 241. See Porphyr. The court whereof this his justice is president, is called The justi ce-feet of the forest, held once every three years, as you are made in Warwick's Forst Law, c. 24. He is also called Justice in eyre of the forest; and is the only justice that may appoint a deputy, by the statute of 33 Hen. 8. c. 35.

Justices of affises. (Justiciarum ad capiendas affisas.) Are such as were sent by special commission to be sent (35 occasion was offered) into this or that county, to take affises for the ease of the subjects; for these actions pass always by jury, so many men would not, without great damage and charges, be brought up to London, and therefore justices for this purpose were by commission particularly authorized, were sent down to them. For it seems, that the justices of the Common Pleas had no power to take affises till the flat of 8 R. 2. cap. 2. for as that they were enabled to it, and to deliver gaols. And the justice of the King's Bench have by that statute such power affirmed unto them as at the last one hundred years before. These commissions Ad capiendas affisas have of late years been settled and executed only in Lent, and the long vacation, when the justices, and other learned lawyers, may be at leisure to attend those controversies whenupon it also falls out, that the matters that were told of the old French word errie, as (a grand ere,

i magnis iterinibus,) proverbially spoken. These in an-tient time, were sent with commission into divers countries to hear such causes especially, as were termed pleas of the crown. And this was done for the sake of the people, who must else have been hurried to the King's bench, if the cause were too high for the county-court:

They differed from the justices of eyre and terminer, because they (as we said before) were sent upon one or few special causes, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre (as Mr. Gower justly observes) were sent through the countries of the kingdom, and counties of the land, with more indefinite and general commission, as appeareth by Bracton, lib. 3. c. 11, 12, 13, and Briton.

cap. 2. And again, because the justices of eyre and terminer were sent uncertainly upon any upright, or other occasion in the country; but these in eyre (as Mr. Gower discourses) were sent but few years once, with which

7. Of their fees; and how they are favoured and protected by the law in the execution of their office.

1. Of the ancient officers called Justiciaries of the peace.

It seems to be clearly agreed, that before the statute 1 Ed. 3, cap. 16, there were no justices of the peace, and that they were first instituted by that statute; yet by the Common law there were certain conservators of the peace, which were of two forts. 1. Those who in respect of their offices had power to keep the peace, but were not simply called by the name of Justiciaries of the peace, but by the name of such offices. 2. Those who were constituted for this purpose only, and were simply called by the name of Conservators or Wardens of the peace. Lamb, book 1, cap. 3. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 44. 2 Hawk. 32.

As to the 1st fort, the King is undoubtedly the principal from whom all authority of this kind is originally derived; but it is said, that he cannot take a recognizance for the peace, because it is a rule, that no recognizance can be taken by any who is not a justice either of record or by commiffion also the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, the Lord High Steward of England, the Lord Marshal, the Lord High Constable, and every Justice of the King's Bench, and the Master of the Rolls, and, as some say, the Lord Treasurer, have a general authority to keep the peace throughout the realm, and to award process, and to take recognizance for it; but a peer, as such, seems to have no power in this respect, than a mere private person. Dalb. cap. 1. Cramp. 6. Br. Recognizance 14.

All courts of record, as such, have power to keep the peace within their own precincts; and the justices of gaol-delivery may take recognizance of the peace from a person committed, for not finding such recogniz. 10 Hen. 6. 7. 8. Lamb, book 1, cap. 3.

All by every sheriff is a principal conservator of the peace within his county, and may in offices award a process, and take recogniz for it; and, as some say, the recogniz so taken is to be looked on as a recognizance or matter of record, and not as a common obligation, because it is taken by virtue of the King's commissio. 12 H. 7. 17. 8. Bro. Peace 13. Cres. Car. 26. F. N. B. 81.

Alfo a coroner is another principal conservator of the peace, and may bind any one to the peace who shall make an affidavit in his presence; but he is said to have no authority to grant process for the peace; and it seems, that the security taken by him for the peace is not to be looked upon as matter of record, but as matter in pais only, except where it is taken by him as judge in his own county, or in his presence, for the cause.

Also every high and petit confable are by the Common law conservators of the peace within their several limits, and may take order for the keeping of the same. See Constable.

The conservators of the peace, simply so called, were either ordinary or extraordinary.

The ordinary were either by tenure, viz. such as held their lands by this service, or by election, viz. such as were elected of the King's pleasure, in pursuance of the King's writ for this purpose, or by prescription, viz. such as claimed such a power by an memorial usage in themselves and their ancestors or predecessors, or whose office they had; but the power of none of these conservators of the peace seems to have been perpetual. Of such confables this day, unless it were enlarged by some special grant or prescription. Bro. Peace 18. Prer. Script. 79. 22 Ed. 4. 35. b. Lamb, book 1. chap. 3. Ce. Lit. 114. The extraordinary conservators of the peace were persons specially commissioned in times of imminent danger, either from rebels or foreign invaders, to take care of and defend such a particular district committed to their charge, and to preserve the peace within the limits of it; and they had power to command the sheriff, with his whole posse, to assist them. Lamb, book 1. chap. 3. 2 Hawk. 34.

After such time as Queen Isabell (contending with her husband King Edward the Second) was returned over the seas into England, accompanied with her son, Prince Edward (called afterward the third of that name) and with Sir Roger Mortimer, and such others of the English nobility, as had for the indignation of the King fled out of the seas unto her. She soon after got into his hands the perdon of the old King, partly by the intelligence of the Henarders, that she brought with her, and partly by the aid of such other persons as she found ready here; and she immediately caufed him (by forced pi- tience) to surrender his crown to the young Prince Arthur; then also, for so much as it was said he was feared, that some attempt would be made to reduce the imprisoned King, order was taken, that he should be conveyed secretly, and by night watches, from house to house, and from caffle to caffle, to the end that his friends should be ignorant what was become of him, and then until, it was ordained by parliament, and the life-time of that deposed King, and in the very first entry of his son's reign, (1 Ed. 3. cap. 15.) that every fearful of the realm, good men and lawful (who were not maintainers of evil, nor barrators in the country) should be affigned to keep the peace; which was as much as to say, that in every thire the King himself would keep the peace, or, in other words, that every common man, and should be both willing and wise to set peace; and be also enabled with meet authority to repulse or intentions of uproar and force, even in the first five thereof, and before that it should grow up to any offer or danger. So that, for this cause, (as he thinks) the election of the simple conservators (or wardens) of the peace was first taken from the people, and translated to the affignment of the King. Lamb, Eiren, 18. 19. 24. Hild. Ch. J. said, he knew not whether at first justices of peace were more than high confables; but the fitu- tution that made them complete judges is that of 34 Ed. 3. 1388, in the Life of Haward v. Pan.

It seems, that the power of such conservators of the peace, whether by tenure, election, or prescription, was no greater than that of confable at this day, unless it were enlarged by some special grant or prescription. 2 Hawk. Pl. G. 34. cap. 8. sect. 11.

2. Of the first institutio of justices of the peace, and the general statutes which give them jurisdiction.

Justices of peace were first instituted by the statute 1 Ed. 3. cap. 16. which provides in the following words: "That for the better keeping and maintenance of the peace, the King willith, that in every county good men and lawful, which be no maintainers of evil, or barrator in the country, shall be appoyed to keep the peace."
And by the 4 Ed. 3. cap. 2. it is further enacted, "That there shall be appointed good and lawful men in every county to keep the peace, and at the time and place thereof, any of the said keepers of the peace shall be indicted or taken by the said keepers of the peace, not be let to mainpaine by the sherifff, nor by none other miniflers, if they be not mainpaine by the law; and he judges affigned to deliver the goals shall have power to deliver the fame goods of those that shall be indicted of the said keepers of the peace, and the said keepers of the peace shall fend their inditements before the judges, &c.

And it is further enacted by 18 Ed. 3. cap. 2. "That three or three of the best reputations in the counties shall be affigned keepers of the peace by the King's commiffion, and at what time need be, the fame, with other with whom the King's commiffion fhall be afford to the King's commiffion to hear and determine felonies and refipfes done against the peace in the counties, and to inflict punishment reasonably according to the law and reafon and the manner of the deed.

And it is further enacted by 34 Ed. 3. cap. 1. "That in every county of England shall be affigned for the keeping of the peace, one lord, with him three or four of the most worthy in the county, with some learned in the law; and they shall have power to restrain the offenders, rioters and all other barrators, and to purfue, refet, take, and affhifie them according to their trifpafs done in the law, and judifie, according to the law and customs of the realm, and according to that to which they shall fenn beft to o, by their direction and good advifement; and also to inform them, and to inquire of all thofe that have been fitters and robbers in the parts beyong the fex, and to low others again, and go wandering, and will not laff as they were wont in times past; and to take and refet all thofe that they may find inditement by or accufation, and to put them in prifon, and to take of all them, that be not of good fame, where they shall be bound, fufficient surety and mainpinez of their good behavior towards the King and his people, and to order and command all thofe people to be by each rioters or rebels troubled or endamaged, nor the eafe bleffed, nor merchants nor other paffing by the highway of the realm troubled nor put in the peril, which may happen of fuch offenders; and also to hear and determine at the King's fuit all manner of felonies and trifpafs done in the same county, and according to the laws and customs aforfeafed.

And it is enacted by 17 Rich. 2. cap. 10. "That in very commiffion of the peace th'o the realm, where end shall be, two men of law of the fame county where fuch commiffion fhall be made, fhall be affigned to the King's commiffion, and there fhall be a correcion of thiefs and felons a foon as they fhall think it expedient.

And it is further enacted by 2 Hen. 5. flat. 1. cap. 4. "That the judges of peace in every firme named of the wurum, (except Lords, and the Judges of either Bench, and the Chief Baron, and Serjeants at law, and the King's attorney, for the time that they shall be occupied in the King's Service) fhall be renfet in the fame firme, and fhall make their felions four times in the year, viz. in the firft week after Michaelmas, Epiphany, Easter, and the translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, and ofterwise if need be, and that the fame judges hold their felions thofe times, or fome time after the fame times every year.

There feem to be the most general statutes relating to the authority of judges of peace, besides which there are a very large number of subsequent statutes which give them particular powers, sometimes to one judge, fometimes to two, fometimes to their felions, fometimes out of the county, and otherwise; and no officer otherwife to take notice than by observing, that where by statute a special authority is given to judges of peace, it must be etfectually purfued. Selt. 475.

3. Who are qualified for the office.

By the statute 2 Hen. 5. flat. 2. cap. 1. it is enacted, "That the judges of peace fhall be made in the counties of England of most fufficient perfon dwelling in the fame counties, by the advice of the Chancellor and of the King's council, without taking other perfon dwelling in foreign countries, fometimes to one, fometimes to two, fometimes to fome of the said keepers of the peace, the Lords and the Judges of affifes to be named by the King and his council, and except all the King's chief ftyards of the lands and feignories of the duchy of Lancaster in the North parts and in the South for the time being.

By the 1 M. fett. 2. cap. 8. it is enacted, "That no perfon having or affigning the office of a Sheriff of any county shall use or exercife the office of a judge of peace, by force of any commiffion, or otherwife, in any county where he fhall be Sheriff, during the time only that he fhall exercife the faid office or Sherifffwiek, and that all acts done by fuch Sherifff by authority of any commiffion of the said Sherifff, be, during the time above mentioned, in nullity.

By the flat. 18 H. 6. cap. 11. it is enacted, "That no juftice of the peace within the realm of England in any county shall be affigned or defignt, if he have not lands or tenements to the value of 20l. per annum, except in cities, towns corporate, &c.

And now by the 5 Geo. 2. cap. 18. fett. 1. it is enacted, "That no perfon fhall be capable of being a juftice of the peace, or to act as a juftice of the peace for any county within that part of Great Britain called England, or the principality of Wales, who fhall not have an estate of freehold or copyhold to and for his own life or the terms of his fuccessors; or an estate either in law or equity, or an estate for years determinable upon one or more life or lives, or for a certain term originally created for twenty-one years, or more, in lands, tenements or hereditaments lying in that part of Great Britain called England, or the principality of Wales, of the clear yearly value of 100l. over and above what will satisfy and discharge all impanacles that may affect the fame.

Selt. 2. And it is further enacted, that no attorney, folicitor, or proctor in any court whatsoever, fhall be capable to continue or be a juftice of the peace within the county fubfcribed to Great Britain, as the part of the principality of Wales, or the principality of Wales, during fuch time as he fhall continue in the busines and practice of attorney, folicitor, or proctor.

Selt. 3. And it is further enacted, that if any perfon, who fhall not be qualified according to the directions of this act, fhall accept or take upon himself the office of a juftice of the peace, or fhall do any act as fuch, the perfon so offending fhall for every fhuch offence forfeit and pay the sum of 100l. one moieties whereof fhall be to the King's Majefly, his heirs and fucceffors, and the other moiety to fuch perfon or perfon in whom as will fute for the fame by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information in any of his Majefly's courts, and at the costs of the party afofaied; and no effafn, protection, wager of law, nor more than one impalement fhall be allowed.

Selt. 4. Provided, that this act fhall not extend to any city or town being a county of itself, or to any other city, town, cinque port, or liberty having juftices of the peace within their defpective limits and precredits by charter, commiffion, or otherwife; but that in every fuch city, town, liberty and place, fuch perfon may be capable to be juftices of the peace, and in fuch manner only as they might have been if this act had never been made.

Selt. 5. Provided also, that nothing in this act con- tained fhall extend to incapacitate any peer or lord of parliament, or the eldest fon or heir apparent of any peer or lord of parliament, or of any perfon qualified to feeve as knight of a thire by an act intituled, An act to secure the freedom of parlaments, by the further qualifying member can be prevented by the incapacity or exclude the commiffioners and principal officers of the navy, or to the two under-secretaries in each of the offices of prin-ciplan secretary of state from being justices of the peace, in and for such maritime counties and places where they usually or are been judges of the peace.

Sect. 7. Provided also, that this act shall not extend to any of the heads of colleges or halls in either of the two universities of Oxford and Cambridge, but that they may be made justices of the peace of and in the several counties of Oxford, Berks and Cambridge, and the cities and towns within their limits, and execute the office thereof as fully and freely in all respects, as heretofore they have lawfully used to execute the same, as if this act had never been made.

Stat. 18 Geo. 2. cap. 2. sect. 1. No perfon shall be capable of being a justice of peace for any county, riding or division in England or Wales, who shall not have either, in law or equity, a freehold, copyhold or customary estate for life, or some greater estate, or an estate for years, determinable upon one or more lives, or for a term originally created for twenty-one years or more in lands, tenements or hereditaments lying in England or Wales, of the yearly value of 100 l. over and above what will satisfy all incumbrances, and over and above all rents and charges payable out of the same; or who shall not be seised of or intituled unto, in law and equity to his own use, the immediate reversion or remainder in lands, &c. as aforesaid, which are leased for one, two or three lives, or years determinable upon one, two or three lives, upon rented rents, and which are of the yearly value of 500 l. and who shall not before he takes upon himself to act as a justice of peace, at some general or quarter sessions for the county, &c. for which he intends to act, first take and subscribe the oath following, viz.

I A. B. do swear, that I truly and bona fide have such an estate, in law or equity, as is for my own use and benefit, consisting of (specifying the nature of such estate) as shall qualify me to act as a justice of the peace for the county, riding or division, according to the true intent and meaning of an act of parliament, made in the 15th year of the reign of his Majesty King George the Second, intituled, An act to amend and render more effectual an act passed in the 5th year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, An act for the further qualification of justices of the peace; and that the same (except where it conficts of an office, benefit, or ecclesiastical preferment, which is shall be sufficient to afterwards by the said perfon) is being or is, or being out of life, tenements or hereditaments, being within the parish, township, or precept of or in the several parishes, townships or precepts of in the county of in the several counties of Which oath so taken and subscribed shall be kept by the clerk of the peace among the records of the sessions.

Sect. 2. Every such clerk of the peace shall, upon demand, deliver an attested copy of the said oath to any person paying for the same 2 s. which being proved to be a true copy of such oath, shall be admitted to be given in evidence upon any inquiry, in any action or information brought upon this act.

Sect. 3. Any perfon who shall act as a justice of the peace for any county, &c. in England or Wales, without having taken and subscribed the said oath, or without being qualified according to the meaning of this act, shall not be capable either of being the use of the poor of the parish in which he usually resides, and the other moiety to the use of such person who shall act for the same, to be recovered, with costs, by action of debt, &c. in any court of record at Westminster, in which no effion, &c. shall be allowed; and in every such action or information, the proof of his qualification shall be such perfon againft whom the same is brought.

Sect. 4. If the defendant in any such action or information intend to inflict upon any lands, &c. not contained in such oath, as his qualification to act as a justice of peace at the time of the supposed offence, he shall act at or before the time of his pleading, deliver to the plaintiff or informer, or his attorney, a notice in writing specifying such lands, &c. (other than those contained in the said oath or the charter or place, and the county wherein the same are (offices and benefits excepted, which shall be sufficient to avert or injure their usual names); and if the plaintiff or informer shall thereupon not proceed any further, he may, with the leave of the court, discontinu such action or information on payment of such costs as the court shall order.

Sect. 5. Upon the trial of the issue in any action or information brought as aforesaid, no lands, &c. not contained in such oath or notice, or one of them, shall be allowed to be inflicted upon by the defendant, in part of his qualification.

In case the plaintiff or informer in such an action or information discontinue the cause otherwise than as aforesaid, or be non-suited, &c. the perfon against whom such action is brought shall recover treble costs.

Sect. 9. Only one penalty of 100 l. shall be recovered from the same person by virtue of this act, or of 5 Geo. 2. cap. 18. for the same or any other offence committed by the said person, before the bringing of the action or information upon which one penalty of 100 l. is recovered, and due notice given to the defendant of the commencement of such action or information.

Sect. 10. Where an action or information is brought, and due notice given thereof, no proceedings shall be had upon any subsequent action or information against the same peron, for any offence committed before the bringing of the action or information upon which one penalty of 100 l. is recovered, and due notice given to the defendant of the commencement of such action or information.

Sect. 11. Every action, bill, plaint or information, given by this or the said 5 Geo. 2. cap. 18. shall be commenced within fix calendar months after the suit upon which the same is granted has been committed.

Sect. 12. This act shall not extend to any city or town being a county of itself, or to any other city, town, county or liberty, having justices of the peace within their respective limits by charter, commission or otherwise; but in every such city such persons may be capable to be justices of the peace, and in such manner only as they might have been if this act had not been made.
being judges of the peace for such counties or places where they usually have been judges of the peace.

Sec. 15. This act shall not extend to any of the heads of colleges or halls in either of the two universities of Oxford and Cambridge, or to the vice-chancellor of either of the said universities, or to the mayor of the city of Oxford, or of the town of Cambridge.

4. Of the manner of appointing them; and of their commisions.

Judges of the peace can only be appointed by the Kings commission, and such commission must be in his name; but it is not requisite that there should be a special suit or application to, or warrant from the King for the granting thereof, which is only requisite for such as are of a particular nature; as constituting the mayor of such a town, and his successors, perpetual judges of the pieces, wapentakes, and other towns, with jurisdiction, neither revokable by the King, nor determinable by his death, as the common commission of the peace is, which is made of course by the Lord Chancellor according to his discretion. Lamb. b. 1. cap. 5. Brook Commission, cap. 5. Dall. cap. 3. 4 Lev. 219.

The commission is to be given for the peace, as it is this day, was, according to Hawkin's, settled by the judges about the 23 Edw. and is in substance as followeth.
Hawk. P. C. 35. 4 1st. 471. Lamb. b. 1. cap. 9.

Beginning with a declaration from the King to the feveral persons named in it, it afterwards assigns them and wards bed, and the several justices of peace by any commission granted by his Majesty or his successors, and who shall take the oaths of office of a justice of peace before the clerk of the peace of the respective county, &c., for which such justice shall act, or the deputy of such clerk of the peace, and who shall have taken and subscribed at some general election of the peace, the oath required by 16 Geo. 4. 20. may act as a justice for such county, &c., without being obliged to take and subscribe again the said oath, without incurring any penalty.

Sec. 2. After the paffing of this act, no person who hath taken or shall take the oaths usually taken by a justice of peace under a dedimus potestatem issued from the clerk of the Crown, shall be obliged to sue out any other dedimus potestatem from the said clerk of the Crown to authorize any perfon to administer again to such justice, on any new commission of the peace being issued under the Great seal of Great Britain, the oaths usually annexed to such dedimus, and taken by a justice of peace;
but the clerk of the peace, or his deputy, of every county, &c. in England and Wales, for which any such place hath acted and qualified, or hereafter before the issuing any such new commission shall act and qualify himself, shall, on every new commission of the peace being issued, prepare a parchment roll, with the oaths annexed to, and usually taken under the dedimus potestatem by justices of the peace, ingrossed on parchment roll, and shall administer without fee, the oaths in such roll specified to every such justice within the respective counties, &c., for which he shall act, who shall desire to take such oaths; and every such justice after the taking the oaths shall subscribe his name and the said parchment roll; and the said roll shall be kept by the respective clerks of the peace among the records of the several counties.

5. Of their jurisdiction in relation to treason, felony, inferior offences, and indictments not taken before themselves.

It seems to be clearly agreed, that justices of the peace have not jurisdiction to hear and determine treason, pre-munire, or misprision of treason. Dall. cap. 90. 1 Hal.
2 Hawk. P. C. 30.

But as the offenses are against the peace of the King and of the realm, any justice of peace may, either from his own knowledge, or the complaint of others, cause any person to be apprehended for any such offense, and such justice may take the examination of the person so apprehended, and the information of all those who can give
give material evidence against him, and put the name in writing, and also bind over such as are able to give security, due reverence to the King's Bench or goal-delivery, and certify his proceedings to the same court to which he shall bind over such informers: and this doctrine seems to be established by constant practice, especially since the statute 1 & 2 Ph. & Mar. cap. 13, and 2 & 3 P. & Mar. cap. 10, which, directing justices of the peace to proceed in this manner against persons brought before them for felony, seem to give them a discretionary power of proceeding in like manner against persons accused of the above-mentioned offences. See the authorities supra.

And by some acts of parliament justices of peace may take cognizance of other matters. But those preferments they must certify into the King's Bench or goal-delivery, as the case shall require; as upon the statute 5 Eliz. cap. 1, for maintaining the authority of the see of Rome; 13 Eliz. cap. 2, for bringing in bulls for absolution, Agnus Dei, &c. 23 Eliz. cap. 1, for withdrawing and reconciling, or being withdrawn from the King's allegiance. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 44, 1 Lev. 230.

So by the statute of 3 H. 5, cap. 7, as to trefasons for clipping, £c., power was given to the justices of peace to inquire and make process thereupon, and anciently that clausue was put into their commiision, but now omitted; for by the statute 2 & 3 Hal. cap. 6, as to libel, 7 & 8 Hal 5, cap. 6, is repealed, and consequently the sect 3 H. 5, cap. 7, that gave power to justices of peace to inquire touching it. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 45.

It seems to have been a matter of some doubt, whether justices of peace, as such, have power to hear and determine felonies, &c., and this doubt seems to have staled from the general words of 32 Ed. 3, cap. 1, which is express, that persons assigned to keep the peace shall have power, among other things, to hear and determine felonies, &c., Cro. Jac. 32, Trin. 46. 2 Roll. Rep. 151, Dyer 69, pl. 29., 2 Hauk. P. C. 38.

But it seems to be now set, that the justices of peace have no power to hear and determine felonies, &c., unless they be authorised so to do by the express words of their commission; and that their jurisdictions to hear and determine murder, manslaughter, and other felonies and trefpass, is by force of the second effaginamur in their commission, which gives them or two of them, whereof one is in the quorum, power to hear and determine felonies, &c., Crompt. 120, 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 42, 2 Hauk. P. C. 38.

And hence it hath been lately adjudged, that the caption of an indictment of trefpass before justices of the peace, without adding necum ad diversas felonias, &c., affinars, is naught. Dominus Roi v. Carter, Trin. 7 Geo. 1, 1 in B. R.

But the' justices of peace by force of their commission have authority to hear and determine murder and manslaughter, yet they seldom exercise a jurisdiction herein, or in any other offences in which clergy is taken away; and this, says my Lord Hale, is for two reasons. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 46.

1. By reason of the mention and clause in their commission, viz. in cases of difficulty to expect the presence of the justices of assize.

2. By reason of the direction of the statute of 1 & 2 Ph. & Ma. cap. 13, which directs justices of the peace in case of manslaughter, and other felonies, to take the examination of the prisoner, and the information of the facts, and put the same in writing, and then to baill the prisoner, if there be cause, and to certify the same, with the bail, at the next goal-delivery; and therefore in cases of great moment they bind over the procurators, and bail the party, if bailable, to the next goal-delivery; but in smaller matters, as petty larceny, and in some cases, they bind over to the felonies, but this is but in point of discretion and convenience, not because they have not jurisdiction of the crime.

As to inferior offences, the jurisdiction herein given to justices of peace by particular statutes is so various, and extend to such a multiplicity of cases, that it were endless to endeavour to enumerate them; also they have, as justices of the peace, a very ample jurisdiction in all matters concerning the peace. 6 Mod. 128.

And therefore it hath been held, that not only abbots and batteries, but libels, barratry, and common nightwalking, and haunting bowdy-houses, and such like offences, which have a direct tendency to cause breaches of the peace, are cognizable by justices of the peace, as they are within the purger and natural meaning of the word, 1 Lev. 129, 1 Sid. 273, Letch 173. Poph. 208. Cro. Jac. 32. Trin. 46.

But neither piracy nor forgery, as Common law, nor any other such like offences, which do not directly tend to cause a personal wrong or open violence, are cognizable by them, unless it be by the express words of the commission, such as, &c. Salk. 467, Crompt. 120. Lamb. b. 1, cap. 12.

Justices of the peace may proceed upon indictments taken before their predecessors, which depends upon the statute 11 Haur. 6, cap. 6, and 1 Ed. 6, cap. 7, par. 6, the former of which, reciting the inconveniences that pleas and processes upon indictments before justices of the peace had often been discontinued by making of new commissions of the peace, to the great los of the King, &c., ordains that such pleas, suits, and procresses before justices of the peace, shall not be discontinued by new commissions of the peace, but stand in force, and that the new justices, after they have the record of the same pleas and procresses before them, may continue, and finally hear and determine the same; and this is confirmed by the 1 Ed. 6, cap. 7. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 46, 2 Hauk. P. C. 37.

But justices of peace have no power to proceed on indictments taken before a coroner, or before justices of oyer or goad-delivery, or to deliver persons suspected by proclamation. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 46.

But if an indictment be taken before the sherif in his turn, by the statute of 1 Ed. 4, cap. 2, those indictments are to be delivered to the justices of peace at their next sessions, and they may proceed on those preferments. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 46.

6. Of the jurisdiction of one, or more justices, and how far a justice of a county or liberty may act out of them respectively.

Every single justice has regularly a jurisdiction thro' the whole county, which he alone may exercise for the preservation of the peace; and this jurisdiction he has by virtue of his commission, which constitutes him a justice of peace; but the power of hearing and determining offences is by the commission given to two or more, quarum unum, &c., and therefore if two justices, quarum unum be empowered to do a thing, it must appear that one was of the quarum. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 44, 5 Mod. 352, Comb. 200.

So if a thing be required to be done by two justices, they must both be present at the execution of it; as if two justices adjudge a perim the father of a bastard child, and a sentence is paid by one of them, this is naught; for the examination being a judicial act ought to be by both, and it is not sufficient that one of them examined, and made a report to the other; but if they are both present, and one alone examines, or asks questions, it is well enough: So where two justices are enabled to bail a perim, they ought both to be present to do it, and not one of them first to sign the recognizance, and then send it to another. 6 Mod. 180.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 2, cap. 27. No act, order, adjudication, warrant, indenure of apprenticehip or other instrument, made or to be made by two or more justices of peace, which do not express that one or more of them was of the quarum, shall be set aside for that defect only.

A single justice cannot bail a person that is committed by order of the feions; for he that bails must have as high a power as he who commits. 1 Keb. 857, 857 vid. tit. Bail.
But whatsoever power is given to a justice, or to two justices of the peace, by any statute, is given to the justices of the peace, which confifts of a collection of justices. 2 Ed. 7, 1 Ed. 18. It is thought that where a statute says the next justice, it must be the next; but where it says the justices of peace in or near the place, there any justice of peace in the county will serve. 1 Ed. 559.

Justices of the peace are to execute their authority as justices of the peace within the county wherein they are, and cannot lawfully make a special act out of any county, 2 Hal. His. P. C. 50. 2 Hawk. P. C. 37.

Therefore, if a justice of peace live or be out of the county wherein he is justice, he cannot by his warrant arrest a prisoner out of the county whereof he is justice, except before he was in that county. 13 Ed. 3, 29. P. 37, a. Platt's case.

And as justices of the peace have no coercive power out of their county, they cannot make an order of bastardy, or such like orders, out of their county. 2 Hawk. P. C. 37. 37. 32. 580.

A justice of peace may do a ministerial act out of his county, such as examine a party robber, whether he know theélons, according to the statute or not. Crim. Law. 211. 7 Tan. 237.

Alfo by the better opinion, recognizances and informations voluntarily taken before them in any place are good; for, though, says my Lord Chief Justice, they may not be lawfully used by them in any other county, yet it is lawful to examine the witnesses, and make an oath to the informations, or information, or evidence, or commit them, yet that is but for necessity of preferring the peace, for he hath really no jurisdiction in the case. 2 Hal. His. P. C. 51.

If A. commits a felony in the county of B. where he lives, and goes into the county of C. and is there taken, justice of the peace of the county of C. may take his information and bring him into the county of C. and he is then committed in the county of C. but my Lord Hale says, that upon his arraignment in the county of B. he would not allow these examinations to be given in evidence, because though he may commit and examine, and give an oath to the informers, yea and upon oath of evidence, or commit them, yet that is but for necessity of preferring the peace, for he hath really no jurisdiction in the case. 2 Hal. His. P. C. 51.

If A. commit a felony in the county of B. and upon a warrant fided against him by a justice of peace in the county of B. he is purfued, and flies into the county of C. and there before him in evidence, or commit him, yet hat is but for necessity of preferring the peace, for he hath really no jurisdiction in the case. 2 Hal. His. P. C. 51.

But if A. were taken by the warrant in the county of B. and break away into the county of C. and be there upon fresh fait by them that first took him, he may be either brought to a justice of the county of C. where he was last taken, or before the justice of the county of B. by whose warrant he was first taken; for in capitation of law he was always in custody. 1 Hal. His. P. C. 581.

But if he escape before arraif into another county, if it be a warrant barely for a misdemeanour, it seems the officer cannot purfue him into another county, because out of the jurisdiction of the justice that granted the warrant; but in case of felony, affray or dangerous wounding, the officer may purfue him, and rafe him, or take his goods on any county; but if he take him in a foreign county, he is to bring him to the gaol or justice of that county where he is taken, for he doth not take him purely by the warrant of the justice, but by the authority which the law gives him, and the justice's warrant is a sufficient cause of confufion and pariulf. 2 Hal. His. P. C. 115. 1 Hal. His. P. C. 115.

If A. be a justice of peace in two adjacent counties, though by severall commiiffions, as the recorder of London, he, whilst he lives in one county, may fend his warrant to apprehend malefactors in another, and fend them to Nenfet, he is the commiffion both for London and Middelfet, 2 Hal. His. P. C. 581.

The justices of the peace have jurisdiction of felonies arising within the verge. 4 Ca. 48. a. Wigg's cafe.

2 Hal. His. P. C. 52. 2 Hawk. P. C. 37. 2. 47. 54.

Justices of the peace for a county have, by their comniiffions, an authority to commit within the county, as without, and may execute their office within a town with a special commiffion of the peace for its own limits, unless such commiffion have a clause that no other justices, except those named in it, shall any way concern themselves in the keeping of the peace within the liberties of such town. 2 Hawk. P. C. 37. 2 Hal. His. P. C. 49.

Alfo it seems, that though such commiffion have a special exclufive caufe, of which the justices have notice, yet their acts within a liberty are not void, though perhaps they may be punished for proceeding in defance of such refiffive caufe, as for a contempt of the King's prohibition. 2 Hal. His. P. C. 37.

By the 9 Geo. 1. cap. 7, fett. 3, it is enacted, "That if any justice of peace shall dwell in any city, or other precinct that is a county of itself, situate within the county in which he shall be appointed justice of peace, although not within the jurisdiction, he may be and may be lawful for any such justice of peace to grant warrants, to take examination, and make orders for any, matters which any one or more justice or justices of the peace may act in, at his own dwelling house, although such dwelling house be out of the county where he is authorized to act as a justice of peace; and in some city, or other precinct adjoining, that is a county of itself; and that all such warrants, orders and other acts or acts of any such justice of peace, and the act or acts of any confettabie, tythingman, headborough, overseer of the poor, surveyor of the highways, or other officer, in obedience to any such warrant or order, shall be valid, good and effectual in the law, although it happen to be out of the limits of the proper precinct or authority; provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall extend to give power to the justices of the peace for the counties at large, to hold their general quarter-sessions of the peace in cities or towns, which are counties of themselves; nor to impower justices of the peace, sheriffs, bailiffs, confettables, headboroughs, tythingmen, borholfers or any other peace officers of the counties at large, to act or intermeddle in any matters or things arising within cities or towns, which are counties of themselves, but that all such acts and doings shall be of the same force and effect in law, and none other, as if this act had never been made."

Stat. 15 Geo. 2. cap. 24. Where any person liable to be committed to the house of correction, shall be apprehended within any liberty, city or town corporate, whole inhabitants or other persons, he is to be made prisoner, for the purpose of the house of correction of the county, riding or division, in which such liberty, &c. is situate; it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace of such liberty, &c. to commit such person to the house of correction of that county, &c. in which such liberty, &c. is situate; which person so committed shall be dealt with, and be subject to the same correction, as if committed by any justice of the peace of the same county, &c.

Stat. 16 Geo. 2. cap. 18. sect. 1. It shall be lawful for every justice of the peace within his jurisdiction to execute every thing appertaining to his office, so far as the same relates to the laws concerning the poor, vagrants, bills of mortality, and all such taxes or rates, notwithstanding such justice is rated to, or chargeable with the taxes within such parish or place affected by such act of such justice.

Sec. 2. No act already done by any such justice shall be void, because the same hath been done by any such justice so rated or chargeable.

Sect. 3. This act shall not authorize any justice for any county or riding at large to act in the determination of any appeal to the quarter-justices for any such county or riding, from any order or thing relating to the parish or place where such justice is so charged.

Sect. 24. Gen. 2. cap. 55. sect. 1. In case any person, against whom a warrant is issued by any justice of the peace of any county or place within the kingdom, escapes, goes out of the county, or any other county, place, out of the jurisdiction of the justice granting such warrant, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county, &c., where such person escapes, and such justice is hereby required, upon proof upon oath of the hand-writing of the justice granting such warrant, to indorse his name on the warrant, and shall be a full discharged authority to the person bringing such warrant, and to all other persons to whom such warrant was originally directed, to execute such warrant in such other county, &c., out of the jurisdiction of the justice granting such warrant, and to apprehend and carry such offender before the justice who indorsed such warrant, or some other justice of such other county, &c., where such warrant was indorsed. In case the offence, for which such offender is so apprehended in such other county, &c., be bailable in law, and such offender be ready to give bail for his appearance at the next assizes or general gaol-delivery, or next general quarter-justices of the peace for the county, &c., when the same was committed, such justice &c., &c., before whom such offender is brought, shall take bail of such offender for his appearance at the next assizes, or general gaol-delivery, or at the next general quarter-justices of the peace for the county, &c., where such offence was committed, as the justices of the peace of the proper county, &c., might have done; and the justice so taking bail shall deliver the recognizance, together with the examination or confession of such offender, and all proceedings relating thereto, to the confilable, or person so apprehending such offender, who is to deliver over such recognizance, &c., to the clerk of affize, or county, &c., where such offender is required to appear by such recognizance; and such recognizance, &c., shall be of the same force as if the same had been entered into, before a justice of peace for the proper county, &c., whereas the offence was committed, and the same proceedings shall be had thereon; and in case full bail be given by such offender to appear by such recognizance, &c., is so delivered, neglect to deliver over the same to the clerk of affizes, or clerk of the peace of the county, &c., where such offender is to appear, such confession of surety, or person so shall forfeit 10 l. to be recovered by bill, &c., in any court at Westminster, by any person who will sue for the same, wherein no offense, &c., shall be allowed, or at the same cause, the offence for which such offender is apprehended in any other county, &c., be not bailable in law, or such offender give not bail for his appearance at the next assizes or general gaol-delivery, or next general quarter-justices of the peace for the county, &c., where the offence was committed, to the falsification of the justice before whom such offender is brought, in such other county, &c., be not bailable in law, or such offender be not bailable in any other county, &c., where such offence was committed, there to be dealt with according to law.

Sect. 2. No action of trespass, false imprisonment, information or indictment, or other action shall be brought against the justice who indorses such warrant, by reason of his indorsing such warrant.

Sect. 3. Provided that such person be at liberty to bring his action against the justice who originally granted such warrant, as he might have done in case this act had not been passed.

Where a city hath justices with an exclusive clause, the justices of the county cannot act in matters of excite; as where the question was, Whether, as the city of New Sarum had an exclusive commination of the peace, the justices of the county of Wilts could by virtue of 12 Car. 2. cap. 23. and 15 Car. 2. cap. 2. act in excite matters within the city. This case was argued three times at the bar, and this term the Chief Justice delivered the refor-and the justices of peace for the said county are to make a table of such fees at their next general or quarter sessions, after the 24th of June 1754, and to approve or alter the same at the next succeeding general or quarter sessions, and from time to time to make and approve any other such table or tables.

By stat. 7 Jus. 1. c. 15. sect. 1. If any action upon the cafe, trespass, battery, or false imprisonment, shall be brought, against any justice of peace, mayor or bailiff of a city or town corporate, headborough, post-reave, confable, tithing-man, collector of falsdy or fifteenth, for any thing or thing done by reason of their office, it shall be lawful for every such justice of peace or other officer, and all others which in their affiance, or by their command, shall do any thing touching their offices, to plead the general issue. Not guilty; and if the verdict shall pass with the defendant, or the plaintiff become nonsuit, or suffer any continuance, the judge before whom the matter shall be tried shall allow the defendant double costs.

Stat. 21 Jus. 1. c. 12. sect. 5. If any action upon the cafe, trespass, battery, or false imprisonment, shall be brought against any justice of peace, mayor or bailiff of city or town corporate, headborough, post-reave, confable, tithing-man, collector of falsdy or fifteenth, for any thing or thing done by reason of their office, it shall be lawful for every such justice of peace or other officer, and all others which in their affiance, or by their command, shall do any thing touching their offices, to plead the general issue. Not guilty; and if the verdict shall pass with the defendant, or the plaintiff become nonsuit, or suffer any continuance, the defendant shall have double costs.

Stat. 24 Gen. 2. c. 44. sect. 1. No writ shall be sued for against, nor any process of any proceedings at the suit of a defendant shall be served on any justice of peace, for any thing by him done in the execution of his office, until notice in writing of such intended writ or process be delivered to him, or left at the usual place of his abode, by his attorney for the party who intends to sue, at least one calendar month before the suing out or serving the same; in which notice shall be clearly and explicitly contained the cause of action, on the back of which notice shall be added the name of such attorney, with the place of his abode, who shall be intitled to the sec. of 200. for preparing and serving such notice.

Stat. 1. sect. 2. Upon any action for such justice of peace at any time within one calendar month after such notice given, to tender amends to the party complaining, or to his attorney; and in case the same is not accepted, to sue such tender in bar to any action grounded on such writ or process, together with the plea of Not guilty, and any other pleas, if the party tendered amends to be sufficient, shall give a verdict for the defendant; and in such case, or if in the cafe the plaintiff become nonsuit, or discontinues his action, or judgment is given for such justice upon demurrer, he shall be intitled to the like costs as if he had pleaded the general issue only; and it shall be lawful for every officer or person, church, that the same were not sufficient, and also against the defendant on such other plea, they shall give a verdict for the plaintiff, and such damages as they think proper, which he shall recover, together with his costs.

Stat. 3. No such plaintiff shall recover any verdict against such justice, where the action is grounded on an act of the defendant as a justice of peace, unless it is proved upon the trial that such notice was given, but in default thereof such justice shall recover a verdict and costs.

Stat. 4. In ceafe such justice neglect to tender any amends, he may tender insufficient amends, before the action brought, it shall be lawful for him, by leave of the court where such action depends, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum as he fees fit; whereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into court.
trials, i.e. perjury, a frame or rail, such as vines use to run upon; and byfars, a staff or pole, inferring, that the justices employed in this commission, had authority to proceed without any solemn judgment-feat, but might without more work proceed wherever they could apprehend the malefactors they fought for. If I may be ad- mitted to give my thoughts, I should be disposed to derive the French word tréfl, i. to draw; and byfars, a staff; and the reason of this my supposition is, that the Kings of England having in those times many occa- sions in France, by reason of their frequent wars there; and observing that the marshalls of France had a large power, with which they were invested by the delivery of a certificate, or badge, as a mark of their office and authority; when they returned, and found strange disorders grown here, in imitation of that, erec- ted these justices, who (as they say) had a byfars deliver- ed them as the badge of their office, fo that whoever was brought before them was trésle al byfars, tréstius ad baculum; whereupon with subfimation, may their name easy be deduced, and they called justices de trésle-bac, or justiciarii ad traiandum offendentes ad baculum vel bac- ton. We find a commission of trésle-bacem, eam Ro- gero de Grey & fuis fatis jus licet apud S. Albanum, annos Regni Regis Ed. 3. jufi conquestum, 5. Cowell, edit. 1750. J usticia, or justicie. (Fr. justice,) A justice, or justiciary. The Lord Birmingham, justiciar of Ireland. Baker's Chron. Angl. fol. 118. The whole jurisdiction which is now distributed among the several courts of Westminster Hall, seems in the fifth reign after the conquest, to have been lodged in one court, commonly called the King's court, where justice is said to have been administered sometimes by the King himself in person, and sometimes by the high justiciary, who was an officer of very great authority, and used in the King's absence beyond sea to govern the realm as vice-roy. 2 Henr. P. C. 6. 4. 10. The first justiciary after the conquest were Osb bishop of Baeum in Normandy, half brother by the mother to the conqueror, and William Fitte-Ochon, who was vice-roy, and had the same power in the north that Osb had in the south, and was the chief in the conqueror's army. Bradys Preface to the Norman History 151. (B.) Dogd. Chron. Series 1. The next justiciaries were William Earl of Warren in Normandy, a great commander in the battle against Har- rold, and Richard de Bensfucta, alias Richard de Tone- bridge, son to Gilbert Earl of Briton in Normandy, and were constituted in 1073. Bradys Preface, &c. 154. (B.) Dogd. Chron. Series 1. In 1088, Richard the first, put Lenfrank and the said Osb, Guifrifd bishop of Confiance in Normandy, was justiciary. Bradys Preface, &c. 151. (C.) Dogd. Chron. Series 1. In the beginning of William Rufus, Osb was again justiciary. William de Carlefe bishop of Durham, a Norman, succedeth Osb, and then followed Ranulpf Flambar in 1090. Afterwards in the reign of H. I. in 1100. Hugo de Boscud, a Norman, was justiciary, and after him his son Richard Babif was; then Roger bishop of Salisbury, was justiciary and chancellor. The next, in the time of King Stephen, was Henry duke of Nor- manby, afterwards King Henry II. And in Henry the Second's time was Robert de Belle Monts earl of Leicester in 1155, but he was made earl of Leicester by the King, before he had been justice before him; and after earl of Leicester, Richard de Laute was made justice; and after him in 1180. Ranulpf de Glanvill, that famous lawyer was made justice; after him, Hugo de Putcest, commonly cal- led Putez, Putas, or Pofey, nephew to King Stephen by his marriage, was the last justice parts beyond Trent; and William de Long-Camps, or Langh Campb, bishop of Ely, was at the same time by Richard the First, made justice on the fourth parts of this side Trent. Then, after the deprivation of William bishop of Ely, Walter archbishop of Reven in Normandy, was made justice of all England. Bradys Preface, &c. 154. (D) (E) (F) 152. (A) (B) (C). See Dogd. Chron. The chancellor was the first in order on the left hand of the justiciary, and as he was a great person in court, fo he was in the Exchequer; for no great thing passed but with his consent and advice, nothing could be faced without his allowance and privy. But the justiciary surmounted all others in authority, and he was the greatest in the Exchequer; for he was at all times of the Chief Stewards, Exchequer, and their Court of Ward. Bradys Preface to the Roman History 153. (B). As long as the power of the justiciar continued, the Aula Regis was one court, and only distinguished by the several officers; for all the officers were united under the justiciar, and he was the governor and superinten- dent in the Exchequer. 3. Justicie-Seal is the highest court that is held in a forest, and is always held before the Lord Chief Justifie in eyes of the forfs, upon warning forty days before; and there the judgments are always given, and the fines for offences, that were presented at the courts of attachments, and the offenders indited at the eomitias, concerning which see Monuudus Forest Laws, cap. 24.

Justities, is a writ directed to the sheriff, for the dis- patch of justice in some special case of which he cannot by his ordinary power hold plea in his county-court. Hereupon the writ de excommuniation deliberran, is called the Writ of Excommunication Deliberran. 3. Brev. Breton. fol. 35. Also the writ de homina repaginando, Vide. fol. 154. Also the writ de quaesitio paraforenas, Vide. fol. 72. There are many precedents of this in F. N. B. fol. 117. in Actuare, and fol. 152. in Amnity, and fol. 119. in Debt. Kitchin. fol. 74. says, that by this writ of justities, the sheriff shall have power to arrest a great fern, whereas, of his ordinary authority, he can have no pleae, but of them under pain of fines, with whom agreea Gramp. fol. 231. It is called a justicie, because it is a commission to the sheriffs ad ju- stiationem alium, to do a man justice, and requires no return, or any certificate of what he hath done. Broate, lib. 4. tract. 6. cap. 13. num. 2. mentions a justicie to the sheriffs of London, in a case of dower. See the New Book of Entries, verbo Justicie.

King, (Rem.) Is thought by Camden in his Erit, pag. 105. to be contracted from the Saxmon word ceyning for coming, signifying him that hath the highest power, and absolute rule over the whole land; and therefore the King is in intendment of law cleared of those defects which common persons are subject to; for he is always supposed to be of full age, although never so young.

Bing's Bench, (Bancus Regius,) Is the court or judgment-seat, where the King of England was sometimes wont to fit in his own person; and therefore it was moveable with the court or King's household, and called Curia Domini Regis et Aula Regia, as Queen reports in the Preface to his Reading; and that therein, and in the court of Exchequer, which were the only courts of the King till Henry the Third's days, were handled all matters of justice, as well civil as criminal.

This court of the King's Bench was wont in ancient times to be especially exercized in all criminal matters and pleas of the crown, leaving the handling of private causes and civil actions to the Common Pleas and other courts.

Glanville, lib. 1. cap. 2. 3. 4. and lib. 10. cap. 18.

Smith
The Court of the King's Bench has no jurisdiction in civil matters. As such, it was not the venue for the cases involving Henry Crowood. The jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench was limited to matters of criminal law. For civil cases, other courts, such as the Superior Court of Justice, had jurisdiction.

1. OF THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF KING'S BENCH IN CRIMINAL MATTERS.

This court is termed the Custos morum of all the realm, and by the plentitude of its power, where-ever it meets with an offence contrary to the first principles of justice, and of dangerous consequence if not restrained, adapts a proper punishment to it. 1 Std. 168. 2 Hawk. P. C. 6.

It has a particular jurisdiction, not only over all capital offences, but also over all other misdemeanors of a publick nature, tending either to a breach of the peace, or to oppression or faction, or any manner of misgovernment; and it is not material what the several offences be, or what be the manner by which the publick good, directly or indirectly, be injured by any particular person or not. 4 Iust. 71. 11 Co. 98. 2 Hawk. P. C. 6.

And for the better restraining such offences, it has a discretionery power of inflicting exemplary punishment on offenders, either by fine, imprisonment or other infamous punishment, as the nature of the crime, conformed in all its circumstances, shall require; and it may make use of any prison which shall seem most proper; and it is said, that no other court can remove or bail persons condemned to imprisonment by this court. 2 Hawk. P. C. 7.

Alfo it has to soveraigne a jurisdiction in all crimi- nal matters, that an act of parliament appointing that all crimes of a certain denomination shall be tried before certain judges, doth not exclude the jurisdiction of this court, appears in the relation and figure of it given by Mr. Knox in his travels, p. 28.

Bipper-time. No salmon shall be taken between Gravesend and Henly upon Thames in kipper-time, viz. between the Invention of the Croy (3 May) and the Epis- tle of St. Paul to the Romans, Wel. 2. Cowell, ed. 1727.

Bisword, an old Saxon word for a man-servant, and so used in 14 Ed. 3. f. 1. cap. 3. and Verfagin in his Refutation of Desired Intelligences, cap. 10. believes it is borrowed from the Dutch enke, which signifies the same thing. And that is some kind of officer or servant, as field-enke was he that wore the weapon or shield of his master. In this in his old English translation, Ew. 1. xvi. If it be a knave child, i.e. a fom or male child. Afterwards it was used of a anno servitum, or devoted, for any serving man: As in the vision of Plers Platon and Coke's, and knave enyeen hohe pye hoote, i.e. Cooks and their boys, or skellions. Cowell, ed. 1727.

Knight, (Sax. eng, Lat. miles, and esquus auratus, from the girt spurs he usually wore, and thence called anciently Knights of the Girt Spur. The Italiun term them Cavalieri, the French Chevalier, the Germans Ritter, the Spanish cavalier, &c.) In its original properly signifies a servant; but there is now but one instance in which it is taken in that sense, and that is knight of the shire, who properly serves in parliament for such a county; but in all other instances it signifies one who bears arms, who, for his virtue and martial prowess, is the king, or one having his authority, exalted above the rank of gentleman to a higher account or step of dignity. The manner of making them, Camden in his Britannia, thus briefly express: Nyftis vero temporibus, qui explefrum dignitatem, &c. From this first signified a squire or boy, as born, he whence a knave-child, i.e. a boy distingufhing from a girl in several old writers. A knave child between them two by gate.—Gower, Poem, fol. 52, 105. And Wick-iff in his old English translation, Ew. 1. xvi. If it be a knave child, i.e. a fom or male child. Knight's fees. (Fodum militum.) Is so much inheritance, as is sufficient yearly to maintain a knight with convenient revenue; which in Henry the Third's days was 151. Camb. Briton, pag. 111. But Sir Thomas Smith, Repub. Ang. lib. 1. cap. 18. raters it at 40l. and by the statute for knights, a 2. Ed. 2. cap. 1. such as had 20l. per annum in fee, or for life, might be compelled to be knights; which statute is repealed by 17 Car. 1. cap. 20. Stew in his Annals, p. 285. says, there were found in England, at the time of the Conqueror, 6021 knights fees, according to others 6201; whereas the re- ligious houses, by their foundation, were only 1100, reckoned in 28015. Off. carucati terrae fuit faciunt feodum uniis militis. Mon. Angl. 2. pag. 825. a. This of you may read more in Seldeis's Titles of Honour, fol. 691. and Bradton, lib. 3. tract. 1. cap. 2. See Coke in Litt. fol. 69. a. A knight's fee contained twelve plow-lands, 2 Parli. Inf. 1. cap. 3. a term, contain 24 acres, a virgata terra make an hide, and five hides make a knight's fee, whose relief is five pounds. Cowell, ed. 1727.

Knights of the Garter. (Equites Garteri, or Peri- feillos.) Are an order of knights first created by King Edward the Third, after he had obtained notable victories, who, for furnishing of this honourable order, made a choice out of his realm, and all Christendoms, of the left and most excellent renowned knights in virtue and ho- nour, befowing this dignity on them, and giving them a bluegarter, decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones, as a buckle of gold, to wear daily on the left leg, a kirtle, a crown, cloak, chaperon, a collar, and other stately and magnificent apparel, both of fluff and fashion; exquisite and herocical to wear at high fealls, as to high and princely an order was meet. Of which he and his suc- cessors, Kings of England, were ordained sovereigns, and the right fellows and brethren, to the number of two only.

Knights of the Bath. See the antiquity and cere- mony of their creation in Dagdul's Antiquities of War- rants, p. 52. After the war was over, and they were from bathing the night before their creation; their place is for the knights bachelor, and after baronets. This order was re-established by King George the First in the year 1753; who erected the fame into a regular military order for ever, by the same and title of The order of the Bath, to be bestowed, by the king's grace, on deserving officers.

Knights of the Chamber. (Militet Camarum.) Men- tioned in 2 Iff. fol. 666. and in Rot. Pat. 29 Edu. 3. par. 1. m. 29. Seem to be such knights bachelors as are made in time of peace, because knighted commonly in the King's chamber, not in the field, as in time of war.

Knights of the Garter. (Equites Garteri, or Peri- feillos.) Are an order of knights first created by King Edward the Third, after he had obtained notable victories, who, for furnishing of this honourable order, made a choice out of his realm, and all Christendoms, of the left and most excellent renowned knights in virtue and ho- nour, befowing this dignity on them, and giving them a bluegarter, decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones, as a buckle of gold, to wear daily on the left leg, a kirtle, a crown, cloak, chaperon, a collar, and other stately and magnificent apparel, both of fluff and fashion; exquisite and herocical to wear at high fealls, as to high and princely an order was meet. Of which he and his suc- cessors, Kings of England, were ordained sovereigns, and the right fellows and brethren, to the number of two only.
Antiques of the Later (Militia continentis.) Otherwise called Knights of parliament, are two knights or gentlemen of worth, chosen upon the King's writ, in pleno comitato, by the freeholders of every county that can dispense 40 s. per annum, ann. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 1. and 10 Hen. 6. cap. 2. who are in the honour of Knights of the Garter, and fourteen of the secular canons who are priests, or must be within one year after their admission; thirteen vicars, also priests, and twenty six poor knights, that have no other sustenance, or means of living, but the allowance of this house, which is allotted to them in respect to their daily prayer. These are also certain officers belonging to this order, viz. The prelate of the garter, which office is inherent to the bishop of Wim- chester for the time being; the chancellor of the garter, the registrator, who is also dean of Wimchester; the principal king at arms, called Garter, whose chief business is to manage and marshall their solemnities at their yearly feasts and installations. Lastly, The usher of the garter, who is also the usher of the black rod. The site of this college is the castle of Wimchester with the chapel of St. George, erected by Edward the Third, and the chapter-house in the said castle, and their solemnity upon St. George's day. Camden faith, this order received great ornament from Edward the Fourth, Fern's Glory of Generosity, pag. 120. And that most pious Prince Charles the First, as an addition to their splendour, ordered all the companions of the order to wear on the left side of their upper garment, the badge of the Order of the Garter. There are forty miles round about are cast beams of silver like the rays of the sun in full luster. See CARL. Cosewell. ed. 1727.

Antiques of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, Milities Sancti Johannis Hierosolimitani, were an order of knighthood, that began about the year of our Lord 1090, Henor being pope. They had their denomination from John the charitable patriarch of Alexandria, hough vowed to St. John the Baptist their patron: Fern's Glory of Generosity, pag. 127. They had their primary abode at first in Jerusalem, and then in the isle of Rhodes until they were expelled thence by the Turks, anno 1261. Since which time their chief seat is the isle of Malta, where they have done great exploits against the infidels, but especially in the year 1554. They live after the form of friers, under the rule of St. Augustine, of whom mention is made in the statute 25 Hen. 8. cap. 2. and were subject to the king of France, and prior that had the government of the whole order within England and Scotland, Reg. Orig. fol. 20. and the ref prior in England, and fake in the Lords house of parliament. But towards the end of Henry the Eight's days they in England and Ireland, being found over much to their injury against the King, were supprest, and their lands and goods given to the King, by the 32 Hen. 1. 24. For occasion and propagation of this order more specially described, see in the treatise, intituled, The Book of Honour and Arms, lib. 5. cap. 18. written by Mr. Richard Fawcett. Cosewell. edit. 1717.

LACTEIS, is a word mentioned in Democritus book, and there signifies a fathom. Cowell, edit. 1727.

LACHES, (from the French lache, id. sft., laxare or licere, licet, and signifies slackness of negligence, as appears in the act. 20 Geo. 2. c. 6, 7, where slackness of entry is nothing else but a neglect in the heir to enter; and probably it may be an old English word; as when we say, "there is laches of entry, it is all one as if we should say, there is lack of entry; and indeed it hath no other signification; for so it is used, Litt. ed. 176. and Old Nat. Brev. s. 110. Where a man ought to make or do a thing and he makes or does it not, one cannot have an affine of his laches, but must take an action upon the case. See Coke on Litt. s. 246 and 380.

LAD, A defect in the weight of money: Adjussum (of the maria quanto verba numera curset, unde quantitatis libra fit L. 2. 2. 45, 2. 2. 6. Qua unum latus, qua ibus quantum levat, vis fignifies qui plus laboraverit, perferverer & reddatur, &c. From hence we derive the word lack. Du Frenne.

LADA, A lade, lath or court of justice, from Sax. ladan, to convene or assemble. Hence the annual court at Dim-Church in Romney-March held about Michaelmas, for the election of a bailiff and other officers, is called the lath, and Dim-churb-lath. See Leis.

Lada, A purgation by trial, from Sax. lidan, to purge by sublimation to any legal method of acquittal. Hence the lada simplex, and the lada triplex, or lada plena among our Saxen ancitlers, mentioned in the laws of King Ethelred, and Confessor. See Slack.

Land-lease, An ancient customary fine, paid either in cattle or money at every alienation of land lying in some peculiar manor, or the liberty of some borough.
As at Maiden in Essex, there is yet a custom, that for several houses and land folded within that borough, thir-ten pence in every mark of the purchase-money shall be paid to the town; and this custom of land-lease they claim inter alia, by a grant made to that town by the bishop of London, Anna 5 Hen. 6. Somner in his Saxon Dictionarium says, Land-lease oft forfexe pretium fundi poto datum vel debitum. The word is also read in Spel.
de Concil. vol. 1. fol. 502.

Lanber, A ditch made near wet lands to receive the water, and carry it into the sea: Vira judicia & auordu

Lan-deable, Is a tax or rent issuing out of lands, according to the customs of the land, the king having offered a tract of the kingdom to every house, or to every house, and a rent given for it: Cuan de leable, de Leable.

This landgavel or landable in the register of Domesday, was a quit-rent for the site of a house, or the land whereon it stood, the same with what we now call ground-rent. — Térmus Hali per hactare in cnotated XXX

Landlords, (Agri mensæ), Measurers of land, so called of old.

Landtenants, Those services and duties which in the Saxon times were laid upon all that held lands, which were three obligations called trimda necessitas, expedition, burgbrote and bigebrote: Which duties the Saxons did not call servitut, because they were not feudal servities arising from that servitude of the owners, but landtenants, rights that charged the very land whatever did thereto set forth, churchman or lazman. Vide Spelman of Feuds, c. 10.

Landman, Terricole, The terræ-service.

Landster, The ancient method of taxation was by sokeage, which was on lands held by knight-tenants, and by tallage on the cities and boroughs, and it was made
made in this manner: When the King wanted money for his wars, those tenants that did not attend him in person, paid him an aid, and the aid was affiessed before the justices itinerant. It was generally a gift of all the inhabitants as a body corporate; if they did not give according to the wants of the King, the30 tenants were intimated; and if there were any forfeitures of their charters, quo warranto came out, to seize their liberties into the King's hands. But Ed. 1. found this way of taxing by escheate and tallage to be very incom- plet; because wars were drawn out into great length and expense; and therefore he formed a method by which the tenants in capite that held great baronies, and were called the barons majors, (the now peers of parliament) and the representative of the baronies minors and of several corporations, viz, the citizens and burgesses, of whom he made one body; which now composes the house of commons. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 1592.

King Edward the Fifth granted the people Magna Charta, which they had long contended for, and also the charter of the forefetis; and for Magna Charta they granted the King a fifteenth, by the name of Quindecimam partem omnium baronum; so that instead of particular affiessions in each county, there was one uniform fifteenth of all their substance: This fifteenth seems to have been at first made out of the ecclesiastical tenth; for the popes claimed the tenths of all benefices; it was therefore easy to know, by the popes' collections of his tenths, what was the value of every ecclesiastical bene- fit. King John, in his fifth year, made the tax, and the fifteenth must be 14. 4d. The benefices consisted of the glebe and the tenth part of the town- ship; therefore by the value of the benefice, deducting the glebe, they knew the true value of the township, and how to set a fifteenth upon it: So that the fifteenth of the common tax in each county, was set by the King's taxors and collectors under the act of parliament; and commissaries were granted to the taxors and collectors of them under the Great seal: but in collecting of the fiveeaths the sums only appeared in the books below. And the collectors of every township, either returned their collection into the Exchequer, or else there were head collectors for the whole county, who returned it thither; there were likewise commissaries appointed, to superintend such taxation and collections: But about the time of Edward III. there were certain established sums set upon every township; and so, as the King's wants increased, they gave one, two, or three fifteenths. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 1617, 194.

We find in the times of Henry the Eighth, Queen Eliz- abeth, and King James the First, that they raised both subsidies and fifteenths; this was, because the value of things increased, and therefore the old fifteenths were not according to the then true value of townships. And therefore they contrived that the subsidy should be raised by a pound-rate upon lands, and likewise a pound-rate upon goods; and we find in the subsidy 4 Car. (which is said to be the greatest subsidy that ever was given, and which paid upon the petition of rights) there was 41. in the pound laid upon land, and 21. 8d. upon goods; now these rates were taken to be the 2. 2. 8d. which was upon goods to two fifteenths; but in this they had no regard to the old rates made in the tax- book of the several townships, otherwise than to discover the value of the lands; but a method is chalcked out by the act of parliament to appoint commissaries, affiectors, and collectors in order to rate and get in the fait sub- sidie. This was found very inconvenient, because the commissaries used to be favourable to their own country, therefore it was found necessary to revive so far the ancient method, as to appoint a certain sum; and in the time of the civil war, the long parliament would not settle any personal commissaries, but the appointment of commissaries was made in the act itself: And in this new manner of taxing, they appointed the sum to be levied on each particular county, in the act itself; as well as the commissioners names, and where to levy it: And the six associated counties, viz. London, Middlesex, Kent, Suffolk, Surrey, and Hertford, being not soopiled and pillaged in the civil wars, and more hearty to the parliament inter- est, were taxed higher than any other counties in England. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 194, 195, 196.

The temporality and spiritualty were taxed in the same manner as to their personal estate, but as to their real estate, what was given in conviction excused their tax quod their spiritualities. The commissaries for executing the act, were appointed by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, or other great officers of the Crown, or any two members of the Lord Chancellor being one. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 195, 198.

The present land-tax, tho' it follows the plan of the subsidies, viz. in taxing so much on the personal, and so much on the real estate, yet it differs in two material circumstances, viz. that there is a sum imposed on each particular county, and that the commissaries are not to execute the act itself; this came in in the time of the civil war, in this manner; they had first taxed according to the pound-rate, but when the zeal of the people fell off, they found it necessary to set a sum upon each particular county; and so they taxed them according to the highest sum that had been imposed in such counties, and they being then in opposition to the Crown, they named the commissaries in the act itself; and this way of taxing was afterwards followed after the reformation, because they found it for the sake of the Crown to name particular sums in the act of parliament, and then they named commissaries also, who were to assess and rate each particular inhabitant. The commissaries by the subsidy, were duly to execute that act; but by the land-tax they were directed in a particular manner how they should do it: that is to say, by making the distribution of the particular sum upon each parti- cular hundred, lathe and wapentake; but by both laws, the commissaries of the respective counties were not to act out of their dioceres. The commissaries by the land-tax are to give a note to the receiver general, of the names of the acting commissaries, and sums in each division. We do not find this clause the old subfidy law, because it was not necessary, here there was not a particular sum imposed on each mony. The commissioners, both in the subfidy and nd-tax, were to infuere their precepts to the confidences of other inhabitants, and to appoint affiffants; and by hth laws, the commissioners are to give a certificate of nt, and to return such affiffants to the commissioners; who by the land-tax were to return the names of the creditors. And by both laws, the fons aggraved might appeal from the affiffants to the ommiffors; and also flock upon land is excepted from yng as personal effects. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq.

By the subfidy law, the commissioners appointed coliors; but by the land-tax, the affiffors brought in ames of the creditors; because the place was answer-for the sums so affiffed, until they were paid in to receivers general; and therefore it was necessary that affiffors should appoint creditors: But by the subfidy law, there was no particular sum locally fixed; and therefore the creditors were appointed by the commisniffors, who acted in behalf of the Crown; and the fors names were returned in, by both laws, to the ceivers general, or high collectors; and this disposition for the receiver might know in whose hands the oney was. In the subfidy, the commissioners appointed he high collectors in each thire and division, to whom sub-collectors were accountable; and the high colfors were accountable to the Exchequer; and one ducate of the affiffants of each thire or division was given r into the Exchequer; to be a charge on the high ollectors receipt: But according to the me of the land-tax, the receiver is now appointed by Lord Treasurer; and by this law, a duplicate of each icular division is to be given to the receiver general, taxed every other to be returned to the Exchequer; the du-that returned into the Exchequer, to charge the re-civer general. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 205, 201.

The high collectors by the subfidy law, gave security to the commissioners by recognizances, to answer the moy by them received; but now, the receiver general, by conftitution of the treasury gives security to the crown.
the subfidy law and land-tax, the under-collector was distain the parties refusing to pay the sum affiffed; and by the subfidy law, the under-collectors paid in the oney collected to the high collector, who was an accountant at the Exchequer; but by the land-tax, the money is paid direct to the receiver, and therefore, the accountant at the Exchequer. If the collectors not pay in the money they had collected to the re-civers, the commissioners were to imprison them, and fine their effects; but if the proportion was not answered, the receivers were to answer for the deficiency the commissioners. By both laws, the collectors had receipts and affiffments delivered; and, under such precepts, had authority to detain the lands and goods of the forso affiffed, by virtue of the act. By both laws they were to be taxed for goods, in the place where were dwelt. By both laws the distress was to be sold four days; by the land-tax, in four days: And for except or refusal to pay, and failure of distress, the party to be imprisoned. By the subfidy law, all the commisniffors joined in one certificate; but now the commisniffors, in each division return their effects, which are a charge upon the receiver general; but in the land-tax, if non-payment in any place be certified by the receiver nder his hand, Exchequer procures to subjoin against the ng commissioners. By the land-tax, if land doubly axed comes into protestant hands, and they get a certificate from the commissioners, and prove the truth of the certificate before the receiver general, then, if the court of Exchequer is impowered to discharge such from the parish or township in which the lands lie,

Larcrip, (Ir. larcon, Lat. larconium) Is a theft of personal goods or chattels in the owner's absence; and in respect of the thing stolen, it is either great or grand, or small; grand larceny is when the things stolen, thofe-verally, exceed the value of 12 d. petit larceny is when the goods stolen exceed not that value. Cowell.

A peron who steals the goods of another, let the value of them be never so small, is guilty of felony; but it is said to be no felony for one reduced to extreme necessity to take fo much of another's viftuals, as will save him from starving; but if such necessity be owing to his un-thriftiness, it is far from being an exceife. 1 Hawk. P.
C. 93.
But here we must observe the difference between grand and petit larceny, which is again divided into simple and mixt larceny: Simple grand larceny is the felonious and fraudulent taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, not from his person, nor out of his house, where the goods are above the value of twelve pence, but if of that value, or under, then it is petit larceny: if from his person, or out of his house, it is called mixt larceny, but hath no greater degree of guilt attending it at Common law, than simple larceny, for in both cases the offender was allowed the benefit of his clergy, but is at this time in several inclusions excluded by acts of parliament. S. P. C. 27. Cram. 33. H. P. C. 74.

1 Haw. P. C. 97.

If two or more persons together steal goods above the value of 12 d. every one of them is guilty of grand larceny, for each person is as much an offender, as if he had committed the fact alone. S. P. C. 24. Cram. 35.

H. P. C. 70.

Also if one at several times fleale several parcels of goods, each under the value of 12 d. but amounting in the whole to more, from the same person, and be found guilty thereof on the same indictment, he shall have judgment of death as for grand larceny. S. P. C. 24. Cram. 26. H. P. C. 7.

1 Haw. P. C. 95.

If one be indicted for flealeing goods to the value of ten shillings, and the jury find specially that he is guilty, but that the goods are worth but ten pence, he shall not have judgment of death, but only as for petit larceny. S. P. C. 24. Cram. 35.

H. P. C. 70.

All these are under a natural disability of distinguishing between good and evil, as infants under the age of discretion, idiots and lunatics, are not punishable by any criminal prosecution whatsoever, and consequently can't be guilty of felony. H. P. C. 10. 1 Haw. P. C. 2.

Also a false cozen is so much favoured, in respect of that power and authority which her husband has over her, that she shall not suffer any punishment for committing a bare theft in company with, or by coercion of her husband. Keelyg 31. S. P. C. 26. 1 Haw. P. C. 2.

But if the be guilty of treason, murder or robbery in company with, or by coercion of her husband, she is punishable as much as if she were sole. S. P. C. 65. 1 Haw. P. C. 2.

Also a false cozen may be guilty of larceny, if she of her own voluntary act, or by the bare command of her husband, fleale the goods of a stranger, but not if she fleale her husband's, because a husband and wife are confident but as one person in law ; and the husband by endeavouring his wife at the marriage with all his wordly goods, gives her a kind of interest in them; for which cause, even a stranger can't commit larceny in taking the goods of the husband by the delivery of the wife, as he may by taking away the wife by force, and against her will, together with the goods of the husband. S. P. C. 65. 1 Haw. P. C. 2.

1. Of what nature the things taken must be, to constitute the offence felony.

2. How far the goods ought to belong to another; and what shall be deemed a felonious and fraudulent taking, and carrying away.

3. Where the offender is or is not excluded his clergy, or is to be transported.

1. Of what nature the things taken must be, to constitute the offence felony.

Here it may be proper to take notice, that in the times of military tenures every tenant was obliged to attend in the camp, and there being no provision made out of the publick flock for them, as there is now-a-days for our mercenary soldiers, it was necessary for every freeman to carry with him his own provision; which obliged them to a very fever and rigid justice upon all persons who should violate any man's property; otherwife camps would have been scenes of intolerable violence, and some man would have perished by his neighbour's sword, and not by his enemies. Hence they learned the infliction of punishing theft by death, and from thence they derived it into our civil law, in which consisting of the fame orders and conditions of offence, it was necessary that the same measures of justice should be the same for a man in his own house and in the camp; for they could not understand that a man should be punished otherwise in the camp than in the civil state, they thought justice was the same, and could not alter it with the deviation of countries and places; and therefore it is that in this punishment our law differs from the Roman and Mo- lasses, which only obliged those for offenders to the restitution of the goods, and custom hath approved the method; for should we admit a restitution from such profligate offenders, we should hazard the end of rapine and violence. S. P. C. 25. See Excd. xxii.

Hence we have the reason of the distinction between the real and personal property, and why our Common law does not punish the fencing of corn or grass growing, or apples on a tree, or lead on a church or house with death, because these never came under the camp discipline; and therefore it was not necessary to carry this fort of property with such fanguinary laws, where the redress may be by a civil action. 12 Att. 32. Br. Att. 37. S. P. C. 25. 1 Med. 89. Allen 83. 2 Keb. 517. 1 Bent. 167.

But if they are fevered from the freehold, whether by the owner, or even by the chief himself, if he be fevered at one time, and then come again at another time, and take them, this is felony. 1 Bent. 187. 1 Haw. P. C. 93.

If a man take away a box of charters, this is not felony, because they are the muniments of the freehold, and relate to the estate at home, and not to the provisions that were used in supplying the camp abroad. 3 Lef. 109. H. P. C. 66.

But it is said, in Hale, to be felony to take away an obligation for money; and the reason hereof may be, because securities might be taken to answer money at the camp from a neighbouring freeholder, and therefore there was the same reason they should be within this provision, as that other chattels should be protected by the obligations being equally valuable. H. P. C. 67.

But her Hawkins, the things taken ought to have some worth in themselves, and not to derive their whole value from the relation they bear to former time, which cannot be stolen, as paper or parchment, or charters, and other proper securities. As charters, there are written assurances concerning lands or obligations, or covenants, or other securities for debt or other chose in action. As the reason, he says, whereof there can be no felony in taking away any such things, feems to be, because, generally speaking, they being of no manner of use to any but the owner, are not supposed to be so much in danger of being stolen, and therefore need not be provided for in so strict a manner, as those things which are of a known price, and every body's money; and for the like reason it is no felony to take away a villain or an infant in ward. 1 Haw. P. C. 93.

But now, by the 2 Gra. 2. cap. 25, it is enacted, " That if any person or persons shall steal, or take by robbery, any Exchequer orders or tallies, or other orders, initing any other perfon or persons to any ananity or trust in any parliamentary fund, or any Exchequer bills, Bank notes, East-Sea bonds, East-India bonds, dividend warrants of the Bank, South-Sea company, East-India company, or any other company, society or corporation, bills of exchange, many bills or debentures, goldsmiths notes for payment of any money, or other bonds or warrants, bills or promissory notes for the payment of any money, being the property of any other person or persons, or of any corporation; and putting away any of the said particulars are termed in law a chofe in action, it shall be deemed and confirued to be felony of the same nature and in the same degree, and with or without the benefit of the clergy in the same manner, as it would have been, if the offender had stolen or taken by robber any other goods of like value with the money due on such orders, tallies, bills, bonds, warrants, debentures or notes, respectively, or secured thereby, and remaining unsatisfied; and such offended shall suffer such punishment, and be mulcted and fined, and in the custody of such and such

and in the second, for falsifying bona fide & ecclesiæ, &c.
and a fortiori therefore it follows, that he who falsifies goods belonging to a parish church, may be indicted for flealing boca pareochianum; and it hath been adjudged, that he who takes off a thrown from a dead corps, may be indicted, as having stolen it from him, who was the owner thereof, or he or the dead man can have no property.
1 Haw. P. C. 94.
There is also a special case, in which a man may be guilty of felony in flealing goods, the absolute property whereof is in himself; as where one who has delivered goods to a carrier or taylor, &c. afterwards with an intent to claim such carrier or taylor, fraudulently and secretly takes them away, Cre. Elin. 536. Mor. pl. 981.
Kitt. 70.
To constitute an offence felony, it is not sufficient that there be a fraud and intent to steal, unless there be also a taking, for all felony includes trepasfs, and every indictment for burglary must have both the words seps et aopportavi; and therefore if there be no trespasfs in taking the goods, there can be no felony in carrying them away.
H. P. C. 61. 1 Hawk. P. C. 89.
Therefore if a person finds goods, and converts them to his own use, anima fraudati, yet he is not guilty of felony.
1 Inf. 108.
So if a person who has a limited property in the goods, as one who has goods delivered to him to keep, a carrier who has a box delivered to him to carry to a certain place, or a taylor who has cloth delivered to him to make into a suit of clothes from it, the party injured may feck redresfs by civil action, and must abide the folly of his own act in placing confidence in the person who was guilty of the breach of trust. S. P. C. 25. a.
3 Inf. 108.
But though I lend a box to the carrier, and the carrier falls it, this is not felony; yet if the box be broke open, and the goods in it carried away, it is felon; for he hath property in the box to carry it to the place appointed, but he hath no property in the goods in the inside, for that I have referred in my own power, having locked it up out of the power of the carrier to whom it is committed, to any man to take it out of the command of the thing to which he pretends; so if a carrier carries the goods to the place, and then steals them, this is felony; because the property is determined when the goods are come to the place appointed; besides, it is for public convenience that the inside of the box should be considered; otherwise the carrier might steal the things contained in the box, and yet deliver the box itself, which would not be of very

He who hath the bare charge of goods, as a shepherd has of sheep, or a butler of plate, or that has only the special use of goods, as a guerd in an inn, and not ently taking them away, for the offence comes as properly under the word seps, and the fraud is as secret, and the villany more base than if it had been done by a stranger. Mor 246. Phyn. 84. 1 Haw. P. C. 90.

It was formerly a doubt, whether a lodger, by reason of the special property he had in the furniture of his lodgings, could steal goods in tenue absid but now by the 3 & 4 W'. M. cap. 9. it is enacted,

Where the offender is or is not excluded his clergy, or is to be transported.

By the Common law, a person guilty of any crime, which subjected him to the loss of life or member, was allowed his clergy, except in high treason and felony.

And therefore it may be laid down as a good general rule, that whosoever shall be found guilty of his clergy, as he is in petit treason, murder, robbery, burglary, arson, &c., that such denial must be grounded on some act of parliament, which excludes him from the benefit of it. H. P. C. 232. 2 Haw. P. C. 342.

It is also a general rule, that where an offence is made felony by statute, it shall have the benefit of clergy, unless expressly excluded. 2 Haw. P. C. 342.

Where clergy is allowable, those who stand mute, or challenge above twenty, or are outlawed, are as much indicted to it, as those who are convicted. 2 Haw. P. C. 343.

Also a statute, by taking away clergy from those who shall be found guilty, doth not thereby take it from those who stand mute, or challenge above twenty, or are outlawed; but a statute taking it from those who shall be found guilty, extends as well to those who shall confess themselves guilty upon record, as to those who shall be found guilty by verdict. 2 Haw. P. C. 343.

But what we are chiefly to notice here, are the several cases, in which by statute the benefit of the clergy is taken away from this species of felony called larceny: And first, by the 8 Eliz. cap. 4, it is enacted, That no person, who shall be indicted or appealed for feloniously taking any money, goods or chattels from the person of any other, privily without his knowledge, in any place whatsoever, and thereupon found guilty by verdict of 12 men, or shall confess the same upon his or their arraignment, or will not answer directly to the same, according to the laws of the realm, or shall stand wilfully, or of malice, or obtinently mute, or challenge peremptorily above the number of twenty, or shall be upon such indictment or appeal outlawed, shall be admitted to his clergy.

In the first of Ed. 6, cap. 12, and 2 & 3 Ed. 6, cap. 23, Horse-steelers are excluded the benefit of their clergy, and by the latter of the statutes it is enacted, That all persons feloniously taking or stealing any horse, gelding or mare, shall not be admitted to the privilege of the clergy, but shall be put from the same in like manner and form as tho' they had been indicted or appealed for felonious stealing of two horses, two-geldings, or two mares, or any other, and thereupon found guilty by verdict of 12 men, or confessed the same upon their arraignment, or stand wilfully, or of malice mute.

By the 10 & 11 W. 3, cap. 23. All persons, who by night or day shall in any shop, warehouse, coach-house or stable, or freely, or feloniously steal any goods, wares or merchandises of the value of 5s. or more, though such shop, &c. be not broke open, and tho' the owner or any other person be not in such shop, &c. or that will affright, hire or command any person to commit such offence, being thereof convicted, or attained by verdict or confession, shall stand mute, or challenge above twenty of the jury, shall be excluded from the benefit of the clergy.

And by the 12 Ann. cap. 7, it is enacted, That every person, who shall feloniously steal any money, goods or chattels, wares or merchandises of the value of 40s. or more, in or out of dwelling-house, or warehouses, therewith belonging, altho' such house or out-house be not actually broken by such offender, and altho' the owner of such goods, or any other person or persons, be or be not in such house or out-house, or shall affright or aid any person or persons to commit any such offence, being thereof convicted or attainted by verdict or confession, shall stand mute, or challenge above twenty of the jury, shall be absolutely debarred of and from the benefit of the clergy, &c. provided, that nothing in the afo shall extend to apprentices under the age of fifteen years who shall rob their masters as aforesaid.

By the 22 Geo. 2, cap. 5, it is enacted, That no person who shall be indicted for feloniously cutting and taking, stealing or carrying away of any cloth or woollen manufactures from the rack or tenter in the night-time, and thereupon found guilty by the verdict of twelve men, shall have the fame on arraignment, or will not answer directly to the same, belonging to the same, or any other, shall stand wilfully of malice mute, or challenge peremptorily above the number of twenty, or shall be upon such indictment outlawed, shall be admitted to the benefit of the clergy; and by the same act, to steal or imbray any of his Majesty's fall-cloth, cordage or any other of his Majesty's naval stores, is excluded the benefit of the clergy.

It is enacted by 4 Geo. 1, cap. 11, and 6 Geo. 1, cap. 23. 'That where any person or persons shall be convicted of grand or petit larceny, or any felonious stealing or taking of money, goods or chattels, either from the person of any, or from the house of any other, in the same manner, and who by the law shall be intituled to the benefit of the clergy, and liable only to the penalties of burning in the hand or whipping, (except persons convicted for receiving or buying stolen goods, knowing them to be Robyn,) it shall and may be lawful for the court before attained by verdict or confession, or any court, held at the same or at any other place, in the like authority, if they think fit, instead of ordering any such offenders to be burnt in the hand, or whipt, to order and direct that such offenders shall be fent, as soon as conveniently may be, to some of his Majesty's colonies and plantations in America for the space of seven years; and that all such owners or proprietors of such and every subsequent court, with like authority as the former, shall have power to convey, transfer and make over such offenders, by order of court, to the use of any person or persons who who shall contract for the performance of such transportation to him or them, and his and their assigns, for such term of years; and shall be at liberty to take criminals, for which they are excluded from their clergy, and the King shall extend his mercy to them upon condition of transportation to any part of America, and such intention of mercy be signified by a principal secretary of state, it shall be lawful for any court having power to grant the benefit of a pardon, to order and direct the like transportation to any person, who will contract for the performance thereof, of any such offenders; as also of any person convicted of receiving or buying stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, for the term of fourteen years, unless such transportation be general. Sums for such other time as shall be made part of such condition; and such person so contracting, and his assigns, shall have an interest in the service of the said offenders for such term of years: and if any such offender return into Great Britain or Ireland, before the end of his term, he shall be liable to be punished as any person attainted of felony, without the benefit of clergy, &c. provided, that the King may pardon and dispense with any such transportation, and allow of the return of such offender, paying his owner, at the time, such sum as shall be adjudged reasonable by any two justices of the peace, and the chief or any other justices shall be transported, and shall have served their terms, such services shall have the effect of a pardon, as for the crimes for which they were transported.

And it is further enacted, That every such person, or any such court shall order any such offenders to be transferred or conveyed, shall, before such offenders shall be delivered to them, contract with such person as shall be appointed by such court, and shall give sufficient security, to the satisfaction of such court, for the transporting such offenders to some plantation in America, to be ordered by such court, and the procuring an authentication certificate from the government of America, or of the said plantation, certified by the said justices to the next court, held with like authority, to be filed, &c.

And it is further enacted, That all charges, in or about such contracts, &c. shall be born by each county, &c. for which the court was held, and that the respective sureties shall pay the same, and that all securities for the clerk of the peace, &c. and the money recovered shall be to the use of the respective counties.

And it is further enacted, That the persons so contracting, &c. may carry such offenders towards the sea-port, &c. and that if any person shall refuse to deliver them, or to deliver them, shall be deemed guilty of felony without clergy; and that if any felon ordered for transportation shall be afterwards at large within any part of Great Britain, without some lawful cause, before the expiration of his term, and be lawfully convicted thereof, he shall suffer death without clergy, and shall be unable to buy such provisions, or coal delivery for the county where he shall be apprehended, &c. or from whence he was ordered to be transported, &c. and that the clerk of the affize, and clerk of the peace, where such orders of transportation shall be made, shall on request of the prosecutor, &c. certify such transportation, as a sufficient proof of conviction and order of transportation, to the justices of assize, &c. which shall be sufficient proof of such conviction and order of transportation. Larding-money. In the manor of Bradford in com. Wilts, the tenants pay to their landlord a small yearly rent by this name; which is said to be for liberty to feed their hogs with the mast of the Lord's woods; the fat of a hog being called lord. Lariss, Is the French word for thieves. In the statute for view of frank-pledge, made 18 Ed. 3, the fourteenth article, to be given in charge at a leet, is of petty larcenies, as of geese, hens, &c.

Lait, (Sax.) Elefhan, coverts, let. (Fr.) Signifies a barren in general, and particularly a certain weight or measure. As a loaf of pitch, tar or oil, contains fourteen barrels. 32 Hen. 8, cap. 14. A loaf of hides or skins, twelve dozen. 1 Jac. cap. 23. A loaf of cod salt, twelve barrels. 15 Car. 2, cap. 7. A loaf of herrings contains twenty cates, or thousand; every thousand, ten hundred; and every hundred six scores; A loaf of cole-feet is ten quarters and a half; and the like of oats. A loaf of corn, or rape-feet, is ten quarters; in some parts of England, they reckon twenty-one quarters to a loaf of corn. A loaf of wood is twelve facks. A loaf of leather is twenty dickers, and every dicker ten gross, or of the weight of the landing of such offenders, &c. and their not returning by the willful default of such contractor.

And it is further enacted by the 6 Geo. 1. cap. 23. That the court may nominate two or more justices of the peace, for the place where such offenders shall be convicted, who shall have power to contract with any person or persons for the performance of the transportation of such offenders, and to order such and the like security, as the said former act directs, to be taken by order of court, and to cause such felons to be delivered to a such court, and such fear as is, according to the custom payable by the said pardon, to be delivered to the next court, held with like authority, to be filed, &c.

And it is further enacted, That all charges, in or about such contracts, &c. shall be born by each county, &c. for which the court was held, and that the respective sureties shall pay the same, and that all securities for the clerk of the peace, &c. and the money recovered shall be to the use of the respective counties.

And it is further enacted, That the persons so contracting, &c. may carry such offenders towards the sea-port, &c. and that if any person shall refuse to deliver them, or to deliver them, shall be deputed guilty of felony without clergy; and that if any felon ordered for transportation shall be afterwards at large within any part of Great Britain, without some lawful cause, before the expiration of his term, and be lawfully convicted thereof, he shall suffer death without clergy, and shall be unable to buy such provisions, or coal delivery for the county where he shall be apprehended, &c. or from whence he was ordered to be transported, &c. and that the clerk of the assize, and clerk of the peace, where such orders of transportation shall be made, shall on request of the prosecutor, &c. certify such transportation, as a sufficient proof of conviction and order of transportation, to the justices of assize, &c. which shall be sufficient proof of such conviction and order of transportation. Latin, or for Latin. But in the name of a writ, a复合 laltrarius, which entered now being corruptly so called for triftings or tittings. Those matters that could not be determined in the hundred court, were thence brought to the triburing where all the principal men of three or more counties, being summoned by the sheriff or the county bailiff, did debate and decide it; or if they could not, then did send it up to the county court to be there finally determined. Vid. Spelman's ancient Government of England. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Latinism, is used by Sir Edward Coke for an interpreter, 2 pat. Inf. fol. 51. It seems that the word is mistaken, and should be latiturn, because heretofore he that understood Latin, which in the time of the Romans was the prevailing language, might be a good interpreter. Camden agrees, that it signifies a Frenchman or interpreter, and says the word is used in an old inquisition. Britton, fol. 596, says that the word derived up corrupted from the Pr. Lat. lattitum, or latiturn. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Latin. Words which pass under the name of Latin, are of four forts. 1. Good Latin allowed by grammarians. 2. Words significant, and known to the lages of the law, but not allowed by grammarians, nor having any countenance of Latin; and these two are forts within 36 Ed. 3. 6. 15. False or incongruous Latin; this shall abate an original writ, but not vitiate any judicial writ, count, pleading or judgment, (for in all such cases false Latin shall be amended) a nulla fitisitor, it shall not afford or grant an any deed, &c. And therefore false Latin not false English will afford a grant or other deed, but in the intention of the party, as the word is used in an old act. Rept. 132, the second resolution in O'Flahert's case.

Stat. 36 Ed. 3. cap. 15. enacts, That all pleas which shall be pleaded in any court whatsoever within this realm, shall be pleaded, thewed, defended, answered, debated and adjudged in the English tongue, but entered and enrolled in the Latin. Howbeit, the laws and customs of this realm, as also the term and proccess, shall be held and keep as before this time hath been used. Resolved, that this statute as to the first branch was introductive of a new law, but as to the other branches they were a perfect and complete statute, of the due order of things: and before the conquest, the original writs, and all the process and proceedings upon them, were entered in Latin; and infinite records before this time are extant entered in Latin, and yet for the better illustration of the truth, a deed in English, Latin or Dutch, &c. may be entered either in a plea or special case. 10 Rep. 132. b. Mitch. 11. 12. R. R. O'Flahert's case.

False Latin shall not quash an indictment, nor abate any declaration; for altho' the original writ shall abate for false Latin, yet judicial writs, or a fine, shall not be impeached for false Latin. See 5 Gr. Rep. Long's case. But if the word be not Latin, nor a word allowed by the law, (a word, (as the artificer hath its proper terms) but be inoffensive; and if it be in a material point, this makes the indictment insufficient, as burglarlur, mordacium, and the like, are terms of art well known in the law; and therefore if these words, or the like, be mistaken in an indictment, so that there shall be there any illegible or illegible word, which is not Latin, nor any word known in the law, this will make the indictment insufficient and insufficient. See English.

The name of a writ whereby all men in personal actions are called originally to the King's Bench. F.N.B. fol. 78. And it hath the name, as supposing that the defendant doth hunt and lie hid; and therefore being served with this writ, he must put in security for his appearance at the day, for Lattiturns is an interrogative, animo f acundali credi et to esse volentes. But the true original of this writ was this; In ancient time, while the King's Bench was moveable, and followed the King's court, the affidavit was, upon commencing a suit, to fend forth a writ to the sheriff of the county where the action was, and the sheriff returned, Non est inventus in aliqua mar, &c. then was there a second writ filed forth, that had these words, Cam satisfactum est quod latitatum, &c. and thereby the sheriff commanded to attach him in another place where he may be found. Now when the tribunal of the King's Bench came to be fixed, the former affidavit or writ was held for a long time, first sending to the sheriff of Middlesex to summon the party, and if he could not be found there, then to apprehend him wherever; but afterwards, upon pretence of calling the subject, and expediting justice, it was contrived to put both these writs into one, and to attach the party complained of, upon a supposi or fiction, that he was not within the county of Middlesex, but lurking elsewhere; and that therefore he was to be apprehended in any place else, where he was presumed to lie hid, by a writ directed to the sheriff of the county where he is suspected to be. And by this time having united all the writs, the former affidavit or writ was held for a long time, for the bail of the King's Bench, in whose custody, when he be, he may be sued upon an action in that court. Lavatorium, A laundry, or place of washing. Then was it used for any person which, after having been one of a fraternity, was called a fraternity in the porch or entrance, where the priests, and other officiating members were obliged to wash their hands, before they proceeded to divine service. Hence in the statutes of the church of St. Paul in London, it was ordained, a iuris lavatorium in ostiolibus per ferventiam sanctorum faciat. Liber Statut. Ecel. Paul. London MS. fol. 59. 6. The Law

The Law of arms, (Lex armaturarum,) is that which gives precepts, both right and wrong, to all nations, and all nations, to all kings, to all kings, to all men.

The Law of war, (Lex warum,) is that which gives precepts, both right and wrong, to all nations, and all nations, to all kings, to all kings, to all men.

The Law of peace, (Lex pacis,) is that which gives precepts, both right and wrong, to all nations, and all nations, to all kings, to all kings, to all men.

The Law of commerce, (Lex mercatoria,) is that which gives precepts, both right and wrong, to all nations, and all nations, to all kings, to all kings, to all men.

The Law of nation, (Lex nationum,) is that which gives precepts, both right and wrong, to all nations, and all nations, to all kings, to all kings, to all men.

The Law of state, (Lex regum,) is that which gives precepts, both right and wrong, to all nations, and all nations, to all kings, to all kings, to all men.

The Law of church, (Lex ecclesiastics,) is that which gives precepts, both right and wrong, to all nations, and all nations, to all kings, to all kings, to all men.
and therefore from them. They were reduced to the state of freemen, and this is one reason why leases for years are considered as chattels, and go to executors. 3 Bac. Abr. 296.

Another reason was, because at first the leases were made but for a small number of years, (for my Lord Coke tells us, that by the ancient law of England, no man could have a lease for three years, or any part of the amphistoon) and the reason thereof seems to be, because the tenants were only made to serve the occussions and exigencies of the lord in cultivating and improving his demesnes, not to borrow money on, or raise portions for their daughters, or such other uses as are now made thereof; therefore there was no need to extend them to any great length of time, since they might be renewed as often as occasion required; besides, the lees, if they were evicted, being only to recover damages, it would have been fruitless to prolong leases for the term of 1000 years, when the persons who were to pay les was under such leases had no remedy for their damages but by recourse to the representatives of the tenant's heir. Co. Lit. 45. b. 4 Mer. 164, 293. 1 Vent. 53.

Alfo another reason might be, because the leases for years were under the power of the freeholder to destroy by a recovery, for the person coming in by the recovery, was fuppofed to come in by title paramount, and so was not bound or obliged by them, and by confequenf few would be willing to take leases for any long term, which they might fo easily be defeated of. 3 Bac. Abr. 296.

But tho' in the reign of H. 7, it was revofed, that the leefe should not only recover damages as a recompence for the poifeffion loft, but fhoould also recover the poifeffion itfelf: and the statute 21 H. 8. c. 15, gives the tenant the power to ftart a new action. Bac. tit. Leafe 226. F. N. B. 158, 220. Paugb. 127. 4 Co. So. 1 Lev. 46. 2 Med. 18.

And tho' at this day terms for years are multiplied to a much longer duration than they were formerly, and generally ready to recover the term itself, yet the fucceffion continues the fame; for besides the reafon already given, it would be inconvenient to have had no rule of property for short terms, and another for tho' that were longer, being all of the fame nature, and fill no more than leases for years; besides, the difficulty of fixing the just bounds to any precise determinate number of years, since one year is more or lefs, would have made very little difference in reason, were the bounds affixed to leases of never fo long a continuance and long or fhort are only terms of comparifon; as leve for forty years is long with refpect to one of eight or ten years, and yet fhort with refpect to another of a hundred; and that recovery be an uniformity in the law, all leases for years are held to be of let value than eftates for life, as being originally of much floffer duration, and alfo because they were under the power of the tenant of the freehold to deftroy, and therefore are confidered only as chattels, and cafu upon the execution. 3 Bac. Abr. 297.

1. Of what things lesves may be made for years.

2. Things necessarily required in every good lease; and ftatutes concerning lesves.
1. Of what things leases may be made for years.

After such time as leases for years began to be looked upon as fact and permanent interests, and that the lees so made were not to be defiled or destroyed, nor were poissions, against the acts and incroachments as well of the lees as of strangers, men found it their interest to improve and encourage this sort of property, and therefore extended it to all sorts of interests and poissions what­ever, being extended by that known rule, that whatsoever may be granted or parted with for ever, may be granted or parted with for a time; and therefore not only lands and houses have been left for years, but also goods and chattels, tho' the interest of the lees therein differs from the interest he hath in lands and houses for oet for years; for if one lease for years a flock of live cattle, the owner thereof the lees and the goods and chattels, the profits of them during the term; but yet the leas cannot not any revision in them to grant over to another, either during the term or after, till the leaseth re-delivered them to him, as he would have of lands in case of such lease for years, for the leaseth only a possibility of property in case they all outlive the term; for if any of them die during the term, the leessor cannot have them again after the term; and during the term he hath nothing to do with them, as consequently of such as die, the property eat absolutely in the lese; whether they live or die, let all the young ones coming of them, as lambs, calves, and kindred, be to the lees and the profits arising from the principal, since otherwise the leese would pay his rent for nothing; and therefore this differs from a lease of other dead goods and chattels; for there anything be added for the repairing, mending or improving thereof, the lees shall have the improvement thereof, and all additions, together with the principal, after the lease ended, because they cannot be fevered without destroying the principal; neither is the succession of onys, in case any of the old ones die, to be remitted to any corporation aggregate, whereas any in feoff, that feoffed shall be part of the same corporation, the in its public capa cany lived, but this being a lease of such and such individual cattle, when any of them die, the possibility of yeering property, which was left in the lees, is determined and at an end; but the leeseth in such cattle cannot ill, destroy, fell or give them away, during the term, without being an action of trespass, as it should seem; but in case of a lease of a house, together with gods, it is usual to make a schedule thereof, and affix to the lease, and to have a covenant from the lessee to deliver them at the end of the term, and without such yeerion the leeseth would have no other remedy but tro­ble or suit against the grantor of them after the term, as said in Book 300. Gish. 112. 1 Lea. 42. Gown 15. Co. 6 6, 17. Dyer 56. a. 110. a. 212. b. Bre. tit. Leaes 23. Bul­ly 7. Lit. 67. 1 Co. Lit. 57. a.

If one hath a corolory for life, he may let it to another, to the grantor himself; so may the grantee of house­holds, or hay-bote; but in case such lease be to the leeseth himself, rendering rent, he can only have them by way of renter, being to arise out of his own provoue, or is own land. Bre. tit. Leases 40.

But in lands, or other things of inheritance, as they may be granted or departed with for ever, so they may be a time, and consequently may be leased for years in all cases where no inconvenience or injury to the publick like to ensue; for then means private interests must give way to the publick; and what might otherwise in its own nature be secure and allowable, must upon that account be disallowed and blan condemned; wherefore it having been law for cattle for years, as is customary, if as such should go to executors or administrators; the old case wherein we find an objection to a lease for years is, that of the office of marshall of the King's pri­mas, for that being an office of great trust, concerning the administration of justice in the keeping of prisoners, if it could be granted for years, might be very prejudicial, by being in safe charge till the probate of the will or administration taken out; and if the officer should die incumbent, so that none would prove his will, or take out his administration, then there would be no officer at all, and executors or administrators would be in by act of law, without allowance of the court; also it might be a ques­tion whether such office should not be forfeited by outlawry, or be affected in the several courts of justice, and all inconveniences would follow, if such grant for years were allowed; for the same reason it was held likewise, that the offices of Cufnas Præviam, chirographer, clerk of the pipe, of the King's silver, or of the crown, remembrancer or chamberlain of the Exchequer, provosts, wardens, and other offices in the several courts of justice, could not be granted for years; and tho' the offices of thorp and cor­oner were granted for years, till restrained by 1 Ed. 3. c. 7. it was never debated what inconveniences might ensue by allowing thereof; and these reasons held equally good against granting the office of warden of the Fleet, or any other office.

And although it hath been resolved, that the office of the marshall of the King's Bench prono cannot be granted for years, yet it hath been held, that a lease thereof for years during the term of the grantor, as well as if the danger of the office's going to executors is avoided, which the book says is the sole reason why the office is not absolutely granted for years. 6 Med. 57. See (Parthial of the King's Brevile).

All it appears, that the dean and chapter of Waltham made a grant of a tenement in Kent, and the leese had committed several offences which amounted to a forfeiture, for which the office was forfeited, but no objection made to its being let for years. Reyh, 216. 2 Lea. 71. 3 Lea. 32.

But such an officer as do not concern the administration of justice, but only require skill and diligence may be granted for years; because they may be executed by de­puty, without any inconvenience to the publick: therefore where a grant for years was made of the office of garber of spicers in London, it was adjudged to be a good grant, or at least a good appointment for years, within the intent of the statute 1 Jac. 1, cap. 19. Hard. 46.

The office of printer was granted for years 6 Car. 1. and held a good grant, being but an employment: so the office of postmaster was granted to the Lord Stanhope for years, and held good. Hard. 352.

The office of regiller of policies of affurance in London concerning new policies was granted for years, and been, was granted, and adjudged to be a good grant; because it did not concern the administration of justice in any court, but required only the skill of writing after a copy: So the office of making and sealing fisher-man's was granted for years, and allowed to be good; and there several precedents are cited of other offices of a similar nature, in which it is said, that the safety of the realm was concerned, as the office of the warden of a haven or port by H. 6. of gun­powder, 1 C. 1. of making gunpowder by Car. 2. also offices concerning the trade of the realm have been granted for years; as 1 H. 7. of the exchange of money; 18 H. 8. of gaver; 17 Rich 2. of the marshall; a fea belongs to it, with which the officer is intrusted; of the letter office, 3 Car. 1. also offices in courts of justice have been granted for years; as the office of sur­veyor of the green wax, of the fixpenny write in Chan­cery and fisherman's, of comptroller and custome, and of making proclives in C. B. all this, and several others, have been granted for years; but no dispute having been made of the validity of them, how far some of them would hold at this day, may be a question. Hard. 354, 357. Dyer 39. 3 H. 146. 3 Lea. 50.

But where one made a grant for years of theeward­ship of a court of record, and held good as to the court-­leas being a judicial office, but good as to the court­baron, being only ministerial, and the suitors judge thereof; but the grant appearing afterwards to be for years, determinable upon the death of the leeseth, it was held good for both, because there was no danger of its coming to executors or administrators. 2 Lev. 245. 2 Jew. 146.
One Mrs. Dennis was found by office to be an ideot a naturitave; the King grants the custody of the body and estate to Sir Alexander Treasour, his executors and administrators, during the ideot; Sir Alexander dies, and then the King grants the custody to Mr. Predgers; and whether he or the executors of Sir Alexander had the better title, was the question; it was said to be a truth in the King, and therefore not grantable to executors or administrators, and that if the grantee die intestate, there would be none to take care of the ideot. On the other side it was said, he had not only a true, but an interest, and might have disposed of the profits to his own use, or grant them over as he thought fit, for the use of an ideot, though it was otherwise in case of a lunatick, and that it being a chattel should naturally go to executors; and to this opinion my Lord Chancellor inclined, but directed the validity of the patent to be tried at law; and in H. R. the grant to Sir Alexander was held good; for the King has the same interest in an ideot that he had in his ward, which always went to the executor of his grantee, tho' it was otherwise in the case of a lunatick. 2 Clau. Ca. 70. 1 Vern. 9, 137. 3 Med. 43.

The office of park-keeper was granted for years, and no objection made to it; for this does not concern the ad- ministration of justice, but only requires diligence and care. 2 Rel. Rep. 274. 4 Grot. 413.

Dignities or honours cannot be granted for years, as to be earl, duke, baron, &c. because then they must go to the executors or administrators, which the estate that should support them would go to the heir, and so introduce confusion and absurdity. Ca. Lit. 16. 8. Ca. 97. 8.

By 23 H. 6. cap. io, it is provided, That no thrift shall let to farm in any manner his county, nor any of his bailiwicks, hundreds or wapentakes; which proves that before this statute it was not usual to let them to farm. By the 12 Car. 2. cap. 23. fet. 27. The Lord Treasour or Commissioners of the Treasury for the time being, have power to let to farm all or any the rates or duties of excise upon beer, ale, cider and other liquors therein mentioned, so as the same exceed not the term of three years; without which clause the Treasurer or Commissioners of the Treasury could not have made such lease, though perhaps the King himself might, having the absolute interest and ownership therein.

By the 2 Car. 2. cap. 25. fet. 3. Power is given to the King's agents for granting of wine licences to any person or persons for any time or term not exceeding twenty-one years, if such person or persons shall for long time and shall be agreed on, to be paid half-yearly; and such licence not to be granted to any but those who personally use the trade of selling by retail, or to the landlord of such house; nor shall the same be assignable, or of any benefit but only to the first taker.

By the 12 Car. 2. c. 25. f. 16. it is provided, that his Majesty, his heirs and successors, may grant the office of Post-Master General, with all profits, fees, &c. to any person or persons for life, or term of years, not exceeding twenty-one years, under such rents and covenants as shall be thought best for the good of the kingdom.

By Cap. 29. c. 14. fet. 6. Power was given to the maker and chaplains of the Savoy, to encourage the rebuilding thereof, to demise any of the lodgings for any term not exceeding forty years, under such rents as they could procure, without renewing.

2. Things necessarily required in every good lease; and statutes concerning leases.

Regularly these things must concur to the making of every good lease: 1st. There must be a lefso, (as in other grants) and he must be a person able, and not restrained to make a lease; 2dly. There must be a leaseable, and he must be capable of the thing demised, and not disabled to receive it. 3dly, There must be a thing demised, and such a thing as is demisable. 4thly, If the thing demisable be not grantable without a deed, or the party demising not able to grant without a deed, the lease must be made by deed; and if so, then there must be a sufficient description or setting forth of the person of the lessor, lessee, and the thing leased, and all the necessary circumstances, as sealing, delivery, &c. required in other grants must be observed. 5thly, If it be a lease for years, it must have a certain commencement, at least when it comes to take effect in interest or possession, and once to cease, generally either by an express enumeration of years, or by reference to a certain event that is expired, or by reducing it to a certainty upon some contingency preceding by matter or post facto, and then the contingency must happen before the death of the lessor or lessee. Only, There must be all needful ceremonies, a lively of the effects, and a proper form for the like, in cases where they are requisite. 7thly, There must be an adequate price for the thing demised, and of the estate by the lessee; but whether any rent be refered upon a lease for life, years, or at will, or not, it is not material, except only in the cases of leases made by tenant in tail, husband and wife, and ecclesiatical persons. 1 W't's Cases Comy. 685.

Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 28. fet. 1. All leases made of any manors, lands, &c. by wills intestate for term of years or life by any person of full age, having an estate of inheritance either in fee-simple or in fee-tail, in their own right, or in the right of their churches or wives, or in the right of their executors, shall be good in law.

Selt. 2. This aet shall not extend to leases of any lands to be made of any manors, lands, &c. being in the hands of any farmers by virtue of an old lease, unless the same old lease be expired, surrendered or ended, within one year after the making of the new lease; nor shall extend to any grant of any reversion, nor to any lease of lands which have not most commonly been letten to farm by the space of twenty years next before such lease made, nor to any lease to be made without impecumishment of waife, nor to any lease to be made above the number of twenty-one years, or three lives, from the time of the last cession; and upon such lease there shall be referred yearly to make rent, or money; All such hath been most accurately paid for the lands so letten in twenty years next before. And every person, to whom the reversion of such lands shall appertain after the deaths of such lessors, shall have like remedy against the lessees as the lessor might have had.

Selt. 3. Provided, that the wife be made party to every such lease made by her husband of any lands being the inheritance of the wife, and that every such lease be made by indenture in the name of the husband and his wife, and fine to the same, and that the rent be refered to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the wife, according to his charter; and that the husband shall not alien the rent longer than during the husband's life, without it be by fine levied by the husband and wife. Selt. 4. This aet shall not give power to any person to take more farms than he might have done, nor give power to any parson or vicar to make any lease of any churchings, lands, tithe, &c. belonging to their churches or vicarages, otherwise than they might have done.

Selt. 5. No fine or other aet done by the husband only of any manors, lands, &c. being the inheritance or freehold of his wife, shall be any discontinue thereunto or refered to the wife or her heirs, but that they may enter according to their right, and whereas the wife is party and privy only excepted.

Selt. 7. This clause shall not give liberty to such wife or her heirs, to avoid any lease made of any inheritance of the wife according to this aet.

Stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 19. fet. 7. All grants made by any archbishop or bishop, or any others, upon the pollutions of his bishopprick, to any parson (other than to the Queen) whereby any estate should pass, other than for term of twenty-one years, from such time as such grant should begin, and whereupon the old rent or mort should be voided.

Stat. 1 Eliz. cap. 5, fet. 3. All leases, conveyance or eftates, to be made by any master and fellows of an college, dean and chapter of any church, master or great diacon of any hospital, parson, vicar or any other having ecco unreserved be dealings of any hereditaments, being parcel of the possessions of such spiritual promotion (other than for the term of one and twenty years, or thereon from the time such lease shall be made, whereupon the accrued yearly rent or more shall be payable yearly during the term) shall be void.

Sect. 4. This act shall not make good any lease made by benefices for one hundred years than are limited by the privy statutes of the college.

Sect. 5. This act shall not extend to any lease to be made upon surrender of any lease heretofore made, or by reason of any covenant contained in any lease now confinuing, so that the lease to be made do not contain more of the freedom of the years of the former lease, nor less rent than is reserved in the former lease. Declared to include head houses by 14 Eliz. cap. 14.

Sect. 13 Eliz. cap. 20. sect. 1. No lease to be made of any benefice or ecclesiastical promotion with cure, or any part thereof, so improper, shall induce longer than while the benefice shall be ordinarily refided, and serving the cure of such benefice without absence above fourfoorde days in any one year, but every such lease immediately upon such abstinence shall cease, and the incumbent to offending landlord lose one year's profit of his benefice to be determined by the ordinary among the poor of the parish. And all charges and impediments shall be void, and no such lease shall endure no longer than during such tenant's residence without absence above forty days in any one year. This act to continue to the end of the next parliament.

Made perpetual, 3 Car. I. cap. 4.

Sect. 14 Eliz. cap. 11. sect. 15. All bonds, covenants, promises and covenants to be made for suffering any person to enjoy any benefice or ecclesiastical promotion with cure, or to take the profits thereof other than such bonds and covenants as shall be made for assurance of such lease, shall be void. And any lease heretofore made, ordinarily for such force, and of otherwise, as leases by the fame persons made of such benefices and ecclesiastical promotions with cure.

Sect. 16. All leases, bonds, promises and covenants, worrying benefices and ecclesiastical livings with cure to be void, shall be of no other force than the fame had been made by the reserved person himself that dedicated the same to cure or curate.

Sect. 17. The said branch of 13 Eliz. cap. 10. shall extend to any lease of houses situate in any market town, so that such house be not the dwelling house used by the inhabitant of the persons, nor have ground to the same belonging above the said house.

Sect. 18 Eliz. cap. 6. sect. 1. No matter, proof, affidavit, warden, dean, governor, rector or chief ruler any college, cathedral church, hall or house of learning, or any corporation, or the corporation of the same, shall make any lease for years or years of their lands to the which any titheable land, meadow or pasture, shall appertain, except to third of the old rent to be referred in corn, viz., in good corn, after 6s. 8d. the quarter or under, and four times the quarter or under, to be delivered annually at the said colleges, etc., and for default thereof to pay to the said colleges, etc., in ready money, at the election of the lessors, after the rate of the best wheat and all in the market of Cambridge, for the rents that are to be paid to the houses there, and in the market of Winchester, for the rents that are to be paid to the houses there; and in the market of Windsor, for the rents that are to be paid to the houses there; and in the market of London, for the rents that are to be paid to the house at the next market day before the rent shall be due, without fraud, and all leases otherwise to be made, all collateral bonds or assurances to the contrary shall be void. The same wheat, malt or money, to be tended to the relief of the commons, and diet of the college, etc., only, and by no fraud sold away from the profit of the colleges, etc., upon pain of deprivation of the governor and chief rulers of the said colleges, etc., and all other penalties.

Sect. 3. This act shall not extend to any lease to be made by the president and scholars of the college of St. John Baptist in Oxford, to any heir male of Sir Thomas White, late knight and alderman of London, founder of the said college, which lease shall be made according to the mea- sure of the foundation and statutes of the said college, of the manor of Fitzfield, and all other hereditaments.

Stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 9. sect. 8. All judgments and decrees shall be void, for the intent to have or enjoy any lease contrary to the statutes 15 Eliz. cap. 20. 14 Eliz. cap. 11. and 18 Eliz. cap. 6. shall be void, as bonds or covenants made for that purpose are appointed to be void by this act. Stat. 29 Geo. 2. cap. 31. sect. 1. Where any person under the age of twenty-one years, or a lunatick, or feme covert, is interested in, or intituled to, any lease for life or lives, or for any term of years, either absolute, or determinable upon the death of one or more persons, or otherwise, it shall be lawful for the other person or persons on his behalf, and for such lunatick, as his guardian or committee of the estate, or other person on his behalf, and for such feme covert, or any person on her behalf, to apply to the court of Chancery of Great Britain, the court of Exchequer, or the court of the counties palatine of Chester, Lancaster and Durham, or the courts of great feoffion of Wales respectively, by petition or motion in a summary way; and by the order of the said courts respectively, made upon hearing all parties concerned, to perform under the age of twenty-one, and such lunatick or person appointed by the said courts respectively, and such feme covert, by and for the deeds only, without levying any fines, shall be enabled to surrender such lease, and accept in the name and for the benefit of such person under the age of twenty-one, or lunatick, or feme covert, one or more new leases of the premises comprised in such lease surrendered, for such number of lives, or term of years determinable upon such number of lives, or term of years absolute, as was mentioned in such lease so surrendered, at the making thereof, or otherwise, as the said courts shall direct.

Sect. 2. All money and other consideration advanced by any such guardian or other person for a fine or other income for the renewal of any such lease, and all reasonable charges and expenses, shall be paid out of the effects of the infant or lunatick for whose benefit the said lease is renewed, or shall be a charge upon such leasehold premises, with interest as the said courts shall respectively direct, and concerning leases to be made upon surrender by feme covert, and leasehold premises, for a fine or consideration of such lease, and the reasonable charges, be otherwise paid and secured, the same, with interest shall be a charge upon such leasehold premises, for the use of such person who advances the same.

Sect. 3. The leases to be so renewed shall be to the same uses, and liable to the same trufts, charges, dispositions, devi- sions and conditions, as the leases surrendered.

Sect. 4. Every such surrender, and such lease granted thereupon, shall be as valid as if such surrender had been made by and for the use and behalf of a person of full age, sane mind, or not married.

The page contains a legal document and requires careful transcription due to its complex nature. The text is written in a formal style, typical of legal or court documents, and includes terms like "executor," "appurtenances," and "families," indicating it pertains to inheritance matters. Without a more detailed transcription of the full document or a clearer view of the specific page, it's challenging to provide a coherent summary. However, the general theme suggests it deals with matters of estate management, inheritance, and property rights. The text is dense and requires specialized knowledge to fully understand its implications and applications.
Lea and release. A conveyance by lease and release, is where he who is to convey any lands or tenements shall make a lease (or bargain and sale) of the premises to the person to whom the estate is to be conveyed in six months, a year or thereunto, but usually for a year, to be as good, the grantor of the estate by virtue of the estate hereby to be conveyed to a third party, for the consideration stipulated for by the said lease, or for aforesaid, or other considerations, or for the purpose of bringing the land into a better state, for the benefit of the lessee, and heirs for ever, and the lessee (or releasee or assigns) of the estate hereby to be conveyed shall execute the same as aforesaid, and shall take and hold the estate hereby to be conveyed to him, or in consideration, for the consideration aforesaid, or for the purpose of bringing the estate hereby to be conveyed into a better state, for the benefit of the lessee, and heirs for ever.

Lease and release not to be void by the failure of consideration. — Where a lease and release are made, and the estate to be conveyed is not consummated, the lease and release shall not be void, but shall continue in force, and shall be void only if the lease and release be for a specified term, or for a term not less than one year, and the person for whose use and benefit the estate is to be conveyed is not made. The lease and release shall be void if the consideration for the lease and release is not paid, or if the lessee or releasee fails to perform the terms of the lease and release.

Lease and release not to be void by the death of the lessee or releasee. — Where a lease and release are made, and the lessee or releasee dies, the estate to be conveyed shall not be void, but shall pass to the heirs of the lessee or releasee, or to the person for whose use and benefit the estate is to be conveyed.

Lease and release not to be void by the failure of the consideration. — Where a lease and release are made, and the consideration for the lease and release is not paid, the estate to be conveyed shall not be void, but shall pass to the person for whose use and benefit the estate is to be conveyed.
If a man occupies as tenant; suffrage, a lease, will not enure to him for want of privity. Lit. sect. 461, 462.

His being tenant at suffrage is not sufficient to vest any estate in him for want of privity between them; and a lease to him, as to him who had the reversion, is void, because he had not any poissession, there being no estate in him; and an estate cannot be vested in him in reversion by this means. If tenants for life relesse to him in the reversion, it is void by way of release; and it cannot pass as a surrender for want of apt words.

But where a man is in possession by virtue of a lease at will, there a release shall operate by reason of the privy ity which he had in the premises. And it is in vain to make an estate by livery of feisin to another who has the possession before. Lit. sect. 461, 462.

Thirdly, with respect to the words in a release; If I let land for life or years, and release all the right I have without the word heirs, this at the Common law is but an estate for life; but if I release to him or his heirs, or to him and the heirs of his body, then this is an inheritance. Lit. sect. 465.

Fourthly, with respect to recitals, the uses, conditions, defeasances, warranties and covenants: A release may have one or more recitals in it (which is most commonly the easement) and it is not void without any. 1 Wood's Cony. 716.

If the words, to the only use and behoof of the said A. B. and his heirs and assigns for ever, or such like words, are not recited, then the release executes by the statute of uses, and the truth is void. 1 Wood's Cony. 716.

Where no use is declared, it is to the use of the releasor and heir. 1 Wood's Cony. 716.

Where a release is made to A. B. his heirs and assigns for ever, to the only use and behoof of the releasor, his heirs and assigns for ever, in truth for the said C. D. (which said C. D. must be a party to the deed, and a confidereion of 5l. to be for or by the releasor and the purchase money declared to be paid to C. D. the cestui que trufy) if these words are not in the deed, then the eale executes by the statute of uses, and the truth is void. 1 Wood's Cony. 716.

In case of lease and releas to make a tenant to the prativi in a common recovery, if the release is made to the tenant and his heirs; it must also be to the use of him, his heirs and assigns for ever; for the release must be absolute tenant of the freehold. 1 Wood's Cony. 717.

A release that enures by way of paimng away an eale, &c. may be made upon condition, or with a defeasance; for such a condition may be contained in the release, or delivered at the same time with it. Co. Lit. 236.

And altho' there may be warranties, covenants, and such additions in releas, (which is usally the cafe) yet they are good without them. 1 Wood's Cony. 717.

A. devised lands to J. S. and his heirs, but the will was defeavily executed out of a afterwards the heir, in consideration of 100 guineas paid him by J. S. the devisee, by deed, reciting that this will was duly executed, released to the devisee all his right to the eale devised; and after that, there being debts appointed by the will to be paid, the devisee told the heir, that it would facilitate the raising of the money for the payment of the debts, if he (the heir) would join in a lease and releas of the devisee premises; and thereupon, for fifty guineas more paid to the heir, he, together with the devisee, by lease and releas conveyed the premises to J. N. and his heirs in consideration of 400l. mentioned to be paid by J. N. and his heirs, which was given; but in truth this purchase-money was not paid, but J. N. was only trustee for J. S. The court fer aplied this lease and releas, upon payment of the 150 guineas and interest; and said, either faggesia vix, or faggesia falsi, is a good reason to fer aplied any releas or conveyance; and that to recite in a deed or release that the will was duly executed, when it was not, is faggesia falsi, and to conceal from the heir (as here) that the will was not duly executed, is faggesia vix. 1 Will. Lecturnum, A bed; sometimes all that belongs to bed. Flor. Warr. pag. 631.

Lecturn, In London and other cities there are the lec- turers or preachers in many of the churches. They are generally chosen by the vestry or chief inhabitants; and are usually the afternoon preachers. There are also one or more lec- turers in most cathedral churches; and many lec- turerships have likewise been founded by the donation of private persons, as Lady Molyne's at St. Paul's, and many others: And it seems generally that the bishop's power is only to judge as to the qualification and fitness of the persons, and not as to the right of the ecurthep. As in the case of the churchwardens of St. Bartholomew's, M. 12 W. 1. one Fishburne lett 25 Apr. 3 a year C.

Provided, that the lector should be chosen by the parochioners, and to preach on any day in every week as they should see fit. The physician fixed on Thursday, and chose a lector every year; and now Mr. Turton being lecturer, and the parson having chosen Mr. Rainier, the other churchwardens not being of the choice; whereas the church- wardens that Turton out of the church. Afterwards the bishop of London determined in his favour, and granted in inhibition and monition for that purpose. But by Hilt Chief Justice; a prohibition must go try to the right is; it is true a man cannot be a lector, without a licence from the bishop or a tribun; but their power is only as to the qualification and fitness of the person, and not as to the right of the lectorship; and the ecclesiastical court may punish the churchwardens, if they will not open the church to the parson, or to any one acting under him, but if they refuse to open it to any other. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 39, 69, 66.

Legate. (Legatus.) Is a particular thing given by a man to a particular person, and received by him to whom such legacy is given, is called the legatee.

If a man transfer his whole right or estate to another, that the Civilians call He-rate, but we call him heir only, to whom all a man's lands and hereditaments defend by right of blood.

A legacy is defined a gift or bequest of a particular thing by testament, in which an executor is named, or lands and hereditaments defend by right of blood.

If a man covenants with j. s. to pay him 20l.

and afterwards by will he devises to him 20l. in discharge of the said covenant, this is not a legacy fiable in the spiritual court, but remains still a debt, recoverable at Common law. 2 Lean. 119.

But if A. covenants with J. S. that he will pay 20l.

a-piece to B. C. and D. and afterwards he devises 20l.

to B. C. and D. in discharge of this covenant, there are good legacies, and recoverable in the spiritual court; the covenant in this case being with a flayer, and therefore B. C. and D. have no remedy, but the

A specifick legacy is a gift or bequest of a particular thing, such as the testator's horse, cow, er. and differs from a pecuniary legacy, or a sum of money, in that the legatee is not, in case of deficiency of estates, to be

If a man devise his personal estate at H., that is as much a specifick legacy, as if he had enumerated the several particulars of it, and told the other legacies full

If the testator devise his personal estate at A. and his personal estate at B. and then devises a legacy out of his personal estate, and has no personal estate but what lies in those two places, the pecuniary legacy must be paid out of these specifick legacies thus particularly defined. Precod. Chan. 393.

If a horse or a term of years, which is specifically devised to another, be taken in execution by creditors on a judgment obtained, (as they may be) the specifick le-gatee shall have recompense in equity against the executors, or redivisary legatees, for the value, who are to have nothing till after the debts and legacies are paid.

Precod. Chan. 393.

If j. s. having 4000l. secured on him by bond in the names of A. and B. in trust for himself, devised it to his daughter, (now married to the plaintiff) and made her redivisary legate, and by the same will devised a lease he had in farm to R. D. and there not appearings affairs to

R. D. was for the payment of debts; afterwards, by decree of this court, the 40. cl. was adjudged to be to pay debts, and was brought into court, there to remain for this purpose; the plaintiff proposed to have what remained of the 4000l. paid out of court to his own estate being afterwards sold for payment of debts; and, the defendant R. D. opposed it till he had first had a satisfaction out of it for the value of the farm devised to him, and for the payment of debts; the court held, that the devise of this money was a specifick legacy, and therefore R. D. can have but a proportionable part of it. App. in the specifick legacy out of it. Abb. Eq. 208. Lord Cowper v.

Lord Fultinhaw 1. 126.
1. What words shall be deemed sufficient to give a legacy.

2. What shall be a sufficient description of the person to take, and of the thing given.

3. What shall be deemed an ademption or extinguishment of a legacy; and where a legacy shall be presumed to be a satisfaction of a debt or duty owing from the testator.

4. Of voided or lapsed legacies.

5. Of abuses, refunding, and giving security for that purpose; and of residual legacies and legaties.

1. What words shall be deemed sufficient to give a legacy.

Here we must observe, that although in grants and deeds of gift the law requires a certain form of words, yet in last wills and testaments, which are premised to be made at the time when the testator is in his senses, the law regards chiefly the intention of the testator, and therefore any words, which manifest his intention to create or give a legacy, will be sufficient for that purpose. Gedolph. 281.

2. What shall be a sufficient description of the person to take, and of the thing given.

It seems agreed, that if a man devizes legacies to all his children and grandchildren, that this extends only to those who were in life at the time when the will was made, for then the will speaks, and none born after are to be let in, unless there had been future words in the will, to all his children or grandchildren which should be born or be living at his death. Vern. 153. Wurbam v. Brown.

3. Of abuses, refunding, and giving security for that purpose; and of residual legacies and legaties.

If any devise his land for payment of his debts and legacies, and devises also a-piece to two of his children, to be devised to his children, and if any one of them should think fit; the third shall have 200l also, and be made equal to the other devises, if the estate will hold out. 2 Vern. 153. Wurbam v. Brown.
death, one year’s wages; per Lord Keeper, Stewards of courts, and such who are not obliged to spend their whole time with their master, but may also serve any other master, at 6s. for every foon of the will; but I will not narrow it to such servants only who lived in the testator’s house, or had diet from him. 2 Vern. 546.

A. gave legacies of 15 l. a-piece to each of his relations of his father and mother’s side, and gave the for- lopus of his personal effate to R. and made C. his executor; the executor paid 15 l. to the testator’s cousin German, and 15 l. a-piece to her four children; and the court allowed the payment to the children, and would not refrain the devide to the relations within the nature of distributions. 2 Vern. 381. Jones v. Bland.

3. What shall be deemed an ademption or extinguishment of a legacy; and where a legacy shall be presumed to be a satisfaction of a debt or duty owing from the testator. Swinburne distinguishes between the ademption and translation of a legacy; the first, he says, is the taking of a legacy which is bequeathed, which may be done by an express revocation thereof, or by the court, secretly and by implication, as by giving away, or voluntarily alienating the thing devise. Translation of a legacy is the befallowing of the same upon another, which is likewise an ademption; and therefore there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption.

The ademption of a legacy is no more to be presumed than the revocation of the testament, unles it be proved; and therefore if the testator bequeaths all the corn in his barn, and lives after the making of his will till all the corn is spent, and other corn is put in the place thereof, this spending of the corn is no ademption of the legacy, and therefore the legatary shall have such corn as is found in the barn when the testator dieth, unles the corn found in the barn at the death of the testator be greater in quantity than was the corn at the time of the will made, for so much is it and not a greater quantity than was the first. Swinb. 522.

If so the testator bequeath a ship, and afterwards, by piece-meal, repairs and renawes the same, so that there remaineth nothing of the old ship but only the bottom-tree, there is no ademption of the legacy, but the legate may take as much as the ship shall be worth. Swinb. 523.

If a man bequeath a house, which afterwards he voluntarily pulls down, or which is blown down by the wind, or is consumed by fire, and afterwards erects a new house where the old house stood; Swinburne is of opinion, that the legatee in neither of these cases can have the new house, it being a general rule of the Civil law, that a house bequeathed being destroyed, if the tes- fator build another in the same place, the legacy is ex- tinguished, unles the meaning of the testator were other wise. Swinb. 523-4.

But if the testator do bequeath an house, and after wards, by piece-meal, repair the same, so that there is no part of the old matter or fluff remaining, the will of the testator is not hereby presumed to be changed; so therefore the legatee may recover the house so repaired for it is deemed to be the same house full in law. Swinb. 523-

If so, if the testator, being confirmed by necessity, is for the payment of his debts, supplying himself or his family with food and necessaries, &c. alienate the thing bequeathed; this is no ademption of the legacy, and therefore the executor is bound to redeem the same, or to pay the full value thereof to the legatee. Swinb. 524.

So if the thing bequeathed be not fully alienated, as it be pledged or pawned, the legacy is not thereby extin- guished; and therefore the executor in this case is bound to redeem the same, and to restore it to the legatee, or to pay the price thereof, if he suffered it to be forfeited. Swinb. 525.

If a legacy be given to one perfon, and afterwards to another, the same thing is given to another perfon as this is an ademption of the legacy as to the first person, if the utmost confidence shall be presumed in the testator to the contrary appears; and therefore in this case they shall divide the legacy between them. Swinb. 528.

If a man bequeath a legacy in these words, I give to my niece A. 500 l. which my sister B. has now in her hands of mine, as by bond appears; at after the money is paid in, and ten years after pay- ment thereof the testator dies, yet the legacy is good though the security is altered; for by the words, it more is intended but that the legacy should be as to all intents and purposes the same. Raym. 325, 326.

So where a man devised in the following manner, I give and devise to A. my good and only uncle, the sum of 500 l. that is to say, that bond and judge gave me for 400 l. and 100 l. in money, and mak-
The intention of the testator being the prevailing rule to go by in the construction of wills, it is often from thence established as doctrine, that wherever a provision, by his will, gives a legacy as great or greater than the debt he owes to the legatee, that such legacy should be a satisfaction of the debt, on the presumption that a man must be intended just before he is bountiful, and that his intent is to be given due effect.

As where a man by marriage settlement provides 400l. for daughters, and having two daughters, by will gives them 200l. a-piece for their portions, without taking notice of this, it is held, that the 200l. a-piece should be a satisfaction of the portion by the settlement.

2 Ferm. 111. Bluet v. Bluet, cited to have been adjudged.

So where a man had prevailed on his wife to join in falling 7. 10l. per annum of her jointure, and after 6l. 10l. per annum, more, and having given two several notes, that his executor should pay her the said two several sums during life, he afterwards makes his will, and thereby gives her 14l. per annum during life, cut of certain lands; and this was held to be a satisfaction of the notes.

So where one settles his estate on trustees, to be held for payment of his debts, with power of revocation, then he marries a daughter, gives her a portion, and covenants that the husband shall have the estate 1500l. cheaper than any other; afterward he, by will, revokes the settlement, gives the husband 1500l. and dies, and the legacy was held to be in satisfaction of the 1500l. secured by the settlement.

So if A. by marriage articles, agrees to leave his wife 800l. and her jewels, &c. but it is declared, that notwithstanding he still owed her 100l. and that nothing else, he should give her by will; and A. by will, makes a disposition of his whole estate among his children, &c. and gives his wife 1000l. the wife must wave the articles, or the will, for the cannot have both; for his making a disposition of the whole estate, shows that he intended that every part should be performed.

So where a child, intituled by his father's marriage articles to a share of his father's personal estate, has a legacy given to him by the will of his father; and it was held, that if he was to take the legacy, he must waive the benefit of the articles.

2 Ferm. 553.

So where a Freeman of London made his will, and devised legacies to his children more than their orphanage parts would amount to, without taking any notice whatsoever of the cullion; and it was held by the Muller of London, that if he omitted such legacies, he must waive the benefit of the articles.

2 Ferm. 551.

Though the cullion on this head have prevailed thus far on the circumstances attending them, and the intention of the testator, yet as a legacy is a gift or gratuity, it is to receive the most favourable construction; and therefore if it be less than the sum due, payable on a contingency or future day, on the like and the like circumstances attendant; it is an exceptional bounty, and not a satisfaction: And in all these cases the intention of the party ought to be the rule.

1 Salk. 508.

As if A. give a bond to B. her servant to pay her 20l. per annum, quarterly, for her life, free from taxes; and B. pay, without taking notice of the bond, gives 20l. per annum, for her life, payable half yearly, but not paid.
free of taxes; B. shall have both the annuities, for that, by the will, not being so advantageous as the first, cannot be premised a satisfaction. 2 Vern. 478. Atkinson v. English, 110. 9 Ves. Ch. Jan. 28. S. C.

So where A. on his marriage covenanted to purchase and settle a jointure of 20l. per ann. on his intended wife, and if he died before such purchase or settlement made, she should have 300l. out of his estate for her own use; the marriage was never had, and the deed died, but the will was made; but by his will he devised to his wife 330l. for her life, with power to dispense of 30l. part thereof at her death; and it was held, 1. That she had a right to 30l. and intereft, and that the executor could not now be at liberty to settle 20l. per ann. as the tefteator might have done. 2. That she should be at liberty to settle 30l. as an additional bounty and provisiton for her wife. 2 Vern. 505. Perry v. Perry.

4. Of voided or lapsed legates.

It seems by the rule of the Civil law, and by the cafes on this head, that if a legacy be devifed to J. S. and he dies in the life-time of the tefteator, that the legacy is lapsed, being no fuch perfon to take at the time when the will is to take effect. Abr. Eq. 296. 297.

So where A. by will, retaining certain sums to his wife, and devising 400l. to him, provided he be out of 40l. paid severally sums in the will mentioned to his wife and children, and the refl and residue he freely and absolutely gave to him, and willed and required the executor to deliver up the security immediately upon his death, and not to claim or pledge the debt, or any part thereof, but to give such releafe or discharge, as B. his executors or administrators, fhould require or think fit; B. died in the life-time of the tefteator; and it was held, that the money directed to be paid the wife and children was well devifed; but as to the releafe devifed to the debtor himself, that it was a lapsed legacy, he dying in the life-time of the will, that it was not admitted, that if the tefteator had faid, I forgive fuch a debt, or that my executor fhall not demand it, or fhall releafe it, that would have been a good releafe of the debt, tho' the debtor died in the life-time of the tefteator. 2 Vern. 521. Elliot v. Davenport.

A. devifed an effate to his wife, and after to the plaintiff, his niece, and her heirs, upon condition and to the intent that she pay 40l. to fuch perfonn, as his wife by her will in writing, or any other writing, fhould direct and appoint, and dies; the wife after marries a fecond husband, and then makes a will, appoints the 40cl. to be paid to her husband, his executors or administrators, and that when he fhall have fully received the 40cl. he fhall pay 100l. out of it to B. 50l. to C. and 50l. to D. and makes her husband her executor; and then goes on, and fays, that he has published this her laft will and teflament in the presence of three witnesfes; and the husband fubfcribed that he does not approve of this will; afterwards the husband dies before her, and makes her executrix of his will and reftatory legate; then B. and C. die, both inteftate, and afterwards the wife dies, and the defendants take out administration to her, with the will annexed, and also administration to B. and C. and the apportionment was, whether this appointment being made by will, and the appointee dying before the appointor, this fhould be in the nature of a legacy, and fo the appointment void, the teflatrix surviving the nominee; my Lord Keeper held, that if it was a thing purely teflamentary, it would be plainly a lapsed legacy, but that in this cafe the 40cl. was not in its own nature teflamentary, but was taken as nones, and it is but the execution of a trufl; and decreed the money to be paid. Abr. Eq. 796. Barnet v. Holgrave.

So where E. made her will, and devifed in thofe words, I give unto my loving kinman R. H. the form of 300l. one and a half years after my decease, or if before, which I intend to give to my cousin S. H. his youngeft daughter; but my will and defeft, that he will give the said 300l. to his daughter S. H. at the time of his death, or fooner, if there be occasion, for her better advancement and the will, in case either died before the time of payment, a new substitutive devise of the whole 100l. to the survivor; and decreed accordingly. *Air. Eq. 295. Sedding v. Green.

5. Of abating, refunding, and giving security for that procures, and of reducible legates and legatees.

Pecuniary legates fall ablaze in proportion to the deficiency of assets; and therefore if the ecclesiastical court go about to compel an executor to pay a legacy without security to refund, a prohibition will be granted; for that in this case no pay the legatey without such caution is not a security, yet he is not obliged to. *Cris. Eliz. 467. Mov. 413. Owen 72. Allen 40.

So if a man devise several legacies, as 100l. to one, and 50l. to another, &c. there aliquo he directs the legacy of 100l. to be paid in the first place, yet if the other legacies fall short, then the legatee of 100l. must make a proportionable abatement of his legacy. 1 Fern. 31. Brown v. Allen.

So if a legacy be given to executors for care and pains, yet this shall give such legacy no preference, but the executor must abate in proportion. 2 Fern. 433. Pettit v. Redman.

As to refunding and abating, it seems clear, that creators may com. al legates in equity to refund when assets become deficient, aliquo there was no provision made for refunding at the time the legacies were paid. 1 Fern. 94. 1 Fern. 358, 360. 2 Fern. 205.

So where A. being indebted to B. made C. his executor, and C. wafted the estate, and died, having defived several legacies, and made D. executor, which legacies D. paid, and B. having exhibited a bill against D. the executor of C. for his debt due from the first testator, and against the legatees in the will of C. to compel them to refund their legacies, there not being sufficient assets if the first testator, it was declared accordingly; for a refidor may follow the assets in equity, in whole hands ever t ey come. 1 Fern. 162. 2 Fern. 205. laid own as a rule.

Alle one legatee may compel a pecuniary legatee to fund where the assets become deficient, aliquo there was no provision made for refunding, aliquo he hath full re-acy against the executor, and may compel him to pay out of his own purse, if he whiluntly paid away the lets to the other legatees. 1 Chon. Ca. 136. 248. 2 Chon. Ca. 132. 1 Fern. 205.

But it seems to be agreed, that an executor who voluntarily pays a legacy, or affetrics to the devicer thereof, inno, either in favour of other legatees or creditors, compel the legatee to refund, but that in such case he will bear the loss himself. 2 Chon. Ca. 9. 145. 1 Fern. 462. 2 Fern. 203.

But it is said, that if an executor pays out the assets in legacies, and afterwards debts appear, of which he had no notice at the time of payment of the legacies; or if he had been compelled by a decree in equity to pay legacies, but in those cases he may, by bill in equity, compel the legatee to refund, aliquo he took no sufficient assets at that purpose. 1 Chon. The old duty of quadragesimal, or the customary oblations made on Midlent-Sunday, when the proper hymn was, "Lentur Jerusalem," &c. by the inhabitants with a dole to the mother cathedral church, which old custom of procession and oblation at that time, was the beginning of that practice which is still retained among us, of mothering or going to visit par- rents on Midlent-Sunday. But to return; these volun- tary offerings on that Sunday, were by degrees fitted into an annual composition or pecuniary payment, charged on the parishioners, who was preferred to receive them from his people, and obliged to return them to the cathedral church; there in some forms of approbation, the suble religious took express care to throw this among other burdens upon the oppressed vicars. And since the chief cause, for which the law severely unites all offences of this nature, is a direct tendency to them to a breach of the publick peace, by provoking the parties injured, and their friends and families, to acts of revenge, which would be impossible to restrain by any other means; the law, for the sake of economy, gives the office for injuries of this kind, of all, others, are more sufficiently felt; and since the plain meaning of such scandal, as is expressed by figs or pictures, is as obvious to common sense, and as easily understood by every common capacity, and altogether as provoking as that which expressed by writing or printing, should it not be equally criminal? 1 Hawk. As every person devises to appear agreeable in life, and must be highly provoked by such ridiculous representations of him, as tend to leflein him in the esteem of the world, and take away his reputation, which to some men is more dear than life itself. Hence it hath been held, that not only charges of a flagrant nature, and which reflect a moral turpitude on the party, are libel- lous, but also such as set him in a caricature or ignominious light for their equally create ill blood, and pro-voke the parties to acts of revenge and breaches of the peace. 5 Co. 125. 1 Ed. 293. Mor. 267. 1 Rul. Abr. 37.

Hence it hath been held, that words, though not scandalous in themselves, yet if published in writing, and tending in a direct manner to the discredit of a man, are libel- lous, whether they be words defaming his private persons only, or persons employed in a publick capacity in the latter case they are said to receive an aggravation, as they tend to scandalize the government, for reflecting on those who are intrusted with the administration of pub- lic affairs, which do not only endanger the publick peace, as all other libels do, byEfilting up the parties immediately concerned in it to acts of revenge, in which also have a direct tendency to breed in the people a dif- like of their governors, and incline them to faction and sedition. As where a person delivered a ticket up to the minister after fermon, wherein he desired him to take notice, that oaffives paffed now without control from the civil magnificat, and to quicken the civil magnificat to do his duty, &c. and this was held to be a libel, as more particular in our country; and though it was not averred that the magnificats suffered those vices knowingly. 1 Sid. 219. 1 Ed. 773. The King v. Pym.

A. gunsmith, published an advertisement in a common news-paper, that he had invented a short kind of gun that fired for as far as a long gun, and that he was made gunsmith to the Prince of Wales; and B. another gunsmith, counter-advertised, that whereas, &c. reciting the former paragraph, he defined all gentlemen to be cautious, for that the said A. durft not en- gage with any artist in town, nor ever did make such an experiment; and that the word's were not to be given over gun, as any gentleman might be satisfied at the Crown Guns, in Long Aers, the said B.'s house. And the court held, that tho' B. or any other of the trade, might counter-adver- tise what was published by A. yet that should have been done without any general reflection on him in the way of his business; that the advice to all gentlemen to be cautious, was a reflection on his honesty, as if he would deceive the world by a feticious advertisement, and the allegation, that he would not engage with an artist, was setting him below the rest of his trade, and calling him a bungler in general terms, and not relative to the precedent manner, and that the words except out of a leather gun, was charging him with a lie, the word gun being vulgarly used for a lie, and gunner for a liar; and that therefore these words were libellous, and gave judgment accordingly; and herein the court held, that words, even such as are vulgarly employed in themselves, yet being published in writing, and tending any way to the party's discredit, were actionable, and that all words were to be construed faponum jubtellum materiam, and to be understood by the court in the same sense that others do. 3 Bow. of the law, and punishable either by civil action or criminal proceedings. In such cases, at the election of the party injured, the court of King's Bench, whose jurisdiction herein is founded upon the necessity of preventing quarrels and ill blood, and which deals with this offence as of dangerous conseqwencc to, and destructive to the peace of the nation, always exercises a discretionary power, in granting proper remedy, upon offence of this nature, and, will, in many cases, leave the party to his ordinary remedy; as where the application is made after a great length of time; fo where the matter complained of as a libel happens to be true; as where the granting the information and an order to the court, where the matter complained of was intended for reformation, not defamation. 3 Bac. Abr. 492.

Abr. 492. The King v. Jannear, Poph. 8 Geo. 2. in B. R.

A writing was directed to general Wills, and the four principal officers of the guards, to be presented to his Majesty for redress; the paper contained the defendant's name, that he furnished the guard at Whitehall with fire and candle, for which the government owed him 350 l. that he obtained a warrant for his money, and Captain Carr (the proctor) told him, that if he would affign the warrant, he would procure him the money; the warrant was affigned; and the money paid to Carr, who refrud paying it to the defendant; and the question was, if an information should be granted; and the court held no libel, but a representation of an injury, drawn up in a proper way for redress, without any intention to affcrbe the proctor; and tho' there be a figuration of a fraud, yet this is no more than what is in every day bill in Chancery; with which was never held libels, if relative to the subject matter. 3 Bac. Abr. 492. The King v. Bayley, Hill, 8 Geo. 2. in B. R.

Here it may be proper to infer the remarkable case of parfon Prick, who in a sermon recited a flory out of Parc's Martyrology, that one Greenwood, living near a perjured person, and a great perjurer, had great plagues inflicted on him, and was killed by the hand of God; whereas in truth he was never so plagued, and was himself present at that sermon; and he thereupon brought his action upon the cafe, for calling him a perjured person; and the defendant pleaded Not guilty; and the information for an information was filed upon the evidence. Wray Ch. Juft. delivered the law to the jury, that it being delivered but as a flory, and not with any malice or intention to slander any person, he was not guilty of the words maliciously, and so was found Not guilty. Gra. Jas. 90, 91.

It is certain that a requisite in the matter and application of a libel, it seems to be now agreed, that not only scandal expressed in an open and direct manner, but also such as is expressed in allegory and ironv amounts to a libel, and that the judges are to understand it in the same manner as others do, without any flied at all, unless they were to say that the offence, which in some measure would be to encourage scandal; as where a writing in a taunting manner, reckoning up several acts of publick charity done by one, says, You will not play the Jew, nor the hypocrite, and so goes on, in a strain of ridicule, to infer that what he had been owing to his vainglory; or where a writing, pretending to recog-
2. Whether proceedings in a court of justice are libellous; and whether any thing of this kind can be justified.

It seems to be clearly agreed, that no proceeding in a regular course of justice will make the complaint amount to a libel; for it would be a great discouragement to litigants to subject them to public procures, as they proceed, and to a court of justice, if the chief intention of the law in prohibiting persons to revenge themselves by libels, or any other private manner, is to restrain them from endeavouring to make themselves their own judges, and oblige them to refer the decision of their grievances to the public officers appointed to determine them.

Therefore it has been resolved, that no fable or scandalous matter contained in a petition to a committee of the House of Commons, or in articles of the peace exhibited to justices of peace, are libellous. 1 Lev. 240. 1 Sid. 414. 2 V. 392. 4 Cr. 14. 1 Hawke. P. C. 194.

Also it is held, that no prentent of a grand jury can be a libel, not only because persons who are supposed to be returned without their own seeking, and are from this reason presumed to have no proper evidence for what they do, but also because it would be of the utmost ill consequence any way to discourage them from making inquiries with that freedom and readiness which the public good requires. Moor 637. 1 Hawke. P. C. 194.

And it is held by some, that no want of jurisdiction in a court to which such a complaint shall be exhibited will make it a libel; because the mistake of the court is not imputable to the party, but to his counsel; but herein is said by Mr. Hawkins, that if it shall manifestly appear from the circumstances of the case, that a prosecution is entirely false, malicious and groundless, and composed not with a design to go through with it, but only to expose the defendant's character, under the flaw of a legal proceeding, there can be no reason why such a huckery of publick justice should not rather aggravate the mischief of the charge than make it one, and make such a scandal a good ground of an indictment at the suit of the King, as it makes the malice of their proceeding a solid foundation of an action on the cause at the suit of the party, whether the court had a jurisdiction of the cause or not. 2 Edg. 272. 4 Cr. 14. 1 Hawke. P. C. 194.

Also it seems to be clearly agreed, that in an indictment or criminal prosecution for a libel, the party cannot justify that the contents thereof are true, or that the performer whom it is made has had a reputation; since the greater appearance there is of truth in any malicious innuendo, the more it is likely to be taken for a scandal, and that the jury are entitled to give such a verdict. Lord Coke observes, in a settled state of government the party aggrieved ought to complain for every injury done him, in the ordinary course of law, and not by any means to revenge himself by the odious course of libelling, or otherwise. 5 Cr. 175. H. 325. Moor 637. Hawke. P. C. 194.

Also it seems now settled, that no scandal in writing, is as any more justifiable in a civil action brought by the party to vindicate the injury done, than in an indictment of information at the suit of the Crown; for tho' in actions for words, the law, thro' compassion, admits the party is to be pleaded as a justification, yet his tenderness of the law is not to be extended to written scandal, in which the author acts with more coolness, and deliberation gives the scandal a more durable flame, and propagates it wider and further; whereas in words men often in a heat and passion say things which they afterwards abhormed of, and tho' they seem to act with deliberation, yet the scandal soon dies away, and is forgotten; and therefore from the greater degree of mischief and malice attending the one than the other, the law allows the party to justify in an action for words, their application to scandal; from whence it follows, that the only favour truth affords in such a case is, that it may be flown in mitigation of damages in an action, and of the fine upon an indictment or an information. 3 Bar. Ab. 405. The King v. Roberts, Mich. 8 Gent. 2 in B. R. again to a caulker publishing a libel on Mr. Bentley, recorder of Warwick.

3. Who shall be deemed the author or compiler of a libel, who the publisher, and how the offenders shall be punished.

It has been already observed, that a libel may be expressed not only by printing or writing, but also by signs or pictures; but it seems that some of those ways are essentially necessary; and it is laid down in Lamb's case, that every person who compiles or publishes a libel must be the compiler, procurer or publisher thereof. 9 Cr. 59. Moor 813. Lamb's case.

It has been strongly urged, that he who writes a libel dictated by another, is not guilty of the composing and making thereof, because it appears that neither is the author or contriver; but herein the court held, that the writing being the essential part of a libel, the reducing it into writing in the first instance was a making, and differed from a transcribing; and, according to the report of this case, in 5 Med. it was held, that if one author and another writes, both are guilty of making it, for he shows his approbation of what he writes. So if one repeats, another writes a libel, and a third approves what is written, they are all makers of it, as all who concur and assist to the doing of an unlawful act are guilty; and murdering a man's reputation by a libel, may be considered as murdering a man's person, in which all who are present and encourage the act are guilty, tho' the wound was given by one only. Carth. 405. 5 Med. 163. 10. 167. The King v. Payne.

Also it has been held, that transcribing and collecting libellous matter is highly the act of the party composed or published it; for his having it in readiness for that purpose when occasion served, or its falling into such hands after his death, might be injurious to the government. Carth. 407. 2 Sail. 417. The King v. Bear.

It is said by Holt C. J. that when a libel appears under a man's hand-writing here in no other author is known, he is taken in the manner, and it turns the proof upon him; and if he cannot produce the compositor, it is hard to find that he is not the very man. 2 Sail. 410.

And it is said to have been resolved by the court, that in libels making is the genius, composing or printing is one species, writing a second species, and procuring to be written a third species: And finding a man guilty of writing only, is finding him guilty of one species of making. 2 Sail. 413.

But where in some cases the writing of a libel may be a lawful or innocent act, as by the clerk that draws the indictment, or by a student who takes notes of it, because it is not done ad insaniam of the party; but absolutely considered, the writing the copy of a libel is writing a libel, because such copy contains all things necessary to the construction of a libel, viz. the scandalous matter, and the writing; and it has the same pernicious consequence, for it perpetuates the memory of the thing, and some time or other comes to be published. 2 Sail. 418.

It seems to be agreed, that not only he who publishes a libel himself, but also he who procures another to do it, is guilty of the publication; and it is held not to be material, whether he who disperses a libel knew any thing of the contents or effects of it or not; for that nothing would be more easy than to publish the most virulent papers with the greatest security, if the concealing the purport of any writing from an illiterate publisher would make him safe in dispersing them. 9 Cr. 59. Moor 637. 1 Hawke. P. C. 195.

And on this foundation it has been confidantly ruled of late, that the buying of a book or paper containing libellous matter, or a bookeller's shop is, sufficient evidence to charge the matter with the publication, altho' it does not appear that he knew of any such books being there, or what the contents thereof was; and it will not be be prejudiced that it was brought and told there by a stranger, but the matter must, if it suggests any thing of the kind, in his excuse, prove it. The King's Narr, H3. 2. 2. 1743, &c. was ruled on evidence at Goldhill, by Raymond Chief Justice.

The reading of a libel in the presence of another, without knowing it to be a libel, or the laughing at a libel read by another, or the saying that such a libel is libel, is not so far spoken with or without malice, amounts not to a publication of it. 9 Co. 59. Mors 813. 1 Hawk. P. C. 156.

Also it is held, that he who repeats part of a libel in merriment, without any malice or purpose of defamation, is no way punishable; but of this Hatchets making doubts, for the truth of this kind are not to be endured, and the injury to the reputation of the party grievous is no way lessened by the merriment of him who makes so light of it. Mors 627. 1 Hawk. P. C. 156.

But it seems to be agreed, if he who hath either read a libel himsclf, or hath heard it by another, do afterwards maliciously read or repeat any part of it in the presence of others, or lend or give it to another, he is guilty of an unlawful publication of it. Mors 813. 9 Co. 59. 1 Hawk. P. C. 155.

It is said by my Lord Coke in the case of Dr. libelli sako-my, have been resolv'd, that if one finds a libel, (and could keep himself out of danger) if it be compos'd against a private man, the finder may either burn it, or presently deliver it to a magistrate; but if it concern a magistrate, or other publick person, the finder ought presently to deliver it to a magistrate, to the intent that he may take care of the industry the author may be found out and punished. 5 Co. 138.

It seems to be a matter of doubt, whether the finding an abusive letter, filled with provoking language to another, will bear an action as for a libel, because here is no publication; but it seems to be clearly agreed, that the finding of a libel, without other publication, is an offence of a publick nature, and may be taken as much for a libel as it tends to create ill blood, and causes a disturbance of the publick peace; and if the bare making of a libel be an offence, whether it be published or not, as it esteem'd to be hol'd, surely the finding of it to the party reflected must be a much greater offence. 4 Inf. 180. 3 Inf. 174. 12 Co. 34. Popb. 135. Raym. 201. 1 Lev. 135. 1 Keb. 931. 1 M. 58. Shin. 123. 4.

And on this foundation the court of King's Bench granted an action against a person for finding an abusive letter to Mr. Bernard, &c., therein calling him tattle and foul; although he were not able to write this to the party himself, and never made it publick, being only a piece of private contempt; but the court held, that this method provok'd persons to duelling, that the writing and finding was a good publication, and that the intent of the party shall not be explained by himself. 3 Bac. Abr. 497. The King v. Pullough. Mich. 5. Co. 2. in B. R.

If one deliver a paper full of reflections on any person in nature of a petition to a committee of parliament, to any other person except the members of parliament, he may be regarded as the publisher of a libel, in respect of such differing thereon among those who have nothing to do with it. 1 Sand. 133. 1 Lev. 240. 1 Sid. 414. 1 Keb. 832.

But it hath been held, that the bare printing of a petition to a committee of parliament (which would be a libel against the party petitioning) could not be enjoined, if it were made for any other purpose than as a complaint in a court of justice,) and delivering copies thereof to the members of the committee, shall not be looked upon as the publication of a libel, insomuch as it is justified by the order and course of the proceedings in parliament, whereof the King's courts will not take judicial notice. 1 Hawk. P. C. 95. and the authorities supra.

There can be no doubt but that a person who writes or publishes a libel is subject to the action of the party injured, in which damages shall be recovered; and that being convicted on an indictment or information, shall pay such fine, and also suffer such corporal punishment as to the court in discretion shall seem proper, according to the heinousness of the crime, and the circumstances of the offenders. 9 Co. 175.

Sect. 4. The like jurisdiction used in the court before the President and council in the marches of Wales, and in the court before the President and council in the Northern parts, and also in the court of the duchy of Lancaster, and in the court of Exchequer of the county palatine of Chester, held before the chamberlain and council of that court, shall be also repealed; and no court or place of justice shall be erected within England or Wales, which shall have the like jurisdiction, as hath been used in the court of Star-Chamber.

Sect. 5. Neither his Majesty, nor his privy council, have any jurisdiction, power or authority, by English bill, petition, articles, libel, or any other arbitrary way whatsoever, to determine or dispose of the lands or goods of any subjects of this kingdom; but the same ought to be tried and determined in the ordinary court of justice, as by course of law.

Sect. 6. If any Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy seal, President of the council, Bishop, Temporal Lord, Privy Counsellor, Judge or Justice, shall offend contrary to this law, they shall forfeit £500. unto any party grieved, his executors or administrators, who shall prosecute for the same, and first obtain judgment, to be recovered in any court of record at Westminster; and if any person against whom any such recoverable offence shall be, the same, he shall forfeit £1000. unto any party grieved, who shall prosecute, &c. and if any person against whom such second recovery shall be had, shall offend again in the same kind, and shall be convicted by indictment or information, or any other lawful way, such person shall be incapable to bear his office, and shall be likewise disabled to make any gift or disposition of his lands or goods, or to take any gift or legacy to his own use.

Sect. 7. Every person so offending shall likewise pay unto the party grieved his treble damages, to be recovered in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster.

Sect. 8. If any person shall be restrained of his liberty by order or decree of any such court as before, or by command of the King's Majesty in person, or by warrant of the council-board, or of any of his Majesty's Privy council; every person so restrained, upon demand, or motion made by council, or other employed by him, unto the judges of the King's Bench, or Common Pleas, in open court, shall without delay, for the ordinary fees, have a bates corpus directed generally unto all and every sheriffs, gaoler, minister, officer or other person, in whose custody the party shall be, and the sheriffs or other persons shall at the return of the writ (upon due notice given, at the sheriff's will to draw the writ, and return upon security by his own bond, to pay the charge of carrying back the prisoner, if he shall be remanded; such charges to be ordered by the court, if any difference shall arise) bring the body of the party before the judges in open court, and shall certify the cause of his detainment, and thereupon the court, within three days after such return made, shall proceed to determine whether the cause of commitment be just, and shall thereupon do what to justice shall appertain. And if any thing shall be wilfully done or omitted by any judge, officer, &c. contrary to the direction hereof, such person offending shall be liable to any party grieved his treble damages, to be recovered as aforesaid.

Sect. 9. This act shall extend only to the court of Star-chamber, and to the said courts holden before the President and council in the marches of Wales, and before the President and council in the northern parts, and to the court of the Duchy of Lancaster, and the court of Exchequer of the county palatine of Chester, and all courts of like jurisdiction to be hereafter erected, and to the warrants and directions of the council-board, and to the commitments of any persons made by the King in person, or by the Privy council.

Sect. 10. If any person should be molested for any offence against this act, unless he be implicated within two years after the offence committed.

Sect. 11. Stat. 1 Will. & Mar. (1668) c. 2. cap. 2. sect. 1. Whereas the Lords spiritual and temporal and commons assembled at Westminster, representing all the estates of the people of this realm, did upon the 13th of February 1668, present unto their Majesties, then Prince and Princes of Orange, a declaration, containing that,

The said Lords spiritual and temporal and commons, being assembled in a full and free representative of this nation, for the vindicating their ancient rights and liberties, declare,

That the pretended power of suspending of laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of parliament, is illegal;

That the pretended power of dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, as it hath been allowed and exercised of late, is illegal;

That the commission for erecting the late court of commissioners for ecclesiastical causes, and all other commissions and courts of like nature, are illegal and pernicious;

That levying money for or to the use of the crown, by pretence of prerogative, without grant of parliament, for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal;

That it is the right of the subjects to petition the King, and all committees and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal;

That all keeping a standing army within this kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of parliament, is against law;

That the subjects which are protestants may have arm for their defence suitable to their conditions, and as allowed by law;

That election of members of parliament ought to be free;

That the freedom of speech, and debates or proceedings in parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament;

That exeuctive bail ought not to be required, nor exeeutive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted;

That jurors ought to be duly impanelled and returned and jurors which pass upon men in trials for high treason ought to be freeholders;

That all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons, before conviction, are illegal and void;

And for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening and preferring of the laws, parliament ought to be held frequently;

And they do claim, demand and insist upon all singular the premises as their undoubted rights and liberties of this kingdom, and so shall be esteemed, allowed, adjusted and taken to be; and all the particulars aforesaid shall be firmly held as they are expressed in the said declaration, and all officers shall serve their Majesties according to the same in all times to come.

Sect. 12. No dispensation by any absolution of any statute, shall be allowed, except a dispensation be allowed of such statute; and except in such cases as shall be specially provided for during this session of parliament.

Sect. 13. No charter granted before the 23d of October 1689, shall be invalidated by this act, but shall remain of the same force as if this act had never been made, and the 13 Will. IV. cap. 2. sect. 7. Whereas it is necessary that further provision be made for securing religion, laws and liberties, after the death of his Majesty; and the Princes Anne of Denmark, and in default of issue of the body of the said Princes, and of his Majesty's successors; therefore, Whereas it is necessary that the said claim and possession hither hereafter come to the possession of this crown, shall join in communion with the church of England, as by law established.

That in case the crown and imperial dignity of the realm shall hereafter come to the possession of any person, not being a native of this kingdom of England, this nation be no obliged to engage in any war for the defence of any dominions or territories which do not belong to the crown of England, without consent of parliament.

But that after the said limitation shall take effect, judges commissioners may be granted

And liberty, liege,

That no person who has an office or place of profit under the King, or receives a pension from the crown, shall be capable of serving as a member of the house of commons.

That no pardon under the Great seal of England be answerable to an impeachment by the commons in par

Sect. 4. Whereas the laws of England are the birthright of the people thereof, and all the Kings and Queens who shall ascend the throne of this realm, ought to administer the government of the same according to the said laws, and all their officers and ministers ought to execute the laws and statutes of this realm, as the act of security for the established religion, and the rights and liberties of the people, and all other laws and statutes now in force, are by his Majesty, with his advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, annull'd, nullified, and confirmed. See Hab. 2. 4.

King, Naturalization.

Liberty, Liberties, Is a privilege held by grant or prescription, whereby men enjoy some benefit or favour beyond the ordinary subject. See Bract. lib. 2. c. 5. But a more general signification of this is, the law, which gives liberty, and which is accounted very precious, not only in respect of the profit which every one enjoys by his liberty; but also in respect of the publick.

Librarum, The manner of briefing any one, or sometimes his taking for a barbarous locution, Leg. lib. 6. Gower, edit. 1727.

Libra panata & panfata & ad numerum: A phrase which often occurs in the Donzelaty-Roster, and frequently the memorial of that and the next age,—as Aldilbary in Buckinghamshire, the King's man.—In statu valentis reditur lib. ars & panfata, & de libenis x libris. The value it pays fifty-five pounds burnt and weighed; and for toll ten pounds by the score. For they sometimes took their money ad numerum in the current coin upon content. But sometimes they rejected the common coin by tale, and would melt it down to take it by weight when purified from the lead and too great alloy; for which purpose they had in both times always a fire ready in the Exchequer to burn his money, and then weigh it. Cassell, edit. 1727.

Libra pensa. A pound of money in weight; for it was usual in former days, not only to tell the money, but to weigh it; for several cities, bishops and nobles, and some other persons, had coined money and coined none, and therefore though the pound consisted of 20 s. he weighed it. Thus in Doniesel we read, Reddit uno 30 libras ars & penata. Gait's Hist. of Brit. 1794.

Librata terrar, Contains four oxgangs, and every oxgang 13 acres. See, verb. Benata terras, with us it is so much land as is yearly worth 20s. for in Henry the Third's time, he that had quadrinum libras terrar was to receive the twelfth part of the neighborhood. See Fardinagable.

Some are of opinion, that as money is divided into pounds, shillings, pence, halfpence and farthings, the same degrees are to be observed in the division of lands; and therefore as quadrans signifies a farthing, so quadrata is the fourth part of an acre, ethlata is half and de:nariata is a whole acre, seditata is an acre and libreta is twenty times twelve acres, i.e. two hundred and forty. Spelman is of another opinion, who compares an acre to a mark in money; and as in one there are one hundred and sixty pence, so in the other there are one hundred and sixty perches, which they divide into halves and quarters: So that an acre contains three hundred and sixty denaries; but some say, that libreta terrar is so much ground as is worth yearly 20s. of current money. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Licent. See Authoritas, grant, and 15 fin. Abr. tit. Licence.

Licentia a reale. Licentia surgendi, Is a liberty given by the court to a tenant that is enfeoff'd de male ledbi, in a real action: For the law, that in this case he may not arise out of his bed, or at least go out of his chamber, until he have been viewed by knights thereto appointed, and have a day adjigned to appear: And the reason of this is, that it may appear whether he could himself be enfeoff'd deceitfully or not; and therefore if the demandant can prove that he was seen abroad before the view, or licence of the court, he shall be adjudged to be deceitfully enfeoff'd, and to have made default. Of this, see Bracton, lib. 5. trad. 1. num. 13. and Flata, lib. 6. c. 10. and Harv's Mirror of Justice, lib. 2. cap. Des Effions.

Lifefates. Stat. 19 Car. 2. cap. 6. sect. 2. If such perons, for whose life any estates shall be granted, shall abstain themselves seven years, and no proof made of the lives of such persons, so that any action commenced for recovering such tenements by the lefors or reviversons, the persons, upon whose lives such estates depended, shall be accounted as dead; and the judges shall direct the jury to give their verdict, as if the person abstinently himself were dead.

Lifefates, In any such action wherein the life or death of any such person shall come in question between the reviverson and the tenant in possession, it shall be lawful for the reviverson to take exception to any of the jurors, that the greatest part of the real estate of such jurors is held by lease or copy for lives.

Lifefates, If any person shall be evicted out of any lands by virtue of this, and afterwards such person upon whose life such estates depend shall return again, or shall, on proof in any action to be brought for recovery of the same, be made appear to have been living, the lefsees may re-enter and enjoy the lands in their former estate so long as the said person shall be living, and also shall recover for damages the profits of the lands, with interest for the time that they were ousted.

Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. sect. 12. Any estate par autem vie shall be deivable by will in writing, signed by the party, or by some other person in his presence and by his express directions, sufficed in the presence of the devisor by three witnesses; and if no such devise be made, the same shall be chargeable in the hands of the heir, if it shall come to him by reason of a special occassion, as affects by defiant; and in case there be no special occassion, it shall go to the executors, and be affets in their hands.

Stat. 6 Ann. cap. 18. sect. 1. Any person who shall have any claim or demand to any remainder, reversion or expectancy, in any estate after the death of any person within age, married woman or any other person, upon affidavit made in Chancery by the persons claiming such estate, in his title, and that hath cause to believe that such minor, married woman or other person, is dead, and that the death is concealed, may once a year move the Lord Chancellor to order such guardian, trustee, husband or other person, suspected to conceal such person, to produce to such persons (not exceeding two) as shall in such order be named by the party prosecuting, such minor, married woman or other person; and if such guardian or other person shall neglect to produce such infant, &c. on whose life such estate doth depend according to the directions of the order, the court of Chancery is required to order such guardian, &c. to produce such infant forthwith. And if it shall be proved that two of such commissioners shall be nominated by the party prosecuteing; and such a court, the court of such guardian, &c. shall neglect to produce such infant, &c. in court or before such commissioners, whereas return shall be made by such commissioners, and that return filed in the Petty-bag-office, the said minor, &c. so conceived shall be taken to be dead, and it shall be lawful for any person claiming title after the death of such infant, &c. to enter upon such lands as if such infant, &c. were dead.

Sed. 2. If it shall appear to the court by affidavit, that such infat, &c. for whose life such estate is holden, is at certain time place beyond the seas, it shall be lawful for the party prosecuting such order, to fend over the perons appointed by the said order to view such minor, &c. and in case such guardian, &c. shall neglect to produce to such persons a personal view of such infant, &c. such per- sons shall make the place of return of such neglect, which return shall be filed in the Petty-bag, and thereupon such minor, &c. shall be taken to be dead.

Sed. 3. If it shall afterwards appear upon proof in any action that such infant, &c. were alive at the time of such order made, it shall be lawful for such infant, &c. to appear in court, and elsewhere, according to the order and that they cannot procure such infant, &c. to appear and that said infant, &c. were living at the time of such return made and filed; it shall be lawful for such person to continue possession of such estate.

Sed. 4. If any such guardian, &c. having any estate determinable upon the life of any other person, shall by the satisfaction of the court make appear, that they have used their utmost endeavours to procure such infant, &c. to appear in court, or elsewhere, according to the order and that they cannot procure such infant, &c. to appear and that such infant, &c. were living at the time of such return made and filed; it shall be lawful for such per- son to continue possession of such estate.

Sed. 5. Every person who as guardian or trustee for any infant, and every husband feigned in right of his wife and every other person having any estate determinable upon any life, who after the determination of the life of the express content of whom, are next intituled upon the determination of such particular estates, shall hold over and continue in possession of any lands, shall be adjudged trepellers; and every per- son, his executors and administrators, who shall be intituled to such lands by reason of the determination of such estates, shall recover in damages against every person so holding over, and against his executors or administrators, the value of the profits received during said wrongful possession.

And it is provided, that where a shorter time is limited by any penal statute, the prosecution must be

By the 31 Eliz. cap. 5. par. 1. it is enacted, "That upon every information that shall be exhibited on any penal statute, a special note shall be made of the ver day, month and year of the exhibiting thereof into any office, or to any officer which lawfully may receive the same without any antedate thereof to be made; and that the same information be accounted and taken to be of record from that day forward, and not at any此后 that no process be issued or given upon such information, until the information be exhibited in form aforesaid, &c.

And it is also further enacted by 21 Jac. 1. cap. 4. that no officer shall receive, file or enter of record, any information, bill, plaint, count or declaration, grounded on any penal statute, (being within the provision of this said statute of 21 Jac.) until the informer or relator hath first taken a corporal oath before some of the judges of the court, that he believes in his conscience the offence was committed within a year before the information or suit within the county where the said information or suit was commenced, &c.

In the construction of these statutes it hath been holdess, that the 21 Jac. 1. cap. 4. does not extend to any offence created before that time; so that prosecutions on subsequent penal statutes are not restrained thereby, but that statute is to them as it were repealed pro tante. 1 Sal. 372—3. 5 Mod. 425.

It feems doubtful, whether a suit by a common infor-

It has been held by three judges, that suing out a la-tetiat within the year was a sufficient commencement of the suit to free the limitation of time on a penal statute, because the statute is original of B. R. and may be continued on record as an original. But Hylt held otherwise, for the action being for a penalty given by a statute, the plaintiff might have brought an action of debt by original in B. R. because the statute gives the action; and he held, that there was a difference between a civil action, and an action given by a statute; for in the first case, the suing out a latetiat within the time, and continuing it afterwards, will be sufficient; but in the other case, if the party proceeds by bill, he ought to file his bill within time, that it may appear so to be upon the

3. Of the limitation of time in regard to personal actions, viz. actions of assault and battery, actions of slander, and actions arising upon contract and trespasses; and whether a sufficiency of equitable demand be within the statute.

By the 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16. All actions of trespasses, of assault, battery, wounding, imprisonment, or any of them, shall be commenced and fixed within four years next after the cause of such actions or suits, and not after.

It seems, that if a man brings trespasses for beating his servant, per quod feritum amitst, this is not such an action as is within this branch of the statute, being founded on the special damages; 1 Sul. 206. 5 Mod. 74. But an action of assault, battery, or false imprisonment, the defendant pleads, as to the assault and imprisonment, the statute of limitations, without answering particularly to the battery, otherwise than by using the words transfregess praedicta, it is sufficient, for these words are an answer to the assault and imprisonment. 1 Bland. 76. 74. 1 Lev. 31.

In trespasses for assault and battery, the defendant pleaded non culpa infra fato annis by misslake, and not according to the statute, which is but four years; and upon demurrer it was adjudged an ill plea; for if it be considered as at Common law, there was no such plea; if on the statute, then it was not well alleged and the defendant could not take issue on it, for quod eft culpa infra fato annis is an idle immaterial, because it may be the jury might find him Not guilty infra quattuor annis, but guilty infra fato annis. 2 Sul. 423. That for calling a man Thief, and procuring him to be indicted and imprisoned for larceny, the defendant is found guilty of the whole, the statute in this case seems no bar, for the action is not for words but, is an action upon the cause in nature of a conspiracy. Edwards, adjudged on the branch of this branch of the statute, says, that for slanderous words the plaintiff shall have no more cestuis qua viam, &c. that if an action for words be founded upon an indecency, or other matter of record, it is not within the statutes, but such action may be brought at any time. 1 Sid. 93. 2 Sid. 95. For actions for words, the defendant pleaded non culpa infra verbis praedictis infra duos annos; and upon a special demurrer it was objected, that it ought to have been non culpa infra duos annos; for as it is may be, the defendant spoke the substantial words of the slanderer, and yet did not speak all the words; and yet the plaintiff could not, by any possibility, in thought, or spirit, have become liable to the penalty of debt for 10l. if the defendant says non debit the 10l. without adding nec aliquem inde deminatur, it would be naught, but the court held the causes not alike; for in an action of debt, every penny that stands in demand is of equal weight; but here the action is founded upon the sub- \footnote{\textbf{An.}}

So where my Lady Hollis lent 100l. and in the note which was given for it, mention was made, that it ought be disposed of in my Lady Hollis life-time; and a bill being exhibited for it, the court held it a depofitum or trufl, and decreed payment of it; tho' otherwife it had been barred by the statute of limitations.

2 Vern. 345. S. C.

A charter is not barred by length of time, nor within the statute of limitations. 2 Vern. 399.

So it hath been held, that a legacy is not within the statute of limitations. 1 Vern. 256.

It feems to be the doctrine of courts of equity, that mortgages are not within the statute of limitations; yet where a man comes in as an old bad, it hath been sometimes decreed, that the poiffeffor shou'd account no fur-fer than for the profits made in his own time, to difcourage the ftring in fuch dormant titles; alfo the courts have allowed length of time to be pleaded in bar, where the mortgagee was not delinquent, and the mortgagee

as a fee without entry

or claim or the mortgagee; and where the poiffeffor for would be intangled in a long account; and in these cases the statute of limitations has been mentioned as a proper direction to go by. 1 Chan. Ca. 102. But now by the 7 Geo. 2. the redemption of mortgages is explicitly limited to twenty years. See Mortgage.

4. At what time the right of action shall be faid to have accurred, before which the statute can be no bar; and what courts are bound by the statute.

This statute cannot be a bar unless the six years are expired, after there hath been complete cause of action;

as if a man promise to pay 10 l. to ft. S. when he came from Rome, or when he marries, and ten years after J. S. marries, or comes from Rome, the right of action accruing from the happening of the contingency, from which time the statute shall be a bar, and not from the time of the promise. Godt. 437.

So in an action of the cafe wherein the plaintiff declared, that in confradation that he would forbeare to fue the defendant for fome flleep killed by his the defendant's dog, the defendant promifed to make him fatisfaction upon re-queft, and that fuch a promifion was required, &c. it was held, that the right of action accrued from the requief, and not from the time of killing the flleep; and that therefore the defendant could not plead the statute of li-limitations, the requief being within fix years, though the killing the flleep, and promife of fatisfaction was long

So in affumfit, in confradation that the plaintiff would deliver to the defendant fuch a deed, the defendant promifed, that he would re-deliver it to him on re-queft, and alfo in confradation that he had, upon re-queft, delivered to him another deed, the defendant pro-mifed to pay him 40 l. and all allegations that he had delivered to him the fift deed, and although at fuch a day afterwards he made requief, yet he had not re-delivered the first deed, nor paid the 40 l. the defendant pleads the statute of limitations, and that he did not promise within six years before the action brought; whereupon the plaintiff demurs; for the cause of action, as to the first deed, did not arise upon the promise, but upon the refusal after request; and the request was within six years; and so held the court. 1 Lev. 48. Webb v. Martin. 1 Sid. 66. 1 Keb. 177. S. C. 11 Arith., that the defendant, upon consideration that the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, would receive A. and B. into his house at bostier, and diet them, the defendant promised, &c. non affirmavit infra fea annos was pleaded; the plaintiff demurred, and held no plea; for the defendant cannot in such case plead non affirmavit infra se annos, but affirmavit infra se annos; for it is not material when the promise was made, if the cause of action be within six years, and the dieting might be long afterwards. 2 Saith. 422. Gould v. Johnson. For this see 1 Font. 191. 2 Keb. 613.

An executor several years before the action brought, left some bond-hold-stuff in the house, by the consent of the heir, who used them after; and within six years of the action brought, the executor demands the goods, and the heir refused to let him have them; whereupon trover was brought, and the statute of limitations pleaded; and per curiam. The utter before the demand was not converted, to be as a matter of course, until then, and the demand being within six years, the refusal which ensued it, is the only evidence of a conversion in the case, as within the six years; and if a trover before six years, and a conversion after, the statute cannot be pleaded. But for this see Gros. Car. 245-6, 333. 1 Jam. 253. 3 M'd. 111.

An action upon the cafe against an executor; the plaintiff declares, that upon a marriage-treaty it was agreed between the plaintiff and testator, that he should pay the plaintiff 100l. and whilst that should be unpaid he should pay the plaintiff 101l. per annum, which agreement in affirmavit, he cannot plead; and the action was brought for all the arrears by the face of twenty-eight years. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations; and on demurrer it was held, that all could not be barred by the statute; and therefore the plaintiff had judgment. Allen 62. Harvey v. Thorne, adjudged, no body appearing for the defendant.

Trespass for imprisoning him, and detaining him in prison from 32 Car. 2. till the 3d of April, 4 Ear 2. The defendant pleaded as to all till 33 Car. 2. such a day, non culp. infra quaratum annos, and as to the rest, a plainit, and a capias issued; the plaintiff demurred; and per curiam. The imprisoned is not the plaintiff, but one continued imprisonment, yet the defendant may divide the time, and plead the statute as to part; and the plaintiff may reply the continuance; therefore as to this judgment was given against the plaintiff upon his demurrer, but for him as to the rest, because the capias was awarded by the court ex officio, and it did not appear that this defendant meddled in it. 2 Saith. 420. Coventry v. Asley, and see 3 M'd. 110. Camb. 26.

In case of a seaman, the duty does not arise from the contract, but from the service done, and therefore the contract were above six years, and any part of the service within that time, it is out of the statute. 6 M'd. 26.

It is clearly agreed, that the statute of limitations is a good plea in a court of equity; but it seems the safest way for him who pleads it, in his answer, also to say, that he has paid the money, because otherwise the court should look for evidence of the payment between the court plaintiff and defendant, and that the money is a depositum in the hands of the defendant for the benefit of the plaintiff; and the statute of limitations, as has been observed, does not reach trusts. March 129. 1 Saith. 424.

But it seems to be agreed, that the power to plead the statute of limitation is only in the court of Admiralty, or Spiritual court, where they proceed according to their law, and in a matter in which they have cognizance. 6 M'd. 25, 26. 2 Saith. 424. 3 Keb. 356, 392.

Therefore it hath been adjudged, that for a suit upon a contract simper alius mare, no prohibition should go upon their refusals of a plea of the statute of limitations. M'd. 26.

So it has been held not to be pleadable to a proceeding in the spiritual court, pro violenta naturam aequitatis in clergio, because the proceeding is pro reformatione morum, and not the Law. 1 Saith. 372.

It hath been doubted, whether to a suit in the Admiralty for mariners wages, this statute is a good plea; because it is said, that this is a matter properly determinable at common law; and the allowing the Admiralty jurisdiction therein, only a matter of indulgence. 2 Saith. 474. 6 Adm. 307.

But this is now settled by the 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. by which it is enacted, That all suits and actions in the court of Admiralty for seamen's wages, shall be commenced and fuel within six years next after the cause of such suits or actions shall accrue, and not after.

5. Of the exceptions in the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, and what will save a bar thereof.

As to this it hath been adjudged, that the last proviso in the statute not only extends to those actions therein enumerated, but also to an affirmavit, the not mentioned, and to all other actions on the cause being of equal mischief, and plainly within the intention of the legislature. Gros. Car. 245, 333. 2 Sund. 120. 2 M'd. 71. 1 Sid. 451.

1. Exception in relation to infants. As to this it hath been held, that the statute being general, infants had been included, had they not been particularly excepted. 1 Lev. 31.

It hath been held, that if an infant, during his infancy, by his guardian bring an action, the defendant cannot plead the statute of limitations; altho' the cause of action accrued six years before, and the words of the statute are, after his coming of age, &c. 2 Sund. 121.

It hath been held in Chancery, that if one receives the profits of an infant's estate, and six years after his coming of age, he brings a bill for an account, the statute of limitations is as much a bar to such a suit, as if he brought an action of account at Common law; for the receipt of the profits of an infant's estate is not such a trust, as being a creature of the court of equity, the statute shall be no bar to; for he might have his action of account at law, and therefore no necessity could come into this court for the account; for the reason why bills for an account are brought here, is from the nature of the demand, and that they may have a discovery of books, papers, and the party's oath, for the more safely taking of the account, which cannot be so well done at law; but if the infant lies by for six years after his coming of age, as he is barred of his action of account at law, he shall be of his remedy in this court. Act. Eq. 350.

Lackey v. Lackey.

2. Exception in relation to merchants accounts. As to this exception, it hath been a matter of much controversy, whether it extends to all actions and accounts relating to merchants and merchandize, or to actions of account open and current only; the words of the statute being, That all actions of trespass, &c. all actions of account and upon the cafe other than such actions as concern the trade of merchants; so that by the words, other than such actions, not being fals actions of account, it has been inferred that all actions concerning merchants are excepted. 1 Jef. 451. 2 Sand. 124, 125. 1 Lev. 287. 1 Keb. 622. 1 Lev. 293. 1 Font. 90. 1 M'd. 270. 2 M'd. 312. 2 Vern. 450.

But it is now settled, that accounts open and current only are within the statute; and that therefore if an account be stated and settled between merchant and merchant, and a firm certain agreed to be brought in such case he, to whom the money is due, does not bring his action within the limited time, he is barred by the statute. Vide the authorities supra.

So it hath been adjudged, that by the exception in the statute concerning merchants accounts, no other actions are excepted but actions of account. Cartb. 212. 445.
also it hath been adjudged, that bills of exchange for value received, are not such matters of account as are intended by the exception in the statute of limitations.
Carr. 226.
3. Exception in relation to persons beyond sea.
It seems to be well agreed, that the exception as to persons being beyond sea, extends only where the creditors or plaintiffs are so absent, and not to debtors or defendants, because the first only are mentioned in the statute; and this construction has the rather prevailed, because it was reputed the creditor’s folly, that he did not file an original, and the plaintiff might be prevented the bar of the statute.
Ora. Cr. 245. 332. 1 Jon. 252.
1 Lev. 143. 3 Med. 311. 2 Lotus. 950. 1 Salt. 420.
But as the creditors being beyond sea is favored by the 21 Jac. 1. so now by the 45 05. am. cap. 16, it is enacted, That if any person or persons, against whom there shall be any cause of action of trespas, detinue, action for trover or replevin, for taking away goods or chattels, or of action of account, or upon the case, or of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, of debt for arrears of rent, or for battery, wounding and imprisonment, or any of them, be, or shall be, at the time of any such cause of suit or action given or accrued, fallen or come, beyond the seas; that then such person or persons, who is or shall be intitled to any such suit or action, ought to sue against such person or persons within the year, and sue for such suit and action after their return from beyond the seas, within such times as are limited for the bringing of he said actions by the 21 Jac. 1.
4. Where no executor or administratrix to sue or be sued.
A receives money belonging to a person who afterwards and intermate, and to whom R. takes out administration, and brings an action against A. to which he pleads the tatute of limitations, and the plaintiff replies, and filthy that administration was committed to him such a year, which was six years since; theo six years are expired since he receipt of the money, yet not being so since the administration, that such action is not barred by the statute.
It is said in general, that where one brings an action before the expiration of six years, and dies before judgment, the six years being then expired, this shall not incur the creditor’s or plaintiff’s title; but But if an executor sues upon a promissory note to the effactor, and dies before judgment, and six years from the original cause of action are actually expir’d, and the executor brings a new action in four years after the first executor’s death, the statute of limitations shall be a bar against the personal action, for the time is then saveorable, by an abatement of the action after the fix years slapped by the plaintiff’s death; yet the executor should make a recent prosecution, to which the clause in the lature, that provides a year after the renewal of a judgment, Gl. may be a good direction, or flew that he may sue as early as he could, because there was a considert about the will, or right of administration; for the statute was made for the benefit of the defendants, to free them from actions when their witnesses were dead, or their If there be no executor against whom the plaintiff may bring an action, he shall not be prejudiced by the statute of limitations, nor shall any lack in such case be imputed to him. 2 Ver. 695.
5. Where no jurisdiction to sue in, or where hindered by some authority.
It seems agreed, that there being no courts, or the courts of justice being, no suit will lie against the creditors of such a fuit as it is enabled, That from the 10th of December (which was the day that King James departed, till the 24th of March 1688, when King Wilkins affirmed the government) shall not be accounted any part of the time within which any person by virtue of the statute of limitations might bring his action, but that he shall not be prejudiced in obtaining the same time as is from the cooks of December to the 12th of March for bringing his action. 3 Lev. 283.
It is clearly agreed, that the defendant’s being a member of parliament, and intitled to privilege, will not have a bar of the statute; because the plaintiff may have filed his original suit without being guilty of any breach of privilege.
1 Lev. 311, 111. Car. 256.
It is said, that if a man sues in chancery, and, pending the suit there, the statute of limitations attaches on his demand, and his bill is afterwards dismissed, the matter being properly determinable at common law; in such case the court will preserve the plaintiff’s right, and will not suffer the statute to be placed in bar to his demand.
1 Vern. 73. 74.
If the statute of limitations be pleaded to an action, the plaintiff to fave his action may reply, that he had commenced the suit in an inferior court within the time of limitations; that it was not then barred, and that such suit began before the bar, and shall be acknowledged by a favourable construction of the statute of limitations; altho’ in (irth-nenf the suit is commenced in the court above, when it is removed by habeas corpus; and this shall be allowed by a favourable construction of the statute of limitations, because it is brought in a good place, but that the plaintiff might reply the fut below, and flew that to have been in the within fix years; not that this fut was a continuance of the fuit below, but that the plaintiff had rightfally and legally purfued his right; and it should not be in the power of the defendant, to defeat or hinder him of a re-6. Where the fuing out a writ will give bar of the statute. It is clearly agreed, that the fuing out an original will give a bar of the statute of limitations, and that thereupon the defendant may be outlawed; and that if the plaintiff come to the court within the time of the order, then it shall be reversed after his return, yet the plaintiff may bring another original by journeys accounts, and thereby take advantage of his fritt writ. Carr. 256.
3 Med. 311.
Also it is agreed, that the fuing out a latitati is a sufficient commencement of a fuit, to fave the limitation of time, because the latitati is the original of B. R. and may be continued on record as an original writ. 1 Sid. 53. 60. Carth. 233. 1 Salt. 421.
Also it hath been ruled, that to a plea of the statute of limitations the plaintiff may reply, that he fued out a latitati, and continued the writ or suit, and that a relinnas non fitett brew, without concluding pront per recordum; for the latitati roll is only for the private use of the court, and no record. 2 Keb. 46. Bottle v. Wood.
So it seems the plaintiff may reply, that he fued out a latitati of such a term, without setting forth the day of the suit; and that it is not necessary to insert the But tho’ the fuing out an original, or latitati, is a sufficient commencement of a fuit, yet the plaintiff, in order to make it effetual, must fiew that he hath continued the writ to the time of the action brought. Carr. 12. 2 Salt. 245. 334. 213. 53.
That the attorney’s writing the continuances on the writ in his chambers is sufficient. 1 Sid. 53. 1 Keb. 140.
Alfo it hath been ruled in equity, that if a man hath a debt due to him by note, or a book debt, and has made no demand of it for fix years, fo that he is barred by the statute of limitations; yet if the debtor, or his executor, after the fix years, puts out an advertisement in the Gazette, or any other news-paper, that all persons who have claims against him, may appear to the bar, and that they shall be paid; this (tho' general, and therefore might be intended of legal fulfilling debts only,) yet amounts to fuch an acknowledgment of that debt which was barred, as will revive the right, and bring it out of the statute again.

6. Of the manner of pleading and taking advantage of the statute of limitations.

It feems to be admitted, that the statute of limitations must be pleaded positively by him who would take advantage thereof; and that the fame cannot be given in evidence, eafterially in an affirmaff, because the statute speaks of a time past, and relates to the time of making the promife.

In replying the defendant pleaded Not guilty De copi providit infra fex annus iam ultimae clapsa; and though it is faid the statute speaks of the fame as non epi, and if he did not take, he could not be guilty of the detention; and if this way of pleading were not allowed, the statute would be entirely evaded as to this action; yet the plea was held ill, becaufe he ought to have answered to the defendant, as well as to the taking; also a thing may be lawfully deprived, although unlawfully kept; as being put into a cattel, by which means it could not be reprieved. 1 Sid. 81. Arundel v. Trevel. 1 Keb. 279. S. C.

In trefpaifs, for a trefpaifs done thirteen years before, the defendant pleaded, that infra fex annus, &c. non of rude culpabilis. Plaintiff replies, that he brought his action fuch a term, and that within fix years before that time the defendant did the trefpaifs; and upon this the defendant takes iffue, and is found guilty; And it was held, 1f. That the defendant's plea was good in bar, without pleading the statute. 2dly. That the plaintiff's new plea is not a continuance; but although the foregoing action was not epi, and if he did not take, he could not be guilty of the detention; and if this way of pleading were not allowed, the statute would be entirely evaded as to this action; yet the plea was held ill, becaufe he ought to have answered to the defendant, as well as to the taking; also a thing may be lawfully deprived, although unlawfully kept; as being put into a cattel, by which means it could not be reprieved. 1 Sid. 81. Arundel v. Trevel. 1 Keb. 279. S. C.

As in affirmaff for fees due to an attorney, the defendant pleaded non affirmaff infra fex annis; the plaintiff replied, that on a day two years before, he had fett out an attouchment of privilege against the defendant; upon which writ taliiter proceffum futi; that the defendant (on a day) Habere term ante annum 2°; appeared, and the plaintiff declared against him modo & forma, &c.

And upon demurrer to this replication it was held ill; becaufe the plaintiff did not fet forth any continuance of this writ of attouchment, (for *vix non mist broce,) which was fix out two years before; for 'tis impoffible that the defendant could determine Habere term ante annum 2°; to a writ returnable two years before, and no other writ is fet forth by the plaintiff; but if the plaintiff, after the taliiter proceffum futi, had fhewn the last attouchment, and the return thereof, upon which in truth the defendant did appear, it had been well enough, without fhewing any of the continuances.

An indebitatus affirmaff laid several ways; the defendant pleaded alio non, qui dicit quod billa pridet fiut 20 die post, & non anteac, & qui ipfe ad aliquip tempus infra fex annis ante exhibitionem billa pridicit non affirmaff.

The plaintiff replied a bill of Middlefeft took the defendant's hand; then the defendant, on the fame day, whereupon was returnet non efi inventus, and continued down by vix non mist broce & praecept fitalia; to this it was demurred, and judgment given for the defendant; for there cannot be a fuch a bill of Middlefeft as this, which is returnable the very day of the trefpafs; and the statute of limitations is therefore of no force, if the term expires, it is to be favoured. 1 Salk. 421. Green v. Rivera.

7. Where a debt barred by the statute fiuit is to be revived. It is clearly agreed, that if after the fix years the debtor acknowledges the debt, and promifes payment thereof, that this revives it, and brings it out of the statute; as if a debtors promiffory bill, or fimple contracff, promifes within fix years of the action brought that he will pay the debt; tho' this was barred by the statute, yet it is revived by the promife; for as the note iffwe was at first but an evidence of the debt, fo that being barred the acknowledgment and promife is a new evidence of the debt, and being proved, will maintain an affirmaff for recovery of it. 1 Salk. 28, 20, Carb. 476. 2 Mod. 425, 426. 2 Shaw. 126. 2 Fent. 151.

Alfo it hath been adjudged, that a conditional promife will revive a debt barred by the statute of limitations; as where to an affirmaff by an executor for goods sold and delivered, by the testator, the defendant pleaded to the statute, and upon evidence it appeared, that the defendant within fix years, being applied to by the executor for the debt faid, If you prove that I had the goods, I will pay you; which being fully proved at the trial, it was held that this conditional promife revived the debt; and that theo' made to the executor, after the death of the testator, was fufficient to maintain the iffue; because the promife did not give any new caufe of action, but only revived the old caufe, and was of no other ufe, but to prevent the bar by the statute of limitation.

So hath it been held, that a bare acknowledgment of the debt within fix years of the action, is fufficient to revive it, and prevent the statute, tho' no promife was made. Carb. 470.

But if an indebitatus affirmaff for goods fold, be brought against four persons, who plead the ftaie of limitations, and it be found that none of them promife within fix years, there can be no judgment againft him; for the contracff being intire, it muft be found that they all promife. 2 Fent. 151.

It feems to be the doctrine of the courts of equity, that if a man by will or deed foljefct his lands to the payment of his debts, debts barred by the statute of limitation, shall be paid, for they are debts in equity, and the duty remains; and the statute hath not extinguifhed that, tho' it hath taken away the remedy. 1 Salk. 154. 2 Fent. 141.

Liberty, Liberatur, Is derived from the French livres, that is, infinita, gift, or else from livrer, id est, trave-des, and accordingly hath three significations. In one it is used for a suit of cloth or fluff that a gentleman gives in clothes and other gowns, with cognizance or without, to his servants or followers, foreign men were mentions in 20 R. 2. 1, 2. 7. H. 4. 14. 8 E. 4. 2. 13 E. 4. 3. 8 H. 6. 4. 3 H. 7. 12. 11 H. 7. 19 H. 7. 14. 3 Car. 1. cap. 4. In the other significations, it betokened a delivery of pollfection to those tenants which held of the King in capite, or knight’s service; for the King, by his prerogative, hath prima sejum of all lands and tenements so holden of him. Staunf. Proros. fol. 12. cap. 3. Every in the third significations, is the writ which lies for the heir, to obtain the pollfection or sejum of his land at the King’s hands, which fee in P. N. B. cap. 155. But by the statute 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. all wardships, literes, are utterly taken away, and absolutely discharged. Formerly great men gave livieres to several who were not of their family or servants, to engage them in their quarrels for that year: This was prohibited by the statute 1 Hen. 4. 4. that no man of whatsoever condition should give a liberry but to his dis-melts, to his officers, or to his counsel learned in either law.

Livery of land. See Tudiat.
Livery of seisin. (Dehervatis seisine) is a delivery of possession of lands, tenements, or other corporeal things, (for of things incorporeal no liver of seisin may be) to one that has right, or a probability of right thereto. 3. Edmund (in coats, 97. fol. 3.) Treditio deific off vestilia, & non nata. It is a ceremony used in conveyance of lands or tenements, where an estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, or a freehold palfeth: And it is a testimonial of the willing departure of him, which makes the livery, from the thing wherein livery is made, after the delivery of the thing, in a willing acceptance by the other party of all that whereof the other hath devised himself. The common manner of delivery of seisin is thus: If it be in the open field where is no house nor building, and if the estate pass by deed, one openly reads it, or declares the effect of it, and after that is sealed, the vendor takes it in his hand, with a cloud of earth upon a twig or bough, which he delivers to the vendee, in the name of possession or seisin, according to the effect of the deed: But if there be a house or building upon land, then this is to be done at the door of it, (some being left at the time within the house, and others outside) and then the vendee, who enters alone, shuts the door, and presently opens it again. If it be a house without land or ground, the livery is made, and possession taken by delivery of the ring of the door and deed only. And where it is without deed, either of lands or tenements, there the party delivers by the ring of a mace before wittouch the estate to parts with, and then delivers seisin or possession in manner aforesaid: And so the land or tenement palfeth as well as by deed, and that by force of the livery of seisin. See Wilt. Symbol. part. 1. lib. 2. sect. 190. and Coco on Litt. fol. 43. a. There was anciently a pair of gloves, a pair of lavers ear of wheat, &c. delivered in sign or token of livery and seisin. Livery and dutter le maine. Is where by inquest before the escheator, it was found that nothing was held of the King; then he was immediately commanded by writ, to put from his hands the lands taken into the King’s hands. Stat. 29 Ed. 1. 28 Ed. 2. c. 4. See Dutter le maine.
Liverymen of London. In the companies of Land. liverymen are chosen out of the freemen as affitants to the masters and wardens in matter of council, and for better government; and if any liveryman refuse to take upon him the office, the lord mayor and aldermen may fine him, and bring an action of debt for the sum. 1 Add. 10. 10. Local, (Locatis) Significhes in a legal sense as much as tied or annexed to a place: For example. The thing is local, and annexed to the freehold. Kichelin, fol. 180. And again, in the same place, an action of trespas by a freehold. Fro. 4. &c. Is transfery, not local, that is, not newto the place of the place of the thing of the place would be left down as material in the declaration, or if it be set down, that the defendant should traverse it by saying, he did not commit the battery in the place mentioned in the declaration, and so avoid the action. And again, sect. 320. the thing is not local, that is, not material to be set down in certain. The purpose of the perfon, and of the land differ in this, because the person being transfery, the lord may have his ravishment de Lond, before he be selle of him, but not so of the land, because it is local. Lollaros, (lo called from Walter Lollard, a German, first author of this sect, living about the year 1315.) Were certain heretickes (at least in the opinion of those times) that abounded here in England in the days of Edward the Third, and Henry the Fifth, whereas Wicchiff was the chief in this nation, according to Siow in his Annals, fol. 425. they are mentioned flat. 2 Hen. 5. cap. 7. against thefe Lollardes, much was decreyed by the synod of Constance in a council holden at Oxford. See their tenets in Spavdun’s History of Scot- land, fol. 61. The high sheriff of every county was anci- ently bound by his oath to suppress them.

—You shall (tays the oath) do all your pain and diligence to destroy, and make to cease, all manner of hereby and errors, commonly called Lollardes, within your bailihood, from time to time with all your power, &c.

The intention of thefe Lollardes was, to subvert the Christian faith, the law of God, the church, and the realm: to foid the statute of Henry 5. cap. 7. which was repealed 1 Edw. 3. cap. 12. See 3 H. 7. fol. 41. and Cowen’s Hist. fol. 75. &c. The Lord Keeper allummed the al judicet, and conceived that clause in the oath, touching suppressing Lollardes, should be omitted, because appointed by statutes that are repealed. Lords. (Dominus, Sax. Hlaford, signifying a breth- giver, bountiful or hospitable) Is a word of honour with us, and used diversely. Sometimes being attributed to those who are noble by birth or creation, and are other- wise called Lords of the parliament, and peers of the realm: Sometimes to thole so called by the curtesy of England, as all the sons of a Duke or Marquess, and the eldest son of an Earl: Sometimes to persons honourable by office, as Lord Chief Justice, &c. and sometimes to an inferior person that hath fee, and consequently the homage of tenants within his manor; for by his tenants he is called Lord, and in some places, for dillinage-fake, Landlord: In which last signification, it is most used in our law- books, where it is divided into Lord paramount, and Lord myne. Lord myne is he that is owner of a manor, and by virtue thereof hath tenants holding of him in fee, and by copy of court roll, and yet holds himself of a superior lord, called Lord paramount, over him. Old Nat. Ercis. fol. 79. We likewise read of very lord and very tenant: Very lord is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and very tenant, he that holds immediately of that lord: So that if there be lord paramount, lord myne, and tenant; the lord paramount is very lord to the tenant, Brecks, tit. Magna Charta, was either for that it contained the sum of all the liberties of England, or else because there was another charter, called Charta de Forfili, establised with it, which was the left of the two; or because it contained more than many other charters, or more than that of King Henry the Fifth, or of the great and remarkable solemnity in the denounced excommunication, and direful anathema's against the infringers of it. We read in Henry's time, that King John, to appease his barons, yielded to them laws or articles of government, much like to this Great Charter: But we have now no ancienier written law than this, which was thought to be so beneficial to the subject, and a law of so great equity, in comparison of those which were formerly in use, that if King Henry the First had left the fifth penny of all the moveable goods, both of the spirituous and terrestrial throughout the realm. disabling any limb, is a common blemish of body; whether done in the act of Murder, or otherwise, is considered as a blemish of body: Mayhem is commonly tried by the justices infecting the party; and if they doubt whether it acted, That if any person shall on purpose, and of

with all those who were his abettors, &c. and it shall be left to the jury on the evidence, whether there was a deign ference is within the statute, tho' the primary intention

Maintain, he that supports or secures a cause depending in suit between others, either by disputing money,

Maintenance, (Maintenion, and mantuementia,) Signifies the upholding of a cause or person, either by word, writing, countenance or deed; metaphorically drawn from accouring a young child, that learns to go by one’s hand:
the word signifies, the world felf, or the world’s makin, but in a man’s act in this kind is by accounted maintenance, and when, not that, see Britte, pain a man for this offence, is called Maintenance.

In special maintenance, Kitchin, acconed. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Maintenance in general, is defined by others an un-fright of, and hinderance of common right, and should be understood. Cot. Lithe. 385. b. 2. 208, 341.

It fees to be no maintenance for a man to give an other friendly advice what action is proper for him to bring for such a debt; or what method is fafest to free him from such an arreft; or what counellor or attorney is likely to do his busines most efficaciously; for it would be extremely unfeemly and improper to affit, in a nefs, which feem rather commendable than blame-worthy, to come under the notion of maintenance; which always fees to imply a contemptuous and over-baly intermeddling with other men matters, in which replete it is highly abhorrent; and in which it may be, that a publick learned in the law, may be guilty of maintenance, by telling another, who asks his advice, that he has a good the thing in which he has such affiance; and from the same ground it fees plainly to follow, that the grante of a reverfsion for good confideration might, without any artornment, maintain the tenant of the land, before the Statute 4 & 5 Ann. which makes fuch attornment needless.

No 73, 1000. 1 Hawk. P. C. 251.
Wherever any perfons claim a common intered in the fame thing, as in a way, church-yard or common, &c.
by the fame title, they may maintain another in a fuit concerning such things; and a man's bail may take care to have his appearance recorded; but, as some say, they cannot safely intermediate, for it is said in P. C. 252.

"Mover of him, or godfather to either of the parties, or related by any kind of affinity still continuing, may lawfully stand by at the bar and counsel him, and pray another to be of counsel for him; but cannot lawfully lay out his money in the cause, unless he be either stepfather, step-mother, or husband of such an heritor."

2 Iewk. P. C. 252.

Not only the actual lord, but also the cấuiur "quip" of a seignory, may come with the tenant to a trial in an affile against him, and stand by him, and assist him, and also pray the sheriff to return an indifferent jury; and it is held, in our law, that he need not additionally lay out his money in defence of his tenant's title: Alfo the lord of a town may maintain the inhabitants in an action, wherein the right to their common burying-place is questioned, by flewing authentic evidence of it to the jury. Cor. Lit. 101, 384. 2 Rad. Ab. 116, 7.

A tenant may lawfully come with his lord, and stand with him at a trial. 1 Hawk. P. C. 253.

A matter may go along with his servant, or with his domicilic chaplain, to retain counsel; alfo he may pray one to be of counsel for him, and may go with him, and stand with him, and aid him at the trial, though he may not have the benefit of his service; but the matter cannot falsely lay out money for the servant in a real action, unless he have some of his own. 2 McW. 39; But thofe, with the servant's consent, he may falsely dubbe. Br. Maint. 449 52. Herlt 79. Mor 814.

A person retained generally as a servant, and not for a particular occasion only, may lawfully ride about to further his master's business, and may go to counsel for him, and flew his evidence to the counfel, or to the jury, and stand by him at a trial, but cannot lawfully lay out his own money in the suit. 1 Hawk. P. C. 253.

Any one may lawfully give money to a poor man to enable him to carry on his suit; alo any one may lawfully go with a foreinger who cannot speak Englifh to a counfeller, and inform him of his cafe. Br. Maint. 314.

A counfeller having received his fee, may lawfully fet forth his client's caufe to the best advantage; but can no more unjustly give him money to maintain his suit, or threaten a jury, than any other perfon. 2 Ifly. 564.

2 De 1695.

Alfo an attorney specially retained may lawfully profece or defend an action in the court wherein he is an allowed attorney, and lay out his own money in the suit, and maintain an action against his client for the money so laid out by virtue of the retainer, without any special promife; alfo an attorney so retained may in like manner maintain his client in a court wherein he is an allowed attorney; but, as some fay, cannot have an action for the money laid out in the suit, without a special promife; but an attorney who maintains another is no way justified by a general retainer, to prosecute for him in all cafes, or, in an action against his own client, carry on the caufe for another at his own expence, with a promife never to expect a re-payment; and it is questionable, whether folicitors who are not attorneys can in any cafe lawfully lay out their own money in another's caufe. Ker. 342. 2 Wobk. 52. 1 See. 208.

Gr. Car. 159. 3 Moi. 59.

But counfelors and attornies using deceitful pracife in maintenance of their client's caufes are punifhable by the Common law, as well as by the ftrafute of Willm. 1, cap. 28, which enacts, "That if any ferjeant, pleader or other, defe, by any manner of deceit or confusion in the King's court, or confent unto it in deceif of the court, or to beguile the court or the party, and thereof be attain- ted, he fhall be imprisoned for a year and a day, and from thenceforth shall not be heard to plead in that court for any man; and if he be no pleader, he fhall be imprisoned in like manner by the face of a year and a day at the leaf; and if the trifpafs require greater punish- ment, it fhall be at the King's pleas. 2 Ifly. 215.

But if the matter be pleaded in the King's court, the feue will be 249. 84. 2 Ifly. 215.

Alfo it is an offence within the flatute to bring a pra- ce or caufe in the King's court, or purpose nothing in the King's court, or purpose to ouft the true tenant; or to procure an attor- ney to appear for a man, and confefs a judgment with out any warrant; or to plead a false plea, known to be utterly groundless, and invented merely to delay justice, and to abuse the court. 2 Ifly. 215.

2. How maintenance is restrained and punished by the Common law, and by statute.

By the Common law, all unlawful maintainers are not only liable to render damages in an action at the suit of the party grieved, but may also be indicted and fined and imprisoned, &c. and it seems that a court of record may commit a man for an act of maintenance in the face of the court. 2 Rel. Ab. 114. 2 Ifly. 208.

But by the 1 Ed. 3, cap. 14, and 20 Ed. 3, cap. 4, it is enacted, That none of the King's miners, nor great man of the realm, by himself nor by other, by lending of letters nor otherwise, nor other none great nor small, shall take upon them to maintain quarrels and suits in the country to the disturbance of common right. And that none of the King's miners, nor great man, shall maintain suits, or any person whatsoever shall take or sustine any quarrel for maintenance in the country or elsewhere, on great or small; that is to say, the King's counfelors and great officers, on a pain that shall be ordained by the King himself by the advice of the lords of this realm and other officers of the King, to lose their offices, and be imprisoned, and ransomed, &c. and all other persons, on pain of imprisonment and ruin, &c.

In the construction of these statutes the following points have been held.

That null tidi record is a good plea to an action of maintenance, and it appears, that they extend not to the taking out an original, which is never returned but they extend as well to maintenance in a court baron as to maintenance in a court of record; neither is it material whether the plaintiff in the action, where there was such maintenance, was nonsuit or receive red; but it is said, that none of the statutes of maintenance extends to the spiritual court. 1 Hawk. P. C. 160-7.

He who fears that another will maintain his adversary, may, by way of prevention, have an origin grounded upon these statutes, prohibiting him to do it. 1 Hawk. P. C. 156.

By the 32 Hen. 8, cap. 9. No perfon shall unlaw- fully maintain or caufe or procure any unlawful main- tenance in any suit in any of the King's courts, when any perfon shall have authority by the King's com mission, patent or writ to hold ple a of lands, or to carry on, bear or determine any title of lands, &c. and no person shall unlawfully maintain, for maintenance of an ait or plea, any perfon or persons, or embrace any fee holders or jurors, or suborn any witnesses by letters, rewards or promises, or any other sinister means, to main- tain in any matter or caufe, or to the disturbance of judgment, &c. on pain of 10 l. one moiety to the King, the else to the informer. In an information thereon it is not sufficient to say that the defendant maintained the party, without adding that he did it unlawfully; neither is it sufficient to say that a bill was exhibited, with further shewing that plea was depending. 1 Hawk. P. C. 258.

3. Offence of buying or selling pretended titles.

It feemis an high offence at Common law, as plainly tending to oppression, for a man to buy at an under-a doubtful title known to be disputed, to the intent that the buyer may carry on the suit, which the seller doth not think it worth his while to do; and it seems not material whether the title be good or bad; or whether the seller were in possession or not, unless the possession was lawful and uncontested.

Alio by the 1 R. 2. cap. 9. recting, that many persons having true title to lands, &c., were wrongfully delayed, by means that the defendants did make gifts and feoffments of their lands in debate, and of their goods to others, by false pursuivant; and make their pursuivants; and also that many persons used to diffe it, and anon to make seoffments sometimes to great men to have maintenance, and sometimes to persons unknown, to the intent to delay the said difficile, &c., and therefore it is sliced, that no gift or seoffment of any thing or thing be made to for that maintenance, and that if any be so made, they shall be void for none; and that the said difficile shall recover against the first diffire the lands and damages, without having regard to such alienations, so that they commence their suit within a year after the difficile.

It is further enacted by 32 Hen. 8. c. 9. That no person shall bargain, buy, sell, or by any means obtain any pretended rights or titles, or take promises, grant or covenant to have any right or title to any hereditaments, unless the seller, &c., his ancestors, or they from whom he claims, have been in possession of the same, or of the rents and profits thereof, or take the rents or profits thereof for one whole year next before the suit shall be brought; &c., or, on pain that such seller shall forfeit all whole value of the hereditaments so sold, and the buyer or taker, knowing the same, shall forfeit the value of the hereditaments so bought by him or taken; the same to be a good defeasance of any title to the King, the power to which he will give the same, whether freely or by any old. 4 Ca. 26. a. Ca. Lit. 369. b. Mor 655. and the plaintiff in this action must have the value of the time of the bargain. Cro. Cor. 233.

But it is provided, That it shall be lawful for any person, being in lawful possession, by taking of the yearly rent, or by profits of any hereditaments to buy or sell, by any reasonable means, the pretended right or title of any other person to the same.

Provided, That no one shall be charged with these peccacies, unless he be found within one year after the offence.

In the construction of this statute the following opinions have been held.

That the statute being publick, there is no need to recite it in an action brought upon it; but if you take it to recite it, a material misrecital will be fatal, &c. Rep. 305. Piso. 84. Cro. Cor. 233. Dyer 74.

An action will not lie wherein the author of a title, it must expressly appear, that the defendant knew that the seller had not been a year in possession; but in such an action by the buyer, the contrary must expressly appear; for otherwise it may be intended that he was particeps crimin. 1 Leon. 107. Lit. Rep. 369.

A contract for a lease for years, unlesss fairly made to the title in occupation, is within the statute, whether it were made off the land, or upon the land by a person in or out of possession; and in an action on the statute for making such a lease, there is no need to shew is commencement or end, because the plaintiff is supposed to be a stranger to it. Ca. Lit. 359. 1 Leon. 166.

No conveyance by one who has an uncontested possession and absolute undisputed property of lands, as by a difficulty having obtained a release from the difficulty who ad the true right not contested by any other person whatsoever, or by a mortgagee having redeemed his goods, is within the meaning of the statute; because it no way favours of maintenance, and can be prejudicial to no one; neither is a lease for the usufruct of any one who recovers lands by virtue of an ancient title, within the meaning of the statute, though he had the absolute property and possession of the land; for the intent of the statute was to restrain all persons from transferring any disputed right within two years. Ca. Lit. 359.

Whoever has a reverence with respect to the laws of God, may lawfully take any conveyance which will strengthen his estate; but cannot take a covenant from a stranger for a conveyance from him, when he shall have recovered the land. Ca. Lit. 359.

Bar. Ast. 577; 4 Adl. 281.

And in this sense and use of it, it is said by some to:

of modern date; and to owe its original to Baggs’ cafe

C. 9:2.), but others hold it for more ancient, and therein, the effect of which, without such writ, they are in duty, and virtue thereof, obliged to do; and is a writ of which the superior court is obliged to issue in the inary form, without imposing any terms on him who mandamus, and therefore to the due course of law.

11 C. 93, Baggs’ cafe.

But it must appear what the office is; and therefore a mandamus to swear one, who was elected to be one of the eight men of the Aldermen court, was denied; because it was not specially interred, what the nature of the office was, so as the court might be able to determine, whether it was such a place for which a mandamus will lie, or not.

2 Adl. 316.

A mandamus lies to reform a town-crier, being an office of a publick nature, and such as relates to the administration of justice; but if a corporation have a power by their charter to have a town-crier, who shall continue during the life of the mayor and aldermen;

by this they have an arbitrary power of turning him out at pleasure, and need not, to the return of a mandamus, af-sign any reason or cause for their comical herein.

So a mandamus lies for a recorder and a clerk of the peace; for these are officers of a publick nature, and relate to the administration of justice.

Sild. 432. 1 Vent. 145. 153. 4 Mad. 311.

It is admitted by all the books which speak of this matter, that a mandamus lies to reform a fellow of a court; but some hold, that a mandamus does not lie to reform a fellow of a court, because a private,

office, and such as does not concern the administration of justice; but others hold that it does; because he is judge of that part of the court which concerns copy-holds, and is therefore an officer concerned in the administration of justice.

It hath been adjudged, that a mandamus lies to reform one to an attorney’s place, in an inferior court; because his is an officer concerning the publick justice; and is compellable to be an attorney for any man, and has a

So a mandamus was granted to the mayor of Reading, an inferior court in Reading. 1 Vent. 11. 1 Sld. 440. 1 Med. 23.

It hath been adjudged, that a mandamus lies to reform a fellow; so as to this the court at first doubted; because he was rather a servant to the parson than an officer, certificate from the minister, and divers of the parson that the copman was to chuse a fellow, and that he held it for his life; and that he had 2d. a year of every house within the parish; they granted a mandamus directed to the churchwardens.

2. Where mandamus lies to inferior courts and magistrates, to oblige them to do justice.

The court of King's Bench, having a superintendency over all inferior courts and magistrates, will oblige them to perform that which the party is intituled to, and which they are enjoined by law to do; and of this there are multitudes of instances, as where the ordinary refers to grant the probate of a will to an executor, or to grant administration to the next of kin, he may be compelled thereto by mandamus; for these being things enjoined by statute, the temporal courts will take care that due obedience is paid to them. Stil. 7, 8, 1 Lec. 180. 1 Sid. 293. Com. 159. 450.

But a mandamus will not lie to oblige the ordinary to grant administration durante manu iustae of an infant to the next of kin, this being a matter out of the statutes, and therefore discretionary in the ordinary to whom to grant it; and if in such case he grants it to an improper person, or infilts upon unreasonable securitie, the refreeds must be by appeal or, if in the last instance there be any remedy at Common law, it must be by prohibition. Hill. 4. Ges. 2. Smith's case in B. R.

So if the tellator makes his s. his residuary legatee, who by the ecclesiastical law is intituled to administration upon the execution remuneration by the spiritual court, refuse to admit him thereto, they cannot be compelled by mandamus; for this is a matter purely of ecclesiastical consuewes, and out of the statutes; and therefore the party's refreeds must be by appeal, Mich. 7 Ges. 2. in B. R. King v. Buttfford, 2.

If by the custom of a corporation, &c. a person for exercising an apprenticeship there, is at the end of his term intituled to his freedom, and the mayor, &c. refuse to frame them such letters, they may be compelled by mandamus; for this is an act of public justice, which the superior court will see executed. 1 Liv. 41. 1 Sid. 107. 5 Mod. 402. 6 Mod. 227. 260. Cash. 448.

So it hath been held, that a mandamus lies to the justices of the peace, to oblige them to admit a person to the oath of allegiance, and to subscribe according to the act of toleration, in order to qualify him to teach a dissenting congregation; and herein it is said, that the party ought to sue for such whatever is necessary to induce him to be admitted; and if that be not done, or if it be done, and the fact be false, that will be a good matter to 6 Mod. 310. Peat's case, and vide 2 Saith. 572. 6 Mod. 222. 151.

So a mandamus lies to the justices of the peace, churchwardens and overseers of the poor, to oblige them to make rates for the relief of the poor. Comb. 423. 478.

To a justice of the peace to figu a poor-rate. 5 Mod. 275.

So mandamus have been granted to oblige justices of the peace to discharge prisoners, pursuant to act of parliament made for the relief of inferior debtors. 2 Show. 74. Comb. 203. Vide 6 Mod. 557-9.

So where by the statutes 15 & 16 Car. 2. for erecting Newgate market, power is given to the mayor and aldermen of London to impanel a jury, who shall affec. and adjudge, whohe, and what, the money to be paid to the owner of the ground and the verdict be of such jury, on that behalf to be taken, and the judgment of the said mayor and court of aldermen thereupon, be not the payment of the money so awarded or adjudged, shall be binding and conclusive to and against the owners, &c. and there being 15000 feet of the ground of J. S. taken away for this purpose, for which a jury being impannelled, assis. and a way to award two elders foot; but the mayor and court of aldermen refusing to give sentence or judgment thereupon, a mandamus was awarded to compel them to it, 1 Vent. 187. Regm. 214 Alderfy's case.

And this general jurisdiction and superintendency of the King's Bench over all inferior courts to restrain them within their bounds, and to compel them to execute their jurisdiction, whether such jurisdiction arises from a modern charter, fubjul. by custom, or is created by act of parliament, yet being in subodium jussitia, ha. of law only, by the execution of a variety of instances; as a mandamus granted to the quarter-feasons to give judgment for abating a nuisance.

So a mandamus was granted to the court of Sand-with, to give judgment in an afflant and battery. Mich. 5 Geo. 1. 1.

So a mandamus was granted to the sheriff's court in London, to give final judgment upon a writ of inquiry. Mich. 7 Geo. 1. Baffy v. Brum.

So a mandamus was granted to the bailiff of Andover, to give judgment in a cause there depending; but the court in this case required an affidavit of their refusals, or else it should be presumed that the court would do right. Tin. 2 Geor. 3, 1.

So a mandamus was granted to the corporation of Liverpool, to hold an assembly for doing the publick business, which was making laws. Mich. 8 Geo. 1.

But though these kind of writs are daily awarded to judges of courts to give judgment, or to proceed in the execution of their authority, yet are they never granted to aid a jurisdiction, but only to enforce the execution of it; nor are they ever granted where there is another proper remedy, and therefore will not lie to an officer of an inferior court, as to a feignat at maec, an apprentiss. &c. to compel them to execute their duty; for there are proper respective courts, and punis. by the judges of them, and the inferior court to interpose in obliging such inferior officers, would be to usurp the authority of the court, which has a proper jurisdiction over its own officers, and which alone is answerable to the he superior court for the execution of such authority; and therefore where a mandamus issued to the vice-maister, to proceed to the Exchequer, at Cambridge, to have him to execute a sentence of deprivation, pronounced by the bishop of Ely, as visitor of the college, against Dr. Bently, the master of that college: and it appearing on the face of his writ, and in the course of his argument with the visitor, the court held, that no mandamus would lie: for taking the bishop to be general visitor, as he writ supposes, he is the proper person to carry his own sentence into execution, having power in capite sum in membris; and if the vice-maister refuses obedience to his authority, that the bishop himself or his deputy shall proceed, he will and shall be immediately ousted by he judgment; or taking the crown to be visitor, the vice-maister may be punished by commissioners appointed by the crown; one of which ways the court held to be the proper one to compel the vice-maister to do his office;

A mandamus to deliver up the ensigns of an оffice,

Stran. 1599.

3. From what court this writ issus; to whom to be directed; and by whom to be returned.

This general jurisdiction and superintendency is now only exercised by the court of King's Bench, as the supreme court, of refraining and keeping all inferior courts and magnificates within their proper bounds, and obliging them to execute that justice with which they are invited.

3 Bos. Ab. 540.

If a mandamus may issue out of Chancery, yet on a motion to the Lord Keeper, to grant a mandament writ to the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, to command him to sign a bill of exceptions, and a precedent produced, where in a like case such a writ had issued out of Chancery to the judge of the sheriffs court in London; the Lord Keeper denied the motion, for that the precedent produced was to an inferior court, and he would not presume but the Chief Justice of England would do what should be jutt in the cafe. 1 Pern. 175.

But though the court of King's Bench be intrusted with this jurisdiction of infaining writs of mandamus, yet are they not obliged to do so in all cases wherein it may seem proper, but herein may exercise a differenciable power, as well in refusing as granting such writs; as where the end of it is merely to try a private right, where the granting it would be attended with manifest hardships and difficulties, &c. to even since the following 11 Ges. 1. for obliging corporations to elect officers, it hath been held, that this court have a differenciable power of refusing a writ for that purpose, but may full receive information about the election, and, if dissatisfied with the right, may order the parties to try it in an information. Hill. 3 Ges. 2. The King v. Mayor and Burghers of Tintagel in Cornwall.

Allo in a doubtful case, the court of King's Bench may award a mandamus to be considered of further on the return, which may give more light, and discover more fully the jufains of granting or refusing it, and on such return either eflablis or quash the writ. 1 Std.

Ca. Law. Eq. 49.

The writ is to be directed to him, who by law is obliged to execute the office to which he is appointed, and therefore where a mandamus was granted to the mayor, &c. of Newtow, it was moved, that the fene of the mayor differed from the majorit of the corporation, and that he would execute the writ; whereas the corporation were for returning an excute, &c. and they prayed, that the mayor might be ordered to deliver the writ to the rett of the corporation. Sed non allocatur for he is the head and principal, and take your course against him. 2 Salt. 432, 701.

If a mandamus be directed to the two bailiffs of a town to swear in other bailiffs, and they objecl, thaving sworn two others, and being ordered to swear in more, and that the writ not being directed to them in their natural capacities, they are not obliged to pay any obedience thereon; the court notwithstanding obliged them to return the writ; for if the person sworn in by them had no right to be chosen, they full continue bailiffs, and order to obey the King's writ. 6 Mut. 133.
The King v. The Town of Clitheroe.

But where a mandamus was directed to the churchwardens of W., to reimburse A. to the office of sexton, and forced upon the late churchwardens, after their office was, expired; and an affidavit being made that no attachment should not go, for not obeying the mandumus; and the whole matter being disclaimd by affidavit, the court allowed as a good reason for their not returning the writ, that they at the time of the writ delivered to them were not churchwardens. Tri. 5 Ges. 2. in B. R.
The King v. Churchwardens of Wrexham.

A mandamus to the mayor, aldermen and capital burgesses of D. via, Whereas A. and B. &c. removed the party complaining from his office of burgesses, commanding them to command A. and B. to refund him, was quashed, for the party is abscond, and the spirit should be directed to one person to command another. 2 Salt. 439.
The Queen v. The Mayor, &c. of Derby.

The writ is to be returned by him upon it which is directed; and if any other return it in his name, without his privity and consent, an action on the cafe lies against him; also it is a great offence, for which the court will

If a mandamus be directed to the mayor, &c. and the mayor, who is the most principal and proper peron, returns and brings in the writ; the court upon affidavits will not except, whether the same was the fene of the majority, but will receive it, and leave the parties to punish the mayor for the misdemeanour, if he be guilty;
but a peremptory mandamus will be granted, if the return be falsified. Carith. 500. The King ver. Mayor,

g. of enforcing obedience to the writs, compelling a return, and what shall be deemed a good return.

On every mandamus there regularly issues an alias and pluribus, to oblige the party to return the writ; but the court of King's Bench may make a peremptory rule to return the writ, and in cases of disobedience grant an attachment; also by the statutes 9 Ann. and 1 Geo. 1. Perons, who are by law required to make returns to mandamus', in such cases as are within the statutes, must make their return to the first writ of mandamus. 2 Salk. 430, 431. 6 Mod. 35. 2 Sm. 660.

If an attachment issues for not returning a mandamus, and the sheriff, who is to serve the process, takes bail thereupon, this is such a misdemeanour, for which an attach- ment will be granted against him; for there are no like attachments in Chancery, for want of an answer, which are only as attachments of processes, but are writs on contempt in nature of executions, and so not bailable by the sheriff. Mich. 9 Geo. 2. The King v. Bofcervile, sheriff of Shropshire.

If a mandamus is awarded for electing an officer, and there is an equality of votes, so that the electors cannot agree, it is said, that the sheriff must give the return of the election, and it is said, that if the electors cannot agree, this is not to be sufficient to issue such matter as the party may falsify in an action, but also such matter must be alleged, that the court may be able to judge of it, and determine whether the party's conduct be agreeable to law or not.

1 Salk. 432. 1 Vent. 111.

Therefore, if to a mandamus to the Lord President and Counsel of the Marches, to admit a perfon to the exercise of the office of deputy secretary, the return is, that non fuit tempore receptionis brevis deputatus confittuit; this is naught; for if he were made his deputy before, the return was true; unless he made him his deputy at the very instant of the receipt of the writ. 1 Vent. 110. The King v. Clepham.

To a mandamus to admit a perfon alderman, the party may return, that he was not qualified, or that he was not elected; also several causes may be returned, but they must be considered; and therefore if the return admits a good election, and afterward avow by matter repug- nant, this is naught. 2 Salk. 436. The Queen v. Mayor, &c. of Norwich.

A mandamus to swear one into the place of town- clerk; the return was, that upon the election B. had 18 voices, and the party who sued the mandamus but 17; and that they swore in B. and it was held a bad return, being argumentative, when it should be express and direct; that he was not chosen. 6 Mod. 309.

A mandamus was granted to rehearse the recorder of Barneyfield, directed to the mayor of the corporation; and he returned, quod non habet mandatum; that he was ever elected; and the return adjudged insufficient, and the refolution awarded. Regm. 153.

So where to a mandamus, to rehearse a town clerk, it was returned, that he nuncum debito modo admissus; and it was held a bad return, being a negative pregnant, and insufficient to the cause, when the plain fact only ought to be returned, so as to enable the court to adjudge upon it, and the party to bring his action, in case it were false. 1 Sid. 209. 1 Kebr. 653, 716. 733.

But if the mandamus Tuggs, that he was debito electo, a return quod non habet mandatum is good, because it admits of the party's return in the writ. Cartb. 170. Lambert's cafe. 2 Salk. 433. 5 Mod. 11. S. P.

5. Of traversing the return, taking issue thereon, remedy for a false return, and of awarding a peremptory mandamus.

The party to the return of a mandamus could not traverse nor impugn, which is one reason why the utmost care was required in such return. 1 Vent. 111. 2 Salk. 432.

But now by the Stat. 9 Ann. cap. 20. reciting, that divers persons had illegally intruded themselves into, and taken upon them to execute the office of mayors, bailifs, port-receivers, and other offices within cities, town corpora- tions, and other places; and the great difficulties of determining, where the office was annual, the right of the same, within the compass of the year, or where it was not annual, the difficulty of determining the right before the persons had done divers acts prejudicial to the peace and order of such city, &c. and reciting the great difficulty persons illegally turned out, or refused to be admitted, lay under, and the dilatoriness and expense attending the proceedings on writs of mandamus it is therefore enabled, That as often as, in any of the cases aforesaid, any writ of mandamus shall issue out of the King's Bench, the courts of fequisitions of counties palatine, or of any other counties or cities, it shall be lawful for the grand forum in such cases, as a return shall be made thereunto, it shall and may be lawful to and for the perdon or persons, fusing or producing such writs of mandamus, to plead to or traverse at any or any the material facts contained within the said return, to which the perdon or persons making such return thereof, whether per sons, suiting, fuing, writing, shall and may try the same in such place, as an issue joined in such action on the caufe should or might have been tried; and in case a verdict shall be found for the perdon or persons fusing such writ or judgment given for him or them on demurrer, or not diicit, or for want of a replication, or other pleading he or they shall recover his and their damages and costs in such manner as he or they might have done in the action on the caufe aforesaid; such costs and damages to be levied by captas ad satisfacientium, fere facias eligit, and a peremptory writ of mandamus shall be granted for the same, on the return or then such writ shall be given, as might have been, if such return had been adjudged insufficient; and in such judgment he shall be given for the perdon or persons making such return to such writ, he or they shall recover his or their costs of suit, to be levied in a manner aforesaid.

There is a case that for a false return to a man- damus an action on the cafe lies; as if upon a mandamus to refuse T. S. to his place of burges of P. the mayor &c. return a good cause, the matter of which is an action lies for the false return. 11 Co. 99. Bagg cafe.

and therefore where in an action on the cafe in C. B. for a false return to a mandamus, judgment was given for the plaintiff on demurrer; yet the court of D. B. refused a exemptory mandamus; because every mandamus rectifies the fault great nisi obstat per recordum, which cannot be fied in this cafe, as the court cannot take notice of the records of the Common Pleas. 2 Sub. 428. 8 Sm. 670.

Mandamus, Was also a writ that lay after the year and day, where in the mean time the writ called Diena phasis extremum had not been sent out to the executioner, commanding him to inquire of what lands held by his cahrges the tenant did rejoice. &c. See F. N. D. 563.

Mandamus, Was also a writ or charge to the sheriff,

Mandatary, (Mandatarius,) He to whom a charge or commandment is given. Also he that obtains a benefice

Mandate, (Mandatum,) It is a commandment judicial made of the King, to enjoin the execute any thing done for by the Register Judicial, vero Mandatum. We Manner, (from the Fr. manner, or manner, i.e. manu-chief having stolen any thing, is taken with the same fence that the party called facre deputati, dit qui fragfante delitiis, S. P. C. 179. Such a criminal is not bailable by law: And anciently, if one guilty of felony or larceny had been freely purfued, and taken with the manner, and the goods fo found upon him had been brought into court with him, he might be tried imme-matters which had the franchise of infaffness. H. P. C.

Mano, (Manoerum,) Seems to be derived of the Fr. manower, habitation, or rather from manu, of abiding there, because the lord did usually reside there. By fettdom noble partem tenement (qui tenentes sequuntur) & cito noble fee of fee granted partly to tenants for certain se-tives to be performed, and partly referred to the use of his family, with jurisdicton over his tenants for their farms. This which was granted out to tenants, we call tenentacles; those which were referred to the use of men, enjoining them such services and rents as he thought good, and so he became tenant to the King, the inferior became tenants to him. See Perkin's Reforuation 570, and Harle's Mirror of Judicries, lib. 1. cap. De Reve Ayed, and Polbeck, 410. According to this our custom, all lands holden in fee throughout the kingdom, were free of feft and arrires feft, whereas the former are such as are immediately granted by the King; the second, such as the King's fendaries do again grant to others.

Gregorius Synag. lib. 6. cap. 5. num. 3.
In these days a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and duty incor-poral, than the land or site. For a man may have a manor in gross, (as the law termeth it,) that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites there-unto belonging, and another or others have every foot of the land, Kitchin, fol. 4. Brake, hoc titulo per tonum.
Breton, lib. 4. cap. 31. num. 2. divideth munirem in capite & $m capitalis. See Fe. A manor may be compounded of divers things, as of a house, arable land, patlure, meadow, wood, rent, advowfon, court-baron, and such like; and this ought to be by long continuance of time, beyond the memory of man; but at this day a manor cannot be made, because a court-baron cannot be made, and a manor cannot be without a court-baron, and suitors or freeholders, two at the least; for if all the freeholds, except one, except one, there his manor be gone causa quae infra, although in common fentence Prince is divided.

Manione. (Manio, a manudes,) According to the de-inition of Brunswick, lib. 5. cap. 28. num. 1. Is a dwel-ing confiting of one or more houses. It is most commonly taken for the lord's chief dwelling-house within his fee, otherwise called the capital messuage, or chief manor-place. Brunswick, lib. 2. cap. 26. Manifon, amongst the ancient Romans, was a place appointed for the loging of the Prince, or soldiers in their journey; and in this sense we read visum manomine, &c. It is probable, that this word manufon both in some conftitution signify so much land as Beli calles facre delitiis, and in others in Hiftry. For Lombard, in his Explanation of Saxon Words, ver. Hida terra faith, that which he called fethamum, others since called manumitem vel manafum. Manafs & manufs, you may read in the Feudifh,

Ingham, and mentioned by Sir Edward Cole in his Rep. De faure Regis Exactissifaiia, seems to signify a certain quantity of land. Hic ut mensa Mat. Welfon, in Anno 857. Petle, lib. i. cap. 51. Sometimes manfa signifies a family, as, Terram 50 manumionum, &c. concilium Clifton, anno 800. But that which in ancient Latin authors was called hida, was afterwards called manfa, i.e. as much land as one plough could till in a year. Cowell, ed. 1727.

Manumission, (Manumission) Is the freeing of a villain or slave out of his bondage: The form of it, in the conqueror's time, Labard in his Archives, fol. 116. feteth down in these words, Sint quis velit faterum libero facere, tradat eum vicinian, per manum destruct in pleno comito, & quitteris ilium servitutum & familliam; & glorieti ei liberat portis & vis, & tradat ei libera arma, felicet lanceam & gladium, & deinde ilie hopo effebrir. Some also were "manumitted by charter. Vide Brede, tit. Villenge, fol. 325. The terms of the law make two kind of manumission, servus libertus, & servus servitus, the other implied: Adam.

Inferioris manumissionis, is when the lord makes a deed to his villain, to infranchise him by this word manumittore, the manner of which in old time was thus: The lord, in presence of other persons, took the bond-man by the head, saying, I will that this man be free, and therupon shoved him forward out of his hand. Manumission in this sense is when the lord makes an obligation for payment of money to him at a certain day, or if he should enter without suit; or granteth him an annuity, or leaseth lands to him by deed, for years, or for life, and such like. Marriage, or marriage, freely taken, is that right which the lord of the fee had to marry the daughters of his vassals after their death; Others tell us, it was that profit which might accrue to the lord by the marriage of his under age, who left his lands of him by Knight's service. Matthew Paris tells us, that it was fo early as the year 574, in the life of Guerinus, abbot of St. Almon. Skew of Verb. Signer. That mark, which is now in Saxon of ponderibus & mensoiris, a mark signifyeth an ounce, or half a pound, whereof the dram is the eight part of a mark, signifying an ounce, or half a pound, of weight or small country, or mark-marriage, viz. pascuus, venales, etc. In this sense the word seems to be first applied to a certain part, as the market or a market of marks, or with the meaning of the word merchant. Hence the word marrow, as in mangy; acquisitum mercatoris, qui mercatus defponsit & exsossibus venales, quibus necessitas erit prolixior maris in mercatur, & tertius pars relinquatur redimendis de mercatur ad propriam, & Lib. 4. cap. 28. feft. It was customary in former times, that most fairs and markets were kept on Sunday; and in many places they are still kept in the churchyard. This custom fo fast obtained, that though it was prohibited by several Kings, yet we see by the statute before-mentioned, it continued till the reign of Henry VI. This custom is mentioned in Mon. parents might be employed in making provision for their children; and that the love and respect of their children might be repaid to both parents, without diffusion or confusion; which could not be well done, if the marriage was to be disjoined, and their interest was to fever after the concern of education was over: Besides, the interest of marriage would be inconveniently carried upon, without a mutual friendship and endearment, which must be lefled and destroyed by the prospect, that the contract might be determined by the humour of either party. Hence it is, that fornication and all other lusts are unlawful, because children are begotten without any care or preparation for their education; and the crime of adultery receives this further aggravation, that it not only instils a furious race on the party, for whom he is under obligation to provide, but likewise destroys that peace and mutual endearment which ought always, to subsist in the marriage state. 3 Bach. 269.

1. What persons may marry within the Levitical degree.

2. Of offspring and marriage-contracts; and of the solemnization and ceremonies requisite to a complete marriage.

3. Of the offence of a forible marriage, and marrying an infant female under the age of 16, without consent or guardians.

Herein first, we must take notice of the statute 32 Ed. 4, cap. 38. by which it is enacted, "That a separation or prohibition, (God's law excepted,) is no trouble or impeach any marriage within the Levitical degrees; and that no person, of what estate, degree, or condition, forever be, shall be admitted by any of the pretended bishops of the King's realms, or any other bishops, of other lands and dominions, to any process, plea or all question contrary to the statute."

Since this statute, it hath been clearly agreed, that the Spiritual court proceeds to impeach or dissolve a marriage out of the Levitical degrees, that then the Tal person may not be convicted; but by that statute marriages, that are out of those degrees, are declared to be good and lawful; and therefore, if the Spiritual court moleft persons in doing that which is declared lawful be done by the statutes of the realm, they are by the Temporal courts to be prohibited, because they execute that prohibition, thus bounded by the Temporal law, but where the law has not bounded them, their jurisdiction still continues; and therefore within the Levitical degrees they are still judges of incest. Vaug. 206, &c.

We must likewise obelize, that if a person marry cousin within the Levitical degrees, yet they cannot be convicted of any of the forible marriages, that have been brought in evidence in the courts of lease, that have been brought in evidence in the courts of law.

Nothwithstanding the law of nature, there are all marriages between the ascending and descending line in infinitum; and this is said to be contrary to the law of nature; because it tends to the defirution of the natural will of rector, which defined the preservation and continuance of such inhabitants of the world as he originally created and all acts of men that tend to the defirution of the spark of life, or any innocent person or any living creature against the law of nature; and therefore, because, between the ascending and descending line, is contrary to the law of nature; for the mother would never have preferred and educated the female issue, if it had been admitted to the father to have access to them; and fathers would have never had and preferred their male issue, if they had not had the issue of their own body.
to another reason why this is called unnatural, and that it is the natural duty between parents and children, because the father for the parent could never preserve or maintain that authority that is necessary for the education and government of his child; nor the child that reverence that is due to the parent in order to be educated and governed, if such indigent unfamiliarities were admitted. Whereas this, as it is the bond and tie of its kind, it is a near intercourse between collaterals, which is rawn from that which is observed in brute creatures, as that it is necessary to croft the train, in order to continue the species. It may be, that there being the same tone and figure in the blood, and a similar conformation of vessels, the circulation of it becomes turpifd and defective; whereas a new mixture of others of the same kind, where there is a different figure and motion of the blood and spirits, may add a new vigour and ability to be an animal economy. Grat. de juris, i. 5. Vang. 221, 42, 43.

Those prohibited by the positive Divine law, are all collateral to the third degree; and tho' this be not contrary to the law of nature, yet it seems established on very strong reasons; for if a connubium between kindred, who might be allowed, or their marriages be tolerated, the necessity is that there is a frequent opportunity they have with each other, would fill every family with lewdness, and create heart-burnings and unexquifite jealousies between brothers and sisters, where the family was numerous; and it would confine every family to itself, and be in nature more like the education of children in loquo parentum; and by consequence it was necessary to propagate the same re-}

2. Of espousals and marriage contracts; and of the solemnization and ceremonies requisite to a complete marriage.

Swaineburne defines espousals in this manner, spoufalis sunt mutua exprimmens nuptiarum vice inter eos, quibus jure licet, faulta; which comprehends first, That this promise must be mutual; 2dly, That it must be done rites, or duly; 3dly, That it must be entered into by them who may lawfully make and receive of Espousals. 3dly, Such contracts are divided into two contras in presenti, and contracts in futuro.

A contract in presenti, or verbal in presenti, as I marry you, you and I are man and wife, &c. is by the Civil law called Eum matrinimium, and amounts to an actual marriage; which the very parties themselves cannot dissolve by release, or other mutual agreement; it being as much a marriage in the fight of God, as if it had been in facti ecclesiis, with this difference, that if they cohabite before marriage in facti ecclesiis, they are for that punishment by ecclesiastical censures; and if after such contract either of them lies with an other, they will punish such offender as an adulterer. Swain. 74. 2 Salk. 438. 6 Mod. 155.

A contract in futuro, as I will marry you, &c. may be entered in the spiritual court, but such contract either party may dissolve by release; also if either party marry another person, such second marriage dissolves the contract. Swain. fist. 10. 11. But it hath been resolved, that an action will lie at Common law for the violation of such an executory contract per verba de futuro, for the temporal loss to the party; and although the party hath a remedy in the spiritual court, but it seems, that by bringing an action at Common law, and that appearing on record, the remedy in the spiritual court is actually released; for now in lieu of a performance of the contract he shall recover damages: Also the defendant pleading, that he hath been sued for the same matter in the spiritual court, and producing a sentence against the plaintiff, the plaintiff notwithstanding any proof of his, will be nonsuit; because that they were the proper judges in the spiritual court, whether it were a precontract or not. 1 Leon. 147. 1 Rol. Such promises are good, though the time of marriage be not agreed on; but in such case it is necessary, to intitute the party to his action, to allege that he offered to marry her, and that the refusal. Carth. 467.

In an action against husband and wife, the plaintiff declared, that he promised to marry the defendant's wife while sole, and that the same promise to take her for husband, and averred, that he tendered himself, and that the refused, &c. it was objected, that marriage was no advancement to a man, though it was a woman, and also, that no time was laid when this agreement was to have been executed; but the court overruled both objections. Carth. 467. 1 Salk. 24. S. P. and the distinction between a man and woman exploded.

This action must be founded on reciprocal promises; and if the promise be on one side only, it does not bind, being only nudum pactum. 1 Salk. 24.

But if a man of full age and a female of fifteen promise to inter-marry, and afterwards he marries another, an action lies against him; for though such promise may be said to be voidable as to the infant, yet it shall be binding on the person of full age, who is presumed to have acted with sufficient caution; otherwise this privilege allowed infants, of reneding and breaking through their contracts, which was inter-deed as an advantage to them, might turn greatly to their prejudice. Trin. 5 Gis. 2. Helt. ver. Word.

If A contracts himself to B. and after marries C. and B. fues A. upon this contract in the spiritual court, it is plain, that A. shall marry and cohabit with B. which he does accordingly; they are kins and femes, without any divorces between them; and C. for the marriage of A. and C. was a mere nullity. 40. 4. It is held, that the clause in the statute a frauds and perjuries, 19 Car. 2. relating to marriage agreements, extends as well to a promise to marry, as to the payment of marriage portion. 3 Lev. 65. But Salt. 156. feems cont.'

In order to make the marriage complete, so as to in title defend himself, the in the issue to himself, &c. the same must be celebrated in facti ecclesiis; and therefore the private contract without the priest's blessing, makes no marriage, though such contract may be inforced in the spiritual court. 1 Rol. Abr. 357. Mar 169.

And although the marriage be solemnized in facti ecclesiis, yet if it were without consent, it is void; and therefore if a man takes E. &c. to wife by dote, the same is void, though solemnized in facti ecclesiis. 3. Of the offence of forcible marriages, and marrying an infant female under the age of 16, without consent guardian.

By the 3 Hm. 7. cap. 2. it is enacted in 1 words following: "Where women, as well maidens, widows and wives, having subsidences, fome in good movable, and some in lands and tenements, and for being heirs apparent unto their ancersors, for the lucre of marriage, or the same, be oftentimes taken by such midloes contrary to their will, and after marriage, to fuch midloes, or to other by their affent, or defiled to the gud displeasure of God, and contrary to the King's laws, at disparagement of the said women, and utter heavine and discomfort of their friends, and to the evil enemf of all others; it is therefore ordained, establifhed and ed acted by our Sovereign Lord the King, by the advice the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons in the said parliament assembled, and by authority of the same, that what perfon or perfon from henceforth that take any woman fo against her will unlawfully, that is to fo affent, to take her, or for the same, that such taking, procuring or abetting the same, or also receiving money of any woman to taken against her will, and knowing the same be felony; and that such midloes, takers and procurers to the same, and receivers, knowing the said offen in form afofaid, be henceforth reputed and judged as principal felon. Provided always, that this act extend not to any person taking any woman only claiming her as his ward, or bond-woman."

Sect. 3, and by 39 Eliz. cap. 9. "All persons who shall practice, or procure, or occasion, before such offence committed, are excluded from the benefit of the clergy."

In the construction of the said statute of 3 Hen. 7. the following points have been resolved; That the indigence for this offence must set forth, both that the woman had goods or credits; clear and apparent, and that the taking was for love; and also that she was married or defiled, for the ensaing clause, in saying, that what person takes any woman fo against her will, plainly referring the taking thus to be such as is within the preamble; but it needs not set forth that the taking was with intent to marry or defile."

It is said in Hole, that to make the offence felony within this statute, the taking must be against her will; but herein by Hodenius, that it is no manner of excuse, that the woman has taken or consented to the taking. If the woman is married, because if the afterwards refuse to continue with the offender, and be forced against her will, she may from that time as properly be said to be taken against her will, as if the had never given any consent at all; or till the force was put upon her she was in her own power; but if she be not to her own power, and under the power of the offender, it is not the case.

That is it not material, whether a woman taken away against her will be at last married or defiled with her consent, or not, for she was under the force at the time; because the offender is in both cases equally within the words of the statute, and shall not be conftrued to be out of the meaning of it, for having prevailed over the woman, whom by false means he got into his power. Cro. Cr. 492. 3 Kel. 192. 1 Cent. 243. Brown's cafe.

That those who after the fact receive the offender, but not the woman, are not principals within this statute; because the words are describing writingly the same woman to make, &c.; but it feemes clearly that they are actions after the offender, according to the known rules of common law. 3 Ies. 61. Dalib. 22. St. P. C. 44. Hole's Hill. P. C. 661.

That those who are only privy to the marriage, but no parties to the forcible taking away, or confenting, are not within the statute. 1 Hole's Hill. P. C. 660.

That where a woman is taken by force in the county of A, and married in the county of B, the offender may be indicted, and found guilty in the county of B. because he continuing the force there, amounts to a forcible taking away within the statute. Cro. Cr. 488. Hole 189. 1 Hole's Hill. P. C. 660.

It hath been adjudged, as is the constant practice at this day, that on an indictment for a forcible marriage, grounded on this statute, the wife may be a witness against the husband; for it being by force, it cannot be done, as in. suits of debt, to make them one person inaw. Cro. Cr. 488. 1 Cent. 243. 4 Mod. 8. It was moved for a militia inquisition to be granted to the coroner of Kent, who had returned an inquisition concerning the death of one that was killed within the manor of Greenwich; he had returned that he died of a meagrin in his head, when he was really killed with a coach. Hole laid a militia inquisition is generally upon an officer, and is directed to the sheriff. But Twysden said this cannot be to the sheriff, in 22 Ed. 4, the coroner must inquire only super viujum corporis; and if you will have a new inquiry you must quash this. Indeed a new inquiry was granted in Mile Barrley's cafe. It being prayed, that the court being the supreme court, would hear the living midmeanor of the coroner. Hole Ch. Ju. Bid them make some oath of his midmeanor, because he is a sworn officer. Without oath we will not quash the inquisition. Nowdigate said, that in the cafe of Mile Barrley the inquiry was not filed, and that that was the reason why no new warrants issued. Hole ordered the coroner to attend, who (he said) must take the evidence in writing, and that he should bring his examination into court. Mod. 82. Mich. 22 Cor. 2. B. R. Ann. See 15 Vin. Abst. tit. Mines, (Minerarcs,) Places or caverns in the earth, which contain metals or minerals. Junijs; Bomy. A mine is not properly so called till it is opend; it but a hole or cold, and all those that are found for are faken, or may go by the name thereof; but if the owner digs there also he may stop his further progres; and fail to be the use in Carmi'll. 2 Vent. 342. per Wilde J. on a case referred to him by Lord Bridgen. 22 Car. 2.

It was said by the Solicitor general, that there was a great difference between pits and mines; for if a mine be opened, he that may work the mine is not obliged to pursue the vein of ore under ground; but he may sink pits in pursuit of it which are necessery to come at the ore, and as many as he thinks proper; and Lord Chandcello did, said he had been so resolved before Perdon J. of the Supreme Court, and examining the most able miners, Caffis in Equity in L. Ch. King' time, 79. Nov. 10, 1729. Clavering v. Clavering.

If a man demines land for life or years, in which a coal-mine open, the letteff may dig in it; for the mine being open, it shall be intended by his demising all the land, and as general as any one part of the demesne; but if the mine was not open at the time of the demise, the letfle by lease of the land is not impowered to make new mines; but in such cases if he leaves his land and all mine therein, the leflee may dig for mines there; refelues 5 Rp. 12. Mint.

Mint, Is the place where the King's coin, be it gold or silver, which is at present, and long had been the Tever of London, though there are a great number of statutes, that in ancient times the Mint had been also at Galus, 12 R. 2. c. 16. 9. H. 5. stat. 5. cap. 5. The officers belonging to the Mint have not always been alike; at present they are the ; The warden, who is the chief officer of the mint, and by his office to receive the silver of the goldsmith, and to pay them for it, and to oversee all the work belonging to his function; his fee is a hundred pounds per annum. The master-worker, who receiveth the silver from the warden, caufeth it to be melted, and delivereth it to the moners, and taketh it from them again when it is made; his allowance is not any fee, but according to the pound weight. The third is the controller, who is to see that the money be made to the just aife, to oversee the officers, and control them, if the money be not as it ought to be; his fee is a hundred marks per annum. Then is the master of alloys, who weighteth the silver, and seeth whether it be according to the standard; his yearly fee is likewise a hundred marks. Then is the auditor to take the accounts. The purveyor of melting, who is to see the silver cast out, and not to be altered after it is delivered to the melter, which is after the assay- master had made trial of it. The clerk of the iron, who seeth that the iron be clean, and fit to work with. The graver, who figures the money. The moners.

The molers, that melt the bullion before it comes to the coming. The blanchers, who do anneal, and boil and cleanse the money. The forgers, who keep the gate of the mint. The provost of the mint, who is to provide for all the moners, and to oversee them. Lastly, the moners, who are fome to fearch the money, fome to forge it, others to beat it broad; fome to round it, and fome to famp or coin it. Their wages are uncertain, according to the weight of money coined by them. Cowell, edit. 1727. See Money, Privileged places.

Minutia. To let blood; minutes, blood-letting. This was a common cure of blood, upon the advice of the eccle- siastic priests or canons, who were the most confined and fedentary men. In the Register of statutes and customs belonging to the cathedral church of St. Paul's in London, collected by Ralph Baldock, dean, about the year 1500, there is one express chapter De minutiâ. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Minutes, (Minutes five minores decime.) Small tithes, such as usually belong to the vicar, as of wool, lambs, pigs, butter, cheese, herbs, feeds, eggs, honey, wax, &c. See 2 far. Minucula. A superfluous sport in the common pool, the Popish clergy for gain and deceit; prohibited by bishop Grosbeak in the diocese of Lincoln. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Miss: This syllable added to another word signifies some fault or defect; as missijefam, missijerc, i. e. to scandalize any one; mididhere, i. e. to teach amiss; or missijerum suum misijercat. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Missâ, A compact or agreement, a form of peace or compromise. Id. ib.

Misadventure, or Misadventure, (Infortunium,) Has in law a better signification for the killing of a man, partly by negligence and partly by chance. As if one, thinking no harm, carelessly throws a stone, or fooonthet an arrow, &c. whereby he killeth another: in this case he commits not felony, but only loch his goods, and hath pardon of course for his life. Staund. Pl. Cor. lib. 1. cap. 5. Britton, cap. 7. differencibus between adventure and misadventure, and adventure, and misadventure more chance; as if a man being upon or near the water, be taken with some sudden sickness, and so falls in and is drowned, or into the fire, and be burnt to death. Misadventure he maketh, where a man cometh to his death by some untoward violence, as the fall of a tree, or of a gate, the falling of a horse, or sfch like: So that misadventure in Stainsworth's opinion is construed somewhat more largely than Britton.

Miferere, is the name and last word of the 51 Psalm, being most commonly that which the ordinaries gives to such guilty malefactors as have the benefit of clergy allowed them by the law, and is usually called the 51 Psalm of Mercy. Cowell. ed. 1727.

Mifcrorropia, is in law used for an arbitrary amercment imposed on any for an offence; for where the plaintiff or defendant in an action is amerced, the entry is 100 in misericordia. Bradton, lib. 4. tra. 5. cap. 6. 4. 1. &c. nisi quis in tum pro se pauperis nihil pro diflfqno, non remanet mifericordia exigenda si illius aministis quos fuerint constitution. Kitchin, fol. 78. out. That it is called misericordia because it ought to be very moderate, and rather left to the offence, according to the tenor of Magna Charta c. 14. Therefore if a man be unreasonably amerced a court not of record, as in a court baron, &c. there is writ called Moderata mifericordia, directed to the lord or his bailiff, commanding them that they take the amercements according to the quality of the fault. Sometimes misericordia is to quit and discharged of the manner of amercements that a man may fall into in their forest. See Cresop. Jur. fol. 196. See Americamens Fines for offenses. Misericordia humana, cum (comparad of the French miz, in which composition always signifies amisé, and name, nominate.) Signifies the usage of one name for another, or a minimis. Cowell.
The names of men at this day are only founds for distinction, though perhaps they have imported something more, as some natural qualities, or particular situations; but now there is no other use of them, but to mark out the families or individuals we speak of, and to distinguish them from all others; and therefore as they are but marks and indicia of things that are not connected by the laws, they require great certainty in the use of them, to avoid the effects and consequences of mistaking the name, or specifying the party. Boc., Hist. 615.

If two names are in an original derivation the same, and are taken promiscuously to be the same in common report, though they are not so; there is no variance; and therefore where Peter Griffin brought suit against Peter Querelle, to which an outlawry was pleaded by the name of Peter Griffin, the plea was allowed; for it appears by acts of parliament, that Peter and Peter have been promiscuously, as-signifying the same person. Tract. 175. 2 Rep. Abr. 135. Ralph Griffin v. Hugh Addison.

But Ralph and Randal, Randolphus and Randalphus, and Ralph and Ranulphus, cannot be held to be different names, and do of others, in which a difference in vowels makes a variance, and common use. 2 Rep. Abr. 135. Palm. 71.

So Agnes and Anne are different names; and therefore one declare against J. S. and Agnes his wife, and on record of mispronunciation in the name is his wife, this is a material variance not amendable. 2 Rep. Abr. 135. Palm. 71.

If there are two English names that are different, and a Latin name for both, such name shall serve for both, as Jacobus for James and Jacob, although two different English names. Rep. Abr. 136. 3 Keb. 278. 1 Keb. 107.

If the Christian name be wholly misspelled, this is very fatal to all legal instruments, as well declarations of pleadings, as grants and obligations; and the reason because it is repugnant to the rules of the Christian names, that there should be a Christian without a name baptism, or that such person should have two Christian names, since our church allows of no re-baptising; or if a person enters into a bond by a wrong Christian name, he cannot be declared against by the name in the obligation, and his true name brought in an action, for that posesses the possibility of the two Christian names; and he cannot declare against the party by his right name, for he made the deed by his wrong name; for where it is to be made to the wrong person, the King may cause him to be indicted and arraigned of misprision of any deed; and if he be impeached by the name in the deed, he may plead that another person, and that it is not deed. Civ. Law, 558. 649. Owen 107. Dyer 279.

But though persons cannot have two Christian names one and the same time, yet they may, according to the institution of the church, receive one name at their baptism, and another at their confirmation; for though it allows no re-baptising to make double names, yet it will not hinder them from being declared against in their fathers, when they come themselves to make profession of their religion. C. Litt. 3. 2 Rep. Abr. 135.

The mistake of the surname does not vitiate, because though the person shall have distinct names in this surnames; and therefore if John Gate enters into an obligation by the name of John Gate, he may be impeded by the name in the deed, and his real name thought in by an alias, and then the name in the deed he shall be entitled to, because he is entitled to fay any thing contrary to the declaration made, not the contrary. The declaration must be of the name in the obligation, with an alias of the real name; for the declaration therein shall be void, as it is; therefore it must in all things follow the obligation, and the intent of the alias is only to shew he has been differently called from the name in the obligation; and therefore in a man obliging himself by alias, after wards he is made a knight, the plaintiff shall plead alias against J. S. knight alias J. S. Eqm.; Dyer 273. 1 Bull. 316.

A person cannot take advantage of a mistaking surname in an inditement, either by plea in abatement or otherwife, notwithstanding, it has no affinity with his true name, and he was never known by it; and in this respect an inditement differs from an appeal, whereof it is certain, that a misnomer of a surname may be pleaded in abatement, as well as any other misnomer whatsoever. 2 Hand. P. C. 290. See *Abition, Amendment, *ibid., 1 and 2. Milman and Add. 615.

Misprision. (Misprision, French misprision, pronouncing signifies in our law, neglect or oversight. But miffa or mitcha, was not only a fort of meafure for falt and corn, but rather the place where cabbages were to be kept for falt: Coblitus qui non confidcrat unus propius fidibus, (i.e. the place where they were put) quid vulgo mitcha vocantur. In the Magnific, it feems to be a measure, viz. Dedi cencisredinsum 10 fildirum, & in Domesflay, viz. Reddios victorum 2 mittas faliis. Gale's Hist. Brit. fol. 767.

Mifred monfrum trium piedis fhins, is a writ judicial, directed to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, to fetch and tranmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before juflices in cirze, into the Common Pleas, &c. Efg. Original. fol. 14.

Mittimus, Is a writ by which records are transferred from one place to another: Sometimes immediately, as appears by the statute 5 R. 2. cap. 15. As out of the King's Bench into the Exchequer, and sometimes by a certiorari into the Chancery, and from thence by a mittimus into another court, as you may fee in 28 H. 8. Pryer, fol. 29, and 29 H. 8. Pryer, fol. 32. Moderata miftirifratina, Is a writ for him that is amerced in a court-baron, or other court, being not of recollection or offence or the writing of a fine. It is directed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding them to take a moderate amercement of the party, and is founded upon Magna Charta, cap. 14. Cowell, edit. 1727. See Mifirifratina.

Moldus terrae vel agri, —Seicundum quod adeo fillias pedem quasuer modiorum omni agri secum omni conu fui ecclesiae Landoviaer. Gr. 3 Mon. fol. 200. This word was much ufed in the ancient charters of the Britis kingdom; it commonly contained the fame quantity of ground as with the Romans, viz. 100 feet long, and as many broad. Moldus vini, a bughead of wine. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Mold & fonna, Are words of art in procefs and pleadings, and namely, in the anfwer of the defendant, whereby he denieth himself to have done the thing laid to his charge, and fona & fonna declare. Kitfion, fol. 231. It signifies as much as that claue in the Civil law, Negat allegatur, propter algetantur, effe vonra. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Where modus et forma are of the fubfance of the ifue, and where but words of from, this diversity is to be oberved; when the ifue taken goeth to the point of the writ or action, there modus et forma are but words of from, as in the cafe of the writ of entry in afo profuit. But otherwife it is, when a collateral point in pleading is traversed; as if a feoffment be alleged by two, and the is traversed modus et forma, and it is found the feoffment of one, there modus et forma is material. So if a feoffment be alleged by one, and it is traversed modus et forma, upon this collateral ifue modus et forma are so effentiaI as the jury cannot find a feoffment without deed. Co. Lit. 281. 4.

In debt by a fervant against his master for his fahy upon a retainer, it is a good plea, that he did not receive the fervant in hubandry, and he fhall not be compelled to lay non retinendi generally; for it may be, he retaines him in other service, and not in hubandry; but non re-tinait modus et forma is a good plea; for this fhall be referrred to the declaration by thefe words modus et forma Br. Labourers, pl. 46. cites 38 H. 6. 22.

Modus forma, not put the party not in ifue; but only the mater and subfance lies the plea. Repl. Plac. 188. cap. 5.

Where a traverse is with a modus et forma, Gr. th. that will put the manner, as well as the matter in ifue, where the manner is material, as the time, the fale, and other circumstances, when they are the effect of the ifue. Repl. Plac. 188. cap. 5.

erion or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be restrained from any freedom or liberty they had before, or are hindered in their lawful trade, 3 Inst. 181. 214. 182.

And therefore all grants of this kind, relating to any new trade, are made void by the Common law; as well against the freedom of trade, and discouraging of labor and industry, and restraining persons from getting by a lawful employment, the benefit of it in the power of particular persons to fet at prices they please on a commodity; all which manifest inconveniences to the publick. 1 Hawk. P. 231. Tostenson's Collection of Proceedings in Parliament 44. 245.

And upon this ground it hath been resolved, that the king's grant to any particular corporation of the sole importation of any merchandise is void, whether such exclude be prohibited by statute or not. 2 Rel. br. 214. 3 Inst. 182. 2 Inst. 61.

Hence also it seems, that the King's charter, inwaving particular persons to trade to and from such a sea, is so far as it gives such persons an exclusive right of trading, and debarring all others; and it seems we agreed, that nothing can exist a subject from, but an act of parliament. Raym. 348. 2 Chanc. 1. 165. 1 Foss. 227. Sandis ver. East and India Company. 3 Mad. 126.

Also it hath been adjudged, that the King's grant of a sole making, importing and selling of playing cards void; notwithstanding the pretence, that the playing of them is a matter merely of pleasure and recreation, and often much abused; and therefore proper to be restrained; for since playing with them is in itself lawful and innocent, and the making of them an honest and lucrative trade, there is no more reason why any subject might be hindered from getting his livelihood by this than any other employment. 11 Co. 84. Mor 671. Ny 3. 1 Inst. 61.

And for the reason also it hath been resolved, that a grant of the sole ingrossing of wills and inventories a spiritual court, or of the sole making of bills, pleas and writs in a court of law to any particular person, is id. 2 Rel. br. 214. 1 Jan. 231. 3 Mad. 75.

But it seemeth clear, that the King may, for a reasonable time, make a good grant to any of the sole use of any art invented, or first brought into the realm by grant. Ny 182. 1 Hawk. P. C. 231.

Also it seems to be the better opinion, that the King's grant to particular persons the sole use of some particular employments; (as of printing the holy scriptures, and of selling of books) whereas an oftentimes restrained liberty may be of dangerous consequence to the publick. 1 Sel. 256. 3 OSS. 792. 3 Mad. 75.

By the statute 21 Jac. 1. cap. 3. it is declared and enacted, "That all monopolies, and all commissions, grants, licences, charters and letters patents to any person, persons, bodies politic or corporate whatsoever, of any new or future buying, selling, making, working or doing anything within this realm or without, or of any her monopoly, and all proclamation, statutes, warrants of affiance, and all other matters whatsoever, any way tending to the obstructing, hindering, or counteracting of the same, or of any others, to an equal benefit contrary to the laws of this realm, and for the same shall and shall be utterly void, and of none effect, and in wife to be put in use and execution.

Sec. 2. "That all persons, bodies politic or corporate whatsoever, shall be disabled and incapable to use, exercise or put in use any monopoly, or any benefit, advantage, licence or privilege, and putting anything as aforesaid, or any liberty, power or faculty owned or pretended to be grounded upon, or any them.

And it is further declared and enacted, "That all monopolies, and all such commissions, grants and licences, and all other things whatsoever, and the force and validity of them ought to be and all be examined, heard tried and determined by and ac-according to the Common laws of this realm, and not otherwise.

And it is further enacted, sec. 4. "That if any person or persons shall be hindered,grieved, disturbed or disquieted, or his or her goods or chattels any way feched, restrained, taken, carried away or detained by occasion in any pretext of any monopoly, or of any such commission, grant or licence, or of other matter or thing, tending as aforesaid, and will use to be relieved in any of the premises, he shall have by the warrant of the same at the Common law, by action grounded on the said statute, to be heard and determined in the King's Bench, Common Pleas or Exchequer, against the party by whom he shall be so hindered or grived, or by whom his goods shall be so felled or attached, or wherein every such person which shall be so hindered or grived, or whose whole goods shall be so felled or attached, or shall receive three times so much as the damages which he sustained by means of such hindrance, and double costs; and in such suits, or for the staying or delaying thereof, no eon, protection, wager of law, aid, prayer, privilege, injunction or order of restraint shall be in any wife prayed, granted, admitted or allowed, nor any more than one imparlance; and if any person shall, after notice that the action depending is grounded upon the said statute, cause or procure any action at the Common law grounded thereon to be stayed or delayed before judgment, by colour or manner of any order, warrant, power or authority, shall have only of the court wherein such action shall be depending; or after judgment shall cause or procure the execution to be stayed or delayed by colour or means of any order, warrant, power or authority, only by writ of error or attaint, that then the said person or persons to offending shall incur a praemunire.

It is said, that the first branch of this last clause, relating to the delay of causes of this kind before judgment, not only extendeth to the Privy Council, Chancery, Exchequer-chamber, and the like, but also to those who shall procure any warrant from the King for such purpose; and it is said that the latter branch, relating to the delaying of execution after judgment, extendeth even to the judges of the court where the cause is depending.

3 Inst. 183.

But it is provided, sect. 6. "That no declaration in the statute mentioned, shall extend to any letters patents, and grants of privilege for the term of fourteen years or under, of the sole or exclusive use of any manner of new manufactures within this realm, to the sole true and first inventor and inventors of such manufactures, which others, at the time of making such letters patents and grants, shall not use; so as all ye be not contrary to the law, nor mischievous to the state, by raising prices of commodities and, or hurt of trade, or generally inconvenient; the said fourteen years to begin from the date of the first letters patents, or grant of such privilege, but that the same shall be of such force, as they should be if the said act had never been made, and of none other.

It hath been resolved, that no new invention concerning the working of any manufacture, is within the meaning of this exception, unless it be substantially new, and not barely an additional improvement of an old one. 3 Inst. 184.

Also it hath been held, that a new invention to do as much work in a day as an engine, as formerly used to employ many hands, is not within the said exception; because it is inconvenient to turn so many laborious men to idleness. 3 Inst. 184.

Also it seems clear, that no old manufacture in use before, can be prohibited in any grant of the sole use of any such new invention.

It is further provided, sect. 7. "That nothing in the said act contained shall extend to any grant or privilege, power or authority whatsoever, before the said act made, granted, allowed or confirmed by any act of parliament, so long as the same shall continue in force.

Provided also, sect. 9. "That nothing in the said act contained shall be in any wise prejudicial to any city, borough.

burough or town corporate within this realm, concerning any grants, charters, or letters patents to them made, or concerning any custom used by or within them, or unto any corporations, companies or fellowships of any art, trade, occupation or mystery, for any corporation or societies whatsoever within this realm, erected for the maintenance, enlargement or ordering of any trade or merchandize, but that the same charters, customs, corporations, etc. and their liberties and immunities shall be of such force and effect, as they were before the making of the said act, and of none other; any thing before in the said act contained to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

And it is further provided, sect. 10. "That nothing in the said act contained shall extend to any letters patent, or grants of privilege concerning printing, nor to any commission, grants, or letters patents concerning the digging, making or compounding of falt-petre or gun-powder, or the calling or making of ordnance, or for ordnance; nor to any grant or letters patents of any office, erected before the making of the said statute, and then in being and put in execution, other than such offices as had been deceased by proclamation; but that all such grants, letters patents, etc. shall be of the like force and effect, and remain, as if the said act had never been made.

But it is enacted by 16 Car. 1. cap. 21. "That it shall be lawful for all persons, as well strangers as natural-born subjects, to import any quantities of gunpowder whatsoever, paying such customs and duties for the same as by parliament shall be limited; and that it shall be lawful for all his Majesty's subjects of this his realm of England, to make and sell any quantities of gunpowder at his pleasure, and also to bring into this kingdom any quantities of falt-petre, brimstone or other materials for the making of gunpowder; and that if any person shall put in execution any letters patents, proclamations, edicts, etc., order, warrant, restraint, or other inhibitions whatsoever, whereby the importation of gunpowder, falt-petre, brimstone, or other the materials afore mentioned, shall be any wise prohibited or restrained, he shall incur a penamaine.

And it is further provided by the said statute of 21 Jas. 1. cap. 3. sect. 14, 12. "That nothing in the said act contained, shall extend to any commissary or grant concerning the digging, compounding or making of allum or allum mines, etc. nor concerning the licencing of the keeping of any tavern or selling of wines, to be kept in the manor-houses, or other place in the tenure or occupation of the parson filling the same; and a further provision is made in the latter part of the statute, for some particular grants to particular corporations and persons, as Neufdgale upon Tyne, etc.

But it is said, that the said claque relating to allum was needless; because all such mines belong of course to the persons in whose ground they are, and therefore no privilege concerning them can be granted that the King's own ground. 3 Inf. 185.

The place where monstres were argued was anciently called a monst-ball. In the inns of court there is a ballast or surfawry of the masts yearly chose the beach, to appoint the monst-men for the inns of Chancery, and to keep account of performance of every both there, and in the house. theorically whatever were compelled by want of fear, could therefore transfer to eject in the lands, farther than to the next general jubilee, which returned three in 50 years; whereas they computed till the jubilee, that according to the distance from thence, fuel was the interdict that could be transferred to the buyer; at the vendor had power at any time to redeem, paying, the value of the lands to the jubilee; but tho’ he did not redeem it at the year of jubilee, yet that the same was given again free to the vendor and his heirs.

But our notion of mortgaging and redemption seems to have come immediately from the Civil law, and therefore it will be necessary herein to consider the differences in that law between pledges and things hypothecated. 79, 209, 249.

The 27. The pigus or pledge was, when any thing was obliged for money lent, and the possession passed to the creditor.

The hypotheca was, when the thing was obliged for money lent, and the possession remained with the debtor. Now in case of goods pawned, the creditor was obliged to the same degree in keeping them, as he used about his own; so that if the goods were left by the negligence of the creditor, an action lay as for a depleit; for the property being transferred to the creditor for a particular purpose, he was to keep them as his own. See 215, 216.

If the debtor did not redeem the thing pledged, the creditor was to foreclose the redemption of the debtor; and if the money was not paid, the creditor had an action on hypothecatio, or hypothecaria, which, when he had pursued, and obtained sentence thereon, he might sell as his own property; but there was this difference between the hypothecatio and hypothecaria; that the hypothecatio was only against the person of the debtor to foreclose him, because the pigus was already in the possession of the creditor, but the hypothecaria was in rem in ream, quam in personal, and was given ad pigus prosequendum contra quemque possessor; because herein the creditor had not the possession of the pledge, but it remained to the debtor; and till fomentation, which were called the actions, the creditor could not obtain the property of the pledge; and if the money was paid before sentence, the pledge was subject to redemption; and where the same thing was pledged to several, those were paid to be patres in pigis, to whom the things were first hypothecated. Digb. lib. 20, tit. 6, Corin. 269, 270, 271.

If the money was tendered or paid to the creditor, the contract of pigmentation was dissolved, and the debor might have the pledge back, as a thing lent; so that seems to have introduced the notion among us of the debtor’s right to redemption, and with them the usucaption, or the right of prescription, which did not extinguish the pledge, unless a bar was held in it for thirty years, or the debtor had held it for 40 years. Digb. lib. 20, tit. 6.

In the feudal law the rule was, Pandalia, invito domini, aut agnati, non rei leis fabicamentum hypothecae, quamvis frustus pug est receptum; and the reason of this rule was, because the land was held with a tenant from the lord’s original bounty, on whom he depended for his personal service in war and peace; and therefore the feudal could not obtrude a tenant on him without his leave, who might be less capable of those services; and therefore as the tenant could not originally alien without licence, so he could not mortgage. Corin. 268.

But when a licence of alienation was given about the time of Hen. 3. and it became a maxim in law, that the purity of a fee-simple imported a power of disposing of it as the owner pleased; there were two ways of mortgaging lands introduced, which Littleton distinguishes by the names of sodium vivum and sodium mortuum. 9 H. 3. 32. 18 Ed. 1.

The sodium vivum is, where a man borrows real, of another, and makes an eftate of lands to him, till he hath received the said fund of the issues and profits of the lands; and it is called sodium vivum, because neither the money nor the land is sick; for the lands are constantly paying off the money, and the tenants are not left as a dead pledge, in case the money be not paid. This seems to be

1. Of the original and several kinds of mortgages.

2. What shall be deemed a mortgage, or an estate realizable; and of the different kinds of mortgages and hypothecations.

3. Of the equity of redemption and foreclosures; and of the manner of redeeming and foreclosing.

4. Of the original and several kinds of mortgages.

The notion of mortgaging and redemption seems to be Jewish and Oriental, and from them derived to the Greeks and Romans; the plan of the Moravian law contains a just and equal agrarian, that the land was withdrawn from the same tribes and families, and the people might not be diverted by any extrict aëts and inventions from the exercise of agriculture, in which innocent emulotions they were to be continually educated; and Vol. II. No. 106.
be the ancient way of pleading lands; for they held, that lands could not be hypothecated; and therefore they used to subject the usufructus, which continued originally during the life of the feudary; but when there was a free liberty given of alienation, then the feudary could pledge the usufructus of the land at pleasure; the feoffee by his will, or his devisee after his death, received his money by degrees, and in small parcels, which was very troublesome; and those that lend money to usury, are generally willing to receive the whole in a gross sum; therefore this way of pleading is now out of use. Cf. Lit. 205. See Madd. Form. 316.

The medium mortuam is so called by Littleton, because it is doubtful, whether the seffor will pay the money at the day limited or not; and if he do not pay, then the land, which is but in pledge upon condition, for the payment of the money, is taken from him for ever, and he doth die; and if he do pay it, then the pledge is dead to the tenant of the land. Lit. litt. 332. Cf. Lit. 205.

Of these mortgages there are again two sorts; first, of the freehold and inheritance; and secondly, of terms for years. Maddox 318, 319.

Of the freehold and inheritance, and here the ancient way was to make a charter of seflement, on condition, that if the feoffee or his heirs paid the sum to the seffor, the seffor should re-enter and re-pollifie; and sometimes the condition was contained in the charter of seflement, and sometimes it was defeantenced by another charter, as may be seen in the old forms. Maddox 318, 319.

For as a man might annex a condition to his seflement, for ex. he stet his son, as he stet his dispose, to be he might annex a condition by another deed, bearing date, and executed at the same time; for being executed at the same time, it is really but one and the same dietition, quae intestmenti sunt in se unam integram; but a defeasance or condition annexed after the seflement executed comes too late; because the le visum curas partius attingles the intenstion, in which there is no condition, the tenant must hold the land according to the tenure of the vellitestate; but rents, annuities or warranties that are things executory, may be defeated by defeasances made at the time of their creation, or any time after; because there is not any necessity of the notority of livery to make an intenstion; and therefore being created by deed only, they may be defeated or destroyed by deed alone. Co. Lit. 226, 227.

These sorts of conveyances were subject to these inconveniences; that if the money were not paid at the day, so that the estate became absolute, the estate was then for the time, in the power of the seffor and all other his real charges and incumbrances; for though if the seffor performed the condition, then he might re-enter, and re-pollifie himself in his former estate, and consequently was in all the above the charges and incumbrances of the seffor; yet if he did not literally perform the condition by payment of the money at the day, then the estate was legally subject to the charges and incumbrances of the seffor, though the money were afterwards paid, and the estate reconveyed to the seffor. Co. Lit. 231, 221.

But the courts of equity, as they grew in power, have found this matter right; and have had the right of redemption not only against tenant in dower, and the persons who come in under the seffor, but even against the tenant by the curtesy, and lord by efschat, that are in the psf; because the payment of the money does, in the consideration of equity, put the seffor in sefum quae, since the lands were originally only a pledge for the money lent. Hard. 465.

As to mortgages by way of creating terms, this was formerly by way of demife and re-demise. As for example; A. borrowed money of B. thereupon A. would demisle the lands to B. for a term of 500, 50 years absolutely, with common covenants against incumbrances, and so forth. It appears that in B. would hold the day after re-demise to A. for 490 years, with condition, to be void on non-payment of the money at the day to come; this manner of mortgaging came in af-
MOR

A hearing, Lord K. North revered the decree on the ground of the equity of redemption, and therefore may take leaves or any settlement thereof, which will bind the mortgagor's title. It is said, that a tenant in tail in an equity of redemption may devise it for payment of debt. 1 Fern. 41. Turner v. Guin.

But as the mortgagee is more strong, 1 Fern. 734, 232. Newcom. v. Jordan. 2 Vent. 364. S. C. where it is said, that Lord North's decree was affirmed in the house of Lords.

If a mortgage lands to B. worth 30 l. per annum, for curing $200 l. and at the same time B. enters into a bond conditioned that if the sum of $200 l. is not paid within one year, then he be to pay to A. his executors or administrators, the further sum of 700 l. in full for the purchase of the premises, &c. and A. dies within the year, and he money is paid the next day, the mortgage is forfeiture, &c. and A. heir may redeem, saying the 200 l. and likewise the 700 l. was paid me, etc. But if the Master of the Rolls decreed a redemption on payment of 550 l. and the two fines. 2 Fern. 84.

There were 450 l. made an absolute assignement of church leafe for three lives to B. and by writing under his hand agreed, that if A. paid 600 l. at the end of the year, B. would convey; B. died, leaving C. his heir; and two of the lives died, and the lease coal adopt to C., and by other deed executed as near twenty years since the conveyance was made, the Master of the Rolls decreed a redemption on payment of 550 l. and the two fines. 2 Fern. 84.

A lends money to B. to carry on certain buildings, and it takes a mortgage from him to secure 1000 l. with interest and other charges. A. and B. enter into a further agreement, that A. shall take a covenant from B. that he shall convey to m., if he thought fit, ground- rents to the value of 100 l. at the rate of 20 years purchase; and on a bill ought to redeem, the Master of the Rolls decreed a demission on payment of principal, interest and costs, and then鲳 a covenant thereon, but it is not sufficient, as it is unenforceable; for a man shall not have interest for money, and a collateral advantage besides for the loan, it is, or clog the redemption with any bye-agreement. 2 Fern. 520. Jennings v. Ward.

But though these and such like restrictions are relieved as to make them answer the primary intention of the parties; yet if A. on a mortgage, lends money at 6 l. cent. but agrees in the deed, that if the money were paid within three months after it became due, that he would accept of 6 l. per cent. and the mortgagor negleets to pay the interest within the time, equity will not re- v en him, but he must pay 5 l. per cent. for though the principal may be unenforceable, yet this is it for, that the mortgagee might have refused to lend his money under 5 l. per cent. Preced. Chan. 160. Jory v. xx. 1 P. W. 653.

So if the mortgagee devises, that the mortgagor should remitted part of his mortgage money, provided he ye the principal and intererst within three days after his client, if the condition be not performed, the remedie is lost; because being a voluntary bounty, and not due to justice, the party must take it as it is limited, suijus dignare, ejus digna dispensa; and the court cannot live in this case after the 1 Chan. Ca. 52.

But where in a mortgage there was a proviso, that if the interest was bound within six months, that then the interest should be accounted principal, and carry interest; this Lord Chester was deemed to be a vain clause, and of no use; and he said, that no precedent had ever carried the advance of interest so far, and that an agreement made at the time of the mortgage, will not be sufficient to make future intererst principal; but to make interest principal, it must be expressly so in the deed, and then an agreement concerning it may make it principal. 2 Salik. 459.

The mortgage before forfeiture, and whilst it remains certain, whether he will perform the condition at the time limited or not, hath the legal effect in him; also al- so it be the nature of a redemption; so that is still considered as owner and proprietor of the estate, until the equity of redemption be foreclosed, and therefore may take leaves or any settlement thereof, which will bind the mortgagor's title. It is said, that a tenant in tail in an equity of redemption may devise it for payment of debt. 1 Fern. 41. Turner v. Guin.

Therefore the tenant is in some sort the owner, and, as is usual, still continues in possession, and levies his fine, and, five years past, yet the mortgagee is not barred; for though the mortgagee be in reality out of possession, yet when that is done by the consent of both parties, and the nature of the contract requires it should be so whilst the interest is paid, it is against the original design of the contract, that any of the mortgagor's except the interest of the money, should deprive the mortgagee of his securities, and is no less than fraud, which the law will not countenance. 1 Sid. 460. 1 Vent. 82. Cart. 101, 474. 2 Keb. 522.

And as the mortgagor, being considered only as tenant at will to the mortgagee, cannot, by his act, defeat the interest of the mortgagee, otherwise than by payment of the mortgage money; so neither can the mortgagee defeat the mortgagor of his equity of redemption; therefore if a mortgagee in fee suffers a recovery, even at law, shall not bind the mortgagor's title, and the condition be not ascertained that the mortgagor had been a party to the recovery, then his right had been bound, not only on account of the recumence in value, but because he is eftablished by the recovery to claim the land against the recoveror or his heirs, when he was called in before the judgment given to defeat his title, and could not do that. 2 Vent. 419.

So if a mortgagee be disfelled, and the defiguer levies a fine, and five years past after the proclamations, tho' the mortgagee is hereby barred, yet if the mortgagor pays or tenders his money, he has five years to prosecute his right, by the second saving is the statute 4 Hen. 7. cap. 24. because that title did not accrue 'till payment of the money. Plow. 372. a.

And as the mortgagor, 'till the equity of redemption be foreclosed, is considered as owner of the land, it was ruled, where a bill for a redemption was brought against a mortgagee in possession, and a decree accordingly, that the mortgagee before the account taken, having presented to a church that became void, should revoke his prestation, and present such a person as the mortgagor or his vendee (he having contracted to sell) shall appoint. Preced. Chan. 71. 2 Fern. 401.

By the 7 W. & M. cap. 25. it is enacted, "That no person or persons shall be allowed to have any vote in election of members to serve in parliament, for by reason of any trust estate or mortgage; unless such trustee or mortgagee be in actual possession, or receipt of the rents and profits of the same, but that the mortgagor, or easit que trust in possession, shall and may vote for the same, and shall have the benefit of such mortgage or trust."

And by the 9 Ann. cap. 4. which requires, that knights of the shire should have 600 l. per annum, and every other member 300 l. per annum, it is enacted, "That no person shall be qualified to sit in the house of Commons, within the meaning of the act, by virtue of any mortgage, whereas the equity of redemption is in any other person, unless the mortgagee shall have been in possession of the mortgaged premises for seven years before the time of election."

The condition must at law be strictly performed, otherwise the mortgagor looses all benefit of redemption; but if upon a mortgage a tender be made of the money at the place, at any time after the day specified in the condition, and the mortgagee refuses, the condition is saved for ever. 7 Ed. 4. 3. 9 H. 6. 12. 22 H. 6. 37. 47 Ed. 3. 36. Plow. 173. 5 Co. 114. 14 S. Litt. 209.

3. Of the equity of redemption and foreclosure; and of the manner of redeeming and foreclosing.

Altho', after breach of the condition, an absolute fee simple is vellied at Common law in the mortgagee; yet a right of redemption being still inherent in the land, till he be equity of redemption be foreclosed, it is a right which shall defend to and is invested in such persons as have a right to the land, in case there had been no mortgage or incumbrance whatever; and as an equitable performance as effectually defeats the interest of the mortgagors, as the legal performance does at convenient, whereas the personal estate, till the equity is totally foreclosed; on this foundation it hath been held, that a person who comes in under a voluntary conveyance, may redeem a mortgage; and tho' such right of redemption be inherent in the land, yet the patty claiming the benefit of it, must not only set forth such rights, but also show that he is the person intituled to it. Hard. 495. 1 Vern. 195. 1 Vern. 482.

As the heir at law is regularly intituled to the benefit of redemption, he is also intituled to the assistance of the personal estate of the mortgagor for that purpose; according to the doctrine established in the courts of equity, that the personal estate, in the hands of the mortgagor, shall be employed in ease of the heir, by whatever means the heir becomes indebted as heir, for the personal estate having received the benefit by constraining the debt, and the real considered only as a pledge for it; according to the common rule, Socii ficti commodi fictit a debet ubi eous. Prev. in Chan. 477.

And on this foundation it hath been frequently held, that if a man mortgage lands, and covenants to pay the money, and dies, the personal estate of the mortgagor shall, in favour of the heir, be applied in exonerat the mortgage. 2 Salt. 449.

Also it is held by some opinions, that this benefit shall not accrue to the heir, at law, or barre natur, but also to an heir factus, from a presumption, that it is the intention of the tenant, that he should have all the privileges of the barre natur: and some even hold, that an ordinary devisee shall have this benefit; but as to this last point it is hath been held otherwise; and that if a man mortgages his land, and devises it to F. S. or to A. for life, the remainder in fee to B. that there the charge doth pass with the estate, there appearing no intention of the tenant, that he should have it discharged, 2 Chan. Ca. 84. 1 Vern. 36. 1 Chan. Ca. 271.

So if the mortgagor conveys away the equity of redemption, the purchaser shall not have the benefit of the personal estate, but must take it as herein. 2 Salt. 452. 1 Vern. 37.

It has likewise been held by some opinions, that the heir of the mortgagor shall have the benefit of the personal estate to pay off the mortgage, tho' there be no covenant in the mortgage-deed for the payment thereof; because the mortgage-money is a thing separate there from, and proceeds of the land, in the payment of it, and the money, there was no contract at all between them, neither express nor implied; nor would any action lie against the mortgagor to subject his person, to compel him to pay this money; but this was in nature of a conditional purchase, subject to be defeated on payment by the mortgagor, or on the failure of the land, and was without the right of redemption. And at any Mich. day, at the election of the mortgagor, or his heirs; for here was an everlasting subsisting right of redemption, defendible to the heirs of the mortgagor, which could not be forfeited at law like other mortgages; and therefore there could be no equity of redemption, or any occasion for the assistance of this court; but this right might even at law defeat the conveyance, by performing the terms and conditions of it; which were not limited to any particular time, but might be performed on any Michaelmas day, to the end of the world; and since there was no covenant or contract, either express or implied, to charge the personal estate of the mortgagor, he thought there was no reason to in the land, for the debts of the condition between the said persons did afterwards, when money upon account of their lands of other persons, and do not acquit the latter lender thereof with the same; whereby such last lender is very often in danger to lose his whole money, or forced to pay off the debts secured by the said judgment, that is, the recognizances before mentioned, or any benefit of the said mortgages; and that divers persons do many times mortgage their lands more than once without giving notice of their first mortgage; whereas the lenders of money upon second or after mortgages often lose their money; and are put to great charges in facts and otherwise; for remedy whereof it is enacted,

That if any person shall borrow any money, or for any other valuable consideration for the payment thereof voluntarily give, acknowledge, permit or be required to be entered against him or them, one or more judgment judgments, statute or statutes, recog- nizances or recognizances, to any person or persons, creditor or creditors, and any person or persons, after redemption or by a per- son or persons in trust for or to the use of such person or persons, as will pay the said money, to give, acknowledge, permit or be required to be entered against him or them, to any person or persons, creditor or creditors, of the said money, or of any other person or persons, for or for any other valuable consideration became indebted to such person or persons, and for the payment and discharge therefor shall mortgage his, her or their lands or tenements, or any part thereof, to the said person or persons, creditor or creditors, or to any person or persons in trust for or to the use of such person or persons, creditor or creditors, and do not give notice to the said mortgagee or mortgagees, of the said judgment or judgments, statute or statutes, recog- nizances or recognizances, in writing under his, her or their hands, before the execution of the same mortgage or mortgages; unless such mortgagee or mort- gagees, his, her or their heirs, upon notice to him, or them given by the mortgagee or mortgagees of the said lands and tenements, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, in writing under his, her or their hands, or under the hands of the said mortgagee or mortgagees, or any other person, persons, creditors, or any person or persons in trust for or to the use of such person or persons, creditor or creditors, of the said money, for the payment and discharge thereof, and such cousen or other judgment judgments, statute or statutes, recog- nizances or recognizances, to any person or persons, creditor or creditors, or to any person or persons, in trust for or to the use of such person or persons, creditor or creditors, and do not give notice to the said mortgagee or mortgagees, of the said judgment or judgments, statute or statutes, recog- nizances or recognizances, within six months pay off and discharge the said judgment or judgments, statute or statutes, recognizances or recognizances, and all interest and charges due thereupon and cause and prepare the same to be vacated, or discharged by record; that then the said mortgagee or mortgagees shall have a remedy against the said mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her or her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, of the said money, or of any other money, or of any other person, persons, creditors, or any person or persons, in trust for or to the use of such person or persons, creditor or creditors, for or for any other valuable consideration of the said money, and for the payment and discharge thereof, and such judgment judgments, statute or statutes, recog- nizances or recognizances, or all interest and charges due thereupon and cause and prepare the same to be vacated, or discharged by record; that then the said mortgagee or mortgagees shall have a benefit of redemption against the said mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her or her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, and enjoy the said lands and tenements for such and such term therein, as were or was granted and fatted to the said mortgagee or mortgagees against the said mortgagee or mortgagees, and all persons and persons, creditors, or any person or persons, in trust for or to the use of such person or persons, creditor or creditors, for or for any other valuable consideration; and the said mortgagee or mortgagees shall again mortgage the said

Mortmain, (Manus mortua, compound of two French words, mort. i. morr, & maine, i. manus) signiifies an alienation of lands and tenements to any guild, corporation or fraternity, and their successors, as bishops, parsons, vicars, &c. which may not be done without the King's licence, and the lord of the manor, or of the King alone, if it be immediately held of him. The reason of this was to prevent the sale of service, messuage, the services, and other profits due, for such lands as cheats, &c. should not without such licence come into a deal hand, or into such a hand as it were dead, and so dedicated unto God, or pious uses, as to be absolutely different from other lands, tenements or hereditaments, and is never assignable to the debt, or any temporal or common use. Magna Charta, cap. 35. and 7 Ed. 1.

William the Conqueror, demanding the cause why he himself conquered the realm by one battle, which the Danes could not do by many; Frederick the abbot of St. Alban's answered, he was successful, because now the maintenance of martial men, was given and converted to pious impropriations, for the maintenance of holy vortaries: To which the Conqu eror said, that if the clergy be so strong that the realm is infecibed of men for the war, and subjected by it to reign invasion, he would aid it. And therefore he took

Stat. 9 Hen. 3. cap. 36. enacts, That it shall not be lawful from henceforth to any to give his land to any religious house, and to take the same lands again to hold of the same house, &c. upon pain that the gift shall be void, and that the land shall accrue to the lord of the fee.

Lord Coke, in his 2 Stat. 74. says, this statute is excellently abridged and expounded by the statute of 7 Ed.
1. There were two causes of making this statute, [1

In the English language, to be lawful is to be "lawful" or permissible; it is a legal term that indicates the validity or legality of an action or decision. In the context of this statute, the phrase "shall not be lawful to any" means that it is not permissible for anyone to give their land to a religious house for it to hold it as their own. The statute specifically prohibits this action to prevent the land from being converted to pious uses, which the Conqueror viewed as a means to maintain the holy vortaries, or religious orders, and prevent the land from being given to the religious houses in the first place.}

The next lord of the fee may enter. If there are Id and tenant, and the tenant aliens in mortmain, and 2 and the landlord still have but few remedies in the case as he had in the feigniorly, notwithstanding this statute for he hath but an estate for life or in tail in the feignior, he shall have the greater estate in the land; for in the intendment of the statute; but the lord of the particlar estate shall have perquisitive of villain in fee. But when he has an estate in the seigniorly, he shall have it in jure laws or ecclesi.

Sect. 4. Nothing relating to the failing and delivery of any deed twelve calendar months before the death of the grantor, or to the transfer of stock six calendar months before the death of the grantor, shall extend to any pur- chase for a full and valuable consideration.

Sect. 3. All gifts of lands, &c. or of any charge after the death of such donor, or of any book or personal gift to be laid out in lands, &c. for charitable uses, which shall be made in any manner, shall be void.

Sect. 4. This act shall not make void dispositions of any lands to either of the universities, or the colleges or houses within either of them, or to the colleges of Eton, Winchester, or Wifhampton, for the better support of the fellows of the same institutions.

Sect. 5. No such college or house, which shall hold so many advowsons as are equal in number to one moiety of the fellows, or where there are no fellows, to one moiety of the students upon the foundation, shall be ca- pable of purchasing any other advowsons, the advowsons of which are annexed to the headships of colleges or houses not being computed.

Sect. 6. Nothing in this act shall extend to Scotland.

For more learning on this subject, see 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Mortmain.

Mortmain, Mortuum, mortarium,) is a gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the re- concilement of his personal tithe and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. A mortuary is not properly and or- iginally due to ecclesiastical incumbents from any, but those only of his own parish, to whom he ministers spiritual instruction, and hath right to their tithe. But by custom in some places of this kingdom, they are paid to the parsons of other parishes, as the corps polles through them. See the statute 21 H. 8. cap. 6, before which statute mortuaries were payable in debts; the bell to the lord for a heretic, the second for a mortuary. Nor was it only de meliari avers, fid de melieri re. Mortuum (says Lindwood) sic librum ut quia relinquatur ecclesiae pro absentia mortuus est ne nos dierum habet, mortuariam, when it was held as due debts, the payment of which was enjoined as well by the statute De funeratis pagis, in 13 Ed. 1. as by several constitutions. A mortuary was formerly called Saneleaflet, which signifies pecunia sepulchralis, or Symbolum animae. After the conclavus it was called a testa-prentis, (because the bcast was presented with the body at the funeral,) and sometimes a principal; of which see a learned discourse in the Antiquities of Warrwichiis, fol. 679, and see Selden's History of Tithes, pag. 287. There is no mortuary due by law, but by custom. 2 part Ven. fol. 241. See Spen. de Council, tom. 2. fol. 390. This is likewise proved out of Plato, lib. 2. cap. 66. when he gives of mortuaries, to be the first right of the state. See Magnaquin, Principat, and Pretium sepulchri. In the H. bison 'cans' to be called Pretium sepolchri, and Seiudat. viva. Omne corpus sepolchri habet in jure suo vacuam & cuorum & vassifirum & ornamenta leti sui, &c. Canon. Hieren. lib. 19. cap. 6. And in another place, H. bison (principat loc. i.e. the H. bison, & the sepolchrum et sacrum leti sui, &c. & voidat annis pretium eis cujus et facultas com- mun. The word mortuarian was sometimes used in a civil as well as an ecclesiastical sense, and was payable to the lord of the fee, as well as to the priore of the parih.

Debtor domino (i.e. quidem de Wrechwycke) nomi- natis pretium, in mortuariam sacrum, dedicat. xii fol. Paroch. Antig. pag. 470. Council, edit. 1737.

Mr. Selden tells us, that the usage anciently was, bringing the mortuary along with the corps when it came to be burned, and to offer it to the church as a satisfac- tion for the supposed negligence and omission the defunct had been guilty of in not paying his personal tithes, and from thence it was called a coron-prentis. Walf. Comp. Incumb. Ess. 1053. cap. 53. cites Selden's Hist. of Tithes 247.

Sect. 13 Ed. 1. f. 4. enacts, That a prohibition shall not lie for mortuaries in places where mortuaries uted to be paid.

Sect. 13 Ed. 1. f. 4. sect. 2. enacts, That no spir- itual person, his bailiff or leffer, shall take or demand any mortuary for a mortuary as is hereafter expressed, nor shall conven any person before any ecclesiastical judge for the recovery of more for the same than is hereafter declared, on pain to forfeit so much as he takes or demands more, and likewise 40s. to the party grieved, to be re- covered by action of debt, wherein no effin, &c. shall be used.

Sect. 3. None shall take or demand for a mortuary any thing at all, where (by the custum) they have not been usually paid.

Sect. 4. Nor upon the death of a woman covert, a child, a peron not keeping house, a wayfaring man, or not residing in the place where he happens to die, no where the goods of the dead person (debts deduced amount not to the value of 10 marks; nor above the sum of 3l. 4d. when they exceed not 30l. nor above 6s. 2d. when they exceed 30l. but not 40l. nor above 10l. when they amount to 40l. or above; and if the person die in a place where he or she dwelt then, the mortuary shall be paid in the place where they had the mortuary.

Sect. 5. This act shall not abridge spiritual persons to receive legacies bequeathed unto them or to the high school for a mortuary than as is hereafter expressed, nor shall conven any person before any ecclesiastical judge for the recovery of more for the same than is hereafter declared, on pain to forfeit so much as he takes or demands more, and likewise 40s. to the party grieved, to be re- covered by action of debt, wherein no effin, &c. shall be used.

Sect. 6. No mortuaries shall be paid in Wales, Gloucester, or in any of their marches, save only in Wales and the marches thereof where they have been customarily used to be paid; and such as are there paid shall be regulated according to the order prescribed by this act.

Sect. 7. The bishop of Bangor, Landaff, St. Davids, and St. Asaph, and the archdeacon of Cheffor shall to mortuaries of the priests within their jurisdiction as ha been accustomed, notwithstanding this act.

Sect. 8. If mortuaries already settled by custum do not be increased by this act; and there also persons emped by this act shall not hereafter be chargeable.

Sect. 12 Ann. 2. cap. 6. abolishes all customs of payi mortuaries upon the death of any clergymen within the dioceses of Bangor, Landaff, St. Davids, and St. Asaph and enables the clergymen of the said dioceses to settle mortuaries in lieu of name thereof, shall be payable, any bishop of the said dioceses or other person claimi under them, and gives recompense to the bishops of the fees in lieu thereof.

calls such issue filius mulieris, opposing them to baffards; and Briston, cap. 70. hath freer multer, i.e. the brother begotten of the wife, opposite to freer baffard. This appears not to be used in Sc. &. also; for the former seems to say that mulaterus filius is a lawful son, begotten of a lawful wife. A man hath a son before marriage, that is a baffard, and unlawful, and after he marries the mother of the baffard, and they have another son; this second son is called multer, that is to say, lawful, and shall be be his to his father, but the other cannot be the payable to Multipar, or Multipura epilipri, Is derived from the Latin word multus, for that it was a fine given to the king, that the bishop might have power to take the multiply gold or silver, nor use the craft of multiplication, and if any the same do, he shall incur the pain of felony;

and it was made, upon a preemption that some persons enjoyed in chymistry, could multiply or augment those metals. And H. 6. granted letters patent to some persons (who under pretence were alchemists) to take the same, and to find out the philosophers' stone, to free them from the penalties of the statute. Rot. Pat. 34 H. 6. m. 13. Co. 3 Inf. fol.

Sure, Murder, (Sundum) From the Sax. sund, which some will have to signify a violent death; from which the barbarous Lat. sundrum et sundaram. Sometimes the Saxons exprest it by mortded, and mortduere, a deadly work; in French mortre, in Spanish mortfre, in English murder: A word in use long before the reign of Carinatus; but we cannot find that the Sax. morth signifies a violent death, but generally mars. Amongst us 'tis taken for a willful and a very felonious killing, either upon pre- matted malice. Briston, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 15. mun. 1. defineth it thus: Homicidium, quod nulls presenfite, nullus aidentiae, nullus violentae clam perfpecripit. Britton, cap. 6. is of the same opinion, so is Pliny, lib. 1. cap. 30. adding besides, that it was not murder, except it were prov- ed that it was the party, (not the English, and no foreigner: But Stannus in Pl. Car. lib. 1. cap. 25. says, The point is altered by the statute 14 Ed. 3. cap. 4. for now it is murder, when a man upon fores-thought malice kills another, whether privyly or publicly, English man or foreigner living under the King's protection; and this statute is the first. 1. See Pain doit hure. As also signifies a kennel or cry of hounds, as koster le me fero, & envar a berge, to follow him with a full cry. See also in Lat. 3. Mutter, Ed. it is notorious felonous, and which openly be of evil fame, and not put themselves in inquells of felonies that men arrange them with before the judges at the King's, shall have strong and hard imprisonment, as they rich refuse to stand to the Common law of the land, 1 it is not to be understood of such prisoners as be "Norious felons" This statute extends not to the land, is the highest offence, no, or petty larceny, which of all felonies the lowest; but it extends to women as ill as to men, and so it appears by divers ancient and it proceeded in the land, i.e. is the common law and "the trial according to law, and therefore his punishment is more severe without comparison, than it should have been for the offence of felony itself; and the felony itself cannot be adjudged without answer, and denies all those other opinions. And as to the first holds, that this punishment was not first inflicted by this act, for no court or judges could upon these words (have strong and hard imprisonment) frame such a judgment consisting of so many divers particulars; and hence it necessarily follows, that this punishment, because it was to be done in prison, was before this act, but sufficiently signified (as ever since it hath been) by the statutes for &c.; so as this act feeth forth the quality of this judgment, and not the judgment itself. 2dly, This act describes what persons shall be punished by pain fort & dure, viz. "Norious felons, and which are openly of ill fame, but fets not down (as has been said) what the punishment is, but provides, that it shall not be lighter than what the books held with great authority, that in case of appeal the prisoner flandering mate shall have judgment of pain fort & dure, do prove that such judgment was before the making this act; for this statute extends not to appeals, which are the fault of the subject, but only to the fault of the King which is by way of indictment; and wherein the words of Festa are very remarkable, Si autem appellatus nihili rei judicata erit, &c. et appellantur in peitieris judiciis, indeferet immemoratis, morte teneam non condiendis, sed generai commutatos, &c. and these are words which usual appear to be at the Common law; and herewith agreeeth Britannus, who wrote from after this act, so that the penance in case of appeal is both by ancient and found authority. And as to the second opinion, the answer to the first answers also; and if he should be found by the Common law, this statute does not extend to appeals, for &c.; so as this have strong and hard imprisonment, and therefore the statute that a flandering mate, may, according to their opinions, be hanged at this day, is contrary to all the books, and confiant and continual experience. As to the third, it would be entertaining too mean an opinion of the Common law, which is by way of indictment; and these by their contumacy against it suffer one of the lowest punishments, viz. imprisonment till they would answer; and the answer to the first opinion is likewise fo to this. 2 Inf. 178, 179.

Of light suspicion] Serjeant Hawkins says, that he does not find it said in any book, what shall be done to a person who obstinately flandering mate to an arraignment shall appear to be charged upon very light suspicion; but says he takes it for granted, that he may be severer fined and imprisoned for the contempt. 2 Hawk. Pl. 330, cap. 30, sect. 4.

Appeal at Neagate before the justices of gaol delivery, the defendant pleaded Not guilty, and would not put himself upon the country, by which he was put to parere, and the judgment was, that he shall be remanded to the prison where he was before, and after he shall be put into a chamber, and there shall be naked without litter, ruffles or cloaths, one thing that the defendant are to think; he shall be laid upon his back naked, without any thing about him, having a cloath to cover his members, and that his head and his feet be covered, and that the one arm be drawn to the one quarter of the chamber with a cord, and the other arm to another quarter, and that the one foot shall be drawn to the one quarter, and the other foot to the other quarter, and that a piece of iron shall be put upon his body as much as he can suffer and bear upon him and more, and the first day day he shall have three morfels of bread made of barley, without any drink, and the second day he shall drink as much as he can at three times of water which is next to the door of the prison, except running water, without any bread, and this shall be his diet till he be dead. And as the water, he shall come, and put into some dark low room, and there laid on his back without any manner of covering, except for the privy parts, and that as many weights be laid upon him as he shall be able to bear and more, and that he shall have no manner of suffenance but the world bread and water, and that he shall not eat the same day in which he drinks, nor drink the same day on which he eats, and that he shall to continue till he die. But that it is said that anciently the judgment was not, that he should continue until he should die, but until he should answer, and that he might have himself from the penance by putting himself upon his trial, which he cannot do at this day after the judgment of penance once given. 2 Haw. Pl. C. 330. cap. 30. f. 16. And there in the margin, the ferjeant, to the reminding him to the place whence he came, cites H. P. C. 227. S. P. C. 150 (E), Keel. 70. a. 12. 18. Ed. 4. 11. pl. 17. and as to the words in some low dark room, this he says, that the clause is omitted in Keel. 70. a. 4 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 18. But is mentioned in all the other books above cited, but with this difference, that 14 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 17. says only shall be put in a chamber, without adding that it shall be low or dark. And as to the words there laid on his back, &c. he says, that in this all the books above cited seem to agree. And 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17. and S. P. C. 150 (E), and 2 Injfl. 178. add, that he shall lie without any litter or other things under him, and that he shall be drawn to one quarter of the room with a cord, and the other to another, and that his feet shall be affed in the same manner. But that these clausse are wholly omitted in all the other books above cited, except H. P. C. which takes notice of the latter of them only. And Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 2. adds, that an hole shall be made for the head. And Keel. 70. a. says, that the head shall not touch the earth; but none of the other mention either of these clausse. And as to the words, that as many weights shall be laid upon him as he can bear and more, &c. he says, that in this all the books above cited agree. And as to the word bread, he says, that 14 Ed. 4. 17. p. 17. S. P. C. 150. (E), and 2 Injfl. 178. are, that he shall have three morfels of barley bread a day. Keel. 70. a. that he shall have only dry bread, and Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 2. and 2 Hen. 4. 1. pl. 2. generally, that he shall have of the world bread. And as to the word water, he says, that in 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17. S. P. C. 150. (E), 2 Injfl. 178. and 3 Ed. 4. 1. pl. 2. and Keel. 70. a. are, that he shall have the water next the prison, so that he be not current; but Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 5. is general, that he shall have the water of the world. And as to the words, not eat the same day in which he drinks, nor drink the same day on which he eats, &c. he says, that this is omitted in Keel. 70. a. and in 2 Hen. 4. 1. and as to the words till he die, he says, this is omitted in none of the books above cited, except 14 Ed. 5. 4. [4.] 11. and H. P. C. 237. But that neither of these books give the whole judgment at large. Hawk. Pl. C. 330. 331. cap. 30. 31. More for more learning in this subjett, see 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Necellus, 10 cert. King's, Is a writ to refrain a person from going out of the kingdom without the King's licence. F. N. B. 85.

By the Common law every man may go out of the realm to merchandise, or on pilgrimage, or for what other cause he pleaseth without the King's leave, and he shall not be punished for so doing; but because that every man is of right for to defend the King and his realm, therefore the King at his pleasure by his writ may command a man that he go not beyond the east, or out of the realm without licence; and if he do the contrary, he shall be punished for disobeying the King's command; and it is muthem that this command may be made by the King's writ under the Great seal, and also the Privy seal, if the law further directeth. And to the notice of every writ the King's seal in such case, as well as of the Great seal. F. N. B. 85. (A).

A writ of Ne certe Regno may be granted in any case where there is danger of subterfuge from the fallacy of the nation, though of private consideration. 2 Cha. 124. Note 2. as the false seal of the King's dominion, B. 9, the King may inhabit any man; for the case is not transferable. Lan. 29.

Ne certe Regno ought not to be granted but upon great reason and examination, otherwise a homine reip- gaundia may lie; for Hol Ch. J. Farr. 9, Pafl. a Ann. B. 28, 29.

A sactor's bill being taxed, and reported over pas 60 l. on motion, and affidavit of his going beyond fas, Ne certe Regno was granted, though no bill was in county to ground this writ; for Master of the Rolls Chan. Prec. 171, Mil. 1701, Loyd v. Carlyle. A Ne certe Regno lies to prevent one's going into Siceland, it being out of the jurisdiction of Chancery; as the process thereof not reaching thither is equally miserably to the suitor here, as if he actually were out of the kingdom; and though it was moved for one defendant against another defendant, yet it being in a matter of so much importance both parties are affected thereto, and money be removed due from the defendant against whom the order issue, Lord Hardcur thought the motion proper. Wm's Rep. 263. Trin. 1714. Douc's case.

Where the party is to be restrained from going to Siceland, the condition must be not to go out of the real to Siceland; for if it be not only to go out of the realm, the party going to Siceland will not forfeit the bond or recogignize. Wm's Rep. 263. in a note there.

It was moved to have a Ne certe Regno framed so as to prevent the defendant going into Scotland upon affidavit of his going to reside there, and having confessed that he had received 10,000 l. as trustee for the plaintiff. A Ne certe Regno was granted, and the party was joined for 10,000 l. bail, and apprehending that the usual we would not refrain his going into Scotland, as being no in the name kingdom, and yet as much out of the reach of the process of the court as any foreign part out of the King's allegiance, the fame was moved before the Lo Chancello, who afied, What authority he had to all an original writ? Especially as this writ was not originally intended to aid the procefs of this court, but was mandatory writ to prevent the King's subjects from going into foreign countries to praifie treason with the King enemies! And said, that perhaps there was no found statute which would render the common writ which prevent the defendant's going into Siceland, as well any of the King's other dominions out of the procefs this court. His lordship said, it was dangerous to alter old established forms, and therefore would make o
The defendant swore an affirmative, and afterwards 1 information was exhibited against him for it; tho' an evasive could not be proved, yet the court directed that they should first give their probable evidence, and that the defendant should afterwards prove his affirmative if he could. Cumb. 57. Trin. 3 Jac. 2. B. R. The King.

Corm. Two negatives may be construed as a negative in facts, but not in law; for they are to be taken as Latin, and not as Latinized, i.e. as Latinized. Salt. 328. Trin. 2 Iust. B. R. Dillon v. Harper. Negative may be implied by an affirmative, but not explicitly in corona. As the saying, that a paplit, unless conform, shall not take by devise, does not necessarily imply that he does conform, he shall be taken by devise.

An affirmative oath was made to ground an attachment upon; if the perfon against whom the motion is, denies he charge by oath positively and fully, the negative oath shall be preferred; and this is the only case in which it shall be so. 8 Med. 81. Trin. 8 Gen. The King v. Archbold & al.

Negative pregnant, (Negative pregnant) Is a negative, implying also an affirmative: As if a man be mpleaded to have done a thing on such a day, or in such a place, denieth that he did it, makes & forma declarata, which implicith nevertheless, that in the action, he did it. But he faith he hath not aliened in fact, and he faith he hath not aliened in fee, that is a negative pregnant; for though it be true that he hath not aliened in fee, yet it may be, he hath made an eflate in toll. Dyer, fol. 17, num. 95, and Break thy titles, and Ritchin, fol. 251, and the Terms of the Law. We read also in some Courts of affirmative pregnant, and that is, quæ habet in fe includeum negativam, & lic importare videtur dilinse (suln & tandem) que implicat negativam. Pastinian de Probationibus, lib. 1. cap. 31. num. 10. fol. 93. In information against J. K. for buying cloths of A. B. contra formam statuti de annu 24 Hen. 8, he faid, that he did not buy of A. B. contra formam statuti pravit, &c., and no reason was assigned, why he did not, B. A. or of W. N. or of any other, but if he bought the cloths contra formam statuti or not, and therefore the issue shall be that he did not buy made & formas, &c., Br. Stifes Joines, pl. 81. cites 33 Hen. 8.

Budge was brought upon an obligation, the condition whereof was, that he should make a new purchase without the plaintiff's affent. In debt on bond for performance of covenants, the defendant pleaded that he did not grant without the plaintiff's assent, and this upon demurrer was held not good. Gra. f. 559. 560. Hill, 17 Jac. B. R. Lea. v. Lutter. Atteridge & al. for illegitimate pregnancies.

Nefligence, To claim kindred. Cumb. 57, 1723. Nefligence, Is where a person neglects or omits to do a thing which he is by law obliged to. And where one has another's goods to keep till such a time, and he hath a certain recompence or reward for the keeping, he shall not fland charged for injury by negligence, &c., but if he hath nothing for keeping they may make no answer. Dottor and Student 269. A man that finds another's goods, if they are after hurt by wilful negligence, kis held he is chargeable to the owner; though in another case he is liable to be liable by handling. As in case they are laid in a house, which is accidentally burnt; or he delivers them to another to keep, who runs away with them, &c., Ibid. It is held, if an accountant be robbed, and it is without his default and negligence, he shall not be answerable for the money. 1 Iof. 89.

If there be a decree for a account to which an executor is part, he has a debt, and he makes a new purchase, unless he does not claim, but lies by, and the account is taken and perfected, he shall not bring a new bill for his debt, and put the eftate to the expense of a new suit to obtain a satisfaction, which he might have had in the course of the former proceedings. Per the Master of the Rolls, who said, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages, 2 Wm. Rep. 665. Mich. 1734. Coxe v. Earl Coxe.

Further assurance was not demanded within the time, yet equity ordered to make further assurances afterwards. Tab. 76. cites 1594. Kemp v. Fauor.

If a purchaser neglects to imol his deed of bargain and sale, being his only assurance, and the bond of which he brings his ejfeement against him, and hath judgment; the bargain may refer to Chancery, and there be provided, if not for the land, yet for the money paid. Mich. 13 Jac. 1. Ch. Rep. 10. in the Earl of Oxfor's cafe, cites Jacques v. Huntly, 13 June 1599 in Chancery.

A term was vested in trustees, upon failure of issue male, to raise 1500 l. for daughters. And it was, that the trustees by and out of the rents, iiues and profits, &c., as well by leasing or demisting the same for 21 years, or three lives, or for any term, &c. of years determined of, and not exceeding, no execution of, and not exceeding, any term, &c. time limited for payment, nor any price for determining the term on payment. The trustees died. Then the father died, leaving a daughter, but no issue male, but had conveyed the remainder to E. for life, remainder to his first, E. sons in tail, and in default, remainder to C. for life, and after to his first, C. sons, &c., remainder over.
over. The daughter took letters of administration to the surviving trustee, and the B. mortgaged the land, which was 150 l. per annum, to J. S. and B. convener to pay the money. B. entered and took the profits, and paid the interest, but none of the 150 l. principal, and died without issue. Lord Thurlow filched the field out of her hands only for 21 years, or three lives determinable on any number of years not exceeding 120, and decreed, that (the 150 l. being to be raised out of the annual profits as they arose) the receipt of B. was the receipt of the daughter herself as to thole in remnant to J. & S., or for her place, who held the legal estate as administrator to the surviving trustee, and was also esseque tuit, the profits received by B. shall go in satisfaction of so much of the 150 l. and the refuse to be charged on the remainder. But decreed further, that what might have been raised by letting the fields according to the power by way of fine, if B. had apprehended that land chargeable with the money, and he had taken the benefit of making such fields, that they must be accounted for by the remainder man the defendant.

Negro. In trover for 100 negroes, and upon Not guilty pleaded, a special verdict found that the negroes were not sold to him or his minister prince, and sued to be bought and sold in America as chattelslfe, by the cullom amongst the merchant, and that the plaintiff had bought them, and was in possession of them, and that the defendant took them out of his possession. It was argued, that no property can be in the person of a man whereupon to take a trover at all, but no property can be in slaves, unless by compact or conquest. But the court held, that they being usually bought and sold amongst merchants as merchandise, and being infeudal, a property may be in them sufficient to maintain the action; and gave judgment for the plaintiff nisi cassa this term. But at the term ensuing, upon the prayer of the attorney general to be further heard, day was given to the next term.

In troftaps the case was, that the defendant H & arms unam Ethipion (Anygree vocat. a negro) lyfus querint pretiti 150 l. apud London, &c. took and carried away, and kept the plaintiff out of possession of the said negro from that time supe diem exhibitionis illius praetendit, per qua he lost the use of his said negro. Upon Not guilty the jury found, that the negro had been baptized after the taking; upon which a question was made, whether he was continued a slave in England because he was baptized? As to that the court gave no opinion; but held, that troftaps lies not; because a negro cannot be demandetl a chattel, nor can his price be recovered in damages in action of troftaps, as in case of a chattel; for he is no other than a flavelinfant, and the master can maintain no other action of troftaps for taking his servant, but such only as concludes per qua faverint amifs, in which the master shall recover for the loss of his service, and not for the value, or for any damages done to the servant. Judgment quaedam quenam nil capit ad bilam. Carib. 396. Hidl. 8 W. 3. B. R. Chamberlain v. Harvory.

In indiciat]. aljimpft the plaintiff declared for 20 l. fid he was injured by the plaintiff to the defendant, viz. In parochia Beate Marie de aervibus in urbea de Chespe, a verdict for the plaintiff. And in motion on arrest of judgment Holt Ch. J. held, That as soon as a negro comes into England he becomes free; one may be a villain in England, but not a slave. Per Powell J. The law took no notice of a negro. And Holt said, It should have been avered in the declaration, that the said was in Virginia, and by the laws of that country negroes are faeleable; for the laws of England do not extend to Virginia, which being a conquered country, their law is what the King pleases, and we cannot take notice of it but as a part of rule. But the power did not declare that the plaintiff amend the declaration, which should have been made that the defendant was indicted to the plaintiff for a negro field here at London, but that the said negro at the time of the sale was in Virginia, and that negroes by the laws and statutes there are faeleable as chattels. And then the attorney general coming in faid, that they were inheritances transferrable by deed and not without. And nothing was done. 2 Salk. 666. Smith v. Brown and Cooper.

"Traver lies not for a negro; for men may be owners, and therefore not the subject of property; and the court has never held to grant by sale copiusam from replius, the plaintiff might give in evidence that the party was his negro, and he bought him. 2 Salk. 667. Mich. 4 Ann. B. R. Smith v. Gould.

Neft. (Nativi. Et, neft. naturalis,) Is a bond-woman. Stat. 1 Ed. 6. 3. and 9. 2. cap. 2. But if a negro has been redemptioned, he may be freed, and if it be once free, and clear of dischrged of all bonds, the cannot be nefi after, without some special 2d done by her, as divorce, or confuilion in a court of record; and that is in favour of liberty, and therefore a free woman shall not be bound to taking a villain to her husband; but their issue shall be as their father was, which is contrary to the Civil law, which favs partum suivit. 9 Rich. 2. cap. 2. See Statutes. Ancient lords of manors hold, gave or assigned their bondmen and women, Cowell, edit. 1777. See Statutes, pars. 54.

Neffy. There was an ancient writ called writ of neff, whereby the lord charged such a woman for his neft, wherein but two neifs could be put; but it is now quitted of use.

He insuite vers, is a writ that lies for a tenant, who is disfranchised by his lord for other services than he ought to perform, and is a prohibition to the lord, common part, and his officers. The special use of it is, where the tenant has formerly prejudiced himself, by performing more fervices, or paying more rent without contrant than he needed; for in this case, by reason of the lord's fein, he cannot avoid him in aversely, and therefore is driven to this writ, as his next remedy. Before the time of 11th Ed. 3. there were but two titles of honour, viz. Earls and Barons; Barons were originally created outside, afterwards added by letters of patent. And all by patent, viz. about the 11th R. 2. As to earls, they were first created by letters patent; and an earldom confided in office for the defence of the kingdom. See Brad. lib. 1. c. 8. Comites had their names not from counties, but a contrans Regem. 9 Rep. 49. It may be observe the same is still the case, and earldoms consist of rent and pollutions, which were anciently great. At the time of the making Magna Charts, 9 H. 3. there was no Duke, Marquess, or Vizcount in England; for if there had been, they had, no doubt, been named in this charter. The first Duke that was created since the conquest, was Edward the Black Prince, in 11 Ed. 3. Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, in the 8th year of R. 2. created a great Duke in Ireland, and was the first Marquess that any of our Kings created. The first Vizcount that we find of record, and in parliament by that name, was John Beaumont, who in the 18th year of H. 6. was created Vizcount Beaumont.

Per Cote Ch. J. The dignities before the Conquest were not patronal, but of hereditary right; the hereditary right before the Conquest was in the hands of the King's feet, which and service were so paid that the King's feet were entitled to all the property of the King's feet, and right of all the property. But the nobility of the King's feet, and right of the nobility of the King's feet, were so paid that the King's feet were entitled to all the property of the King's feet, and right of all the property. The right of the King's feet, and right of the nobility of the King's feet, were so paid that the King's feet were entitled to all the property of the King's feet, and right of all the property.

Notes & nodum de firma. We often meet in Donofley with not nodus de firma, or firma not notandum, which is to be understood of entertainment for so many nights. See Donofley, tit. Epiftola. Rex hundred of Commonfords would, on their time redit, have mandatum denum de firma, & to lib. &S. Drink, or entertainment for so many nights. In the reign of the English Saxons, time was computed, not by days, but by nights, so we read in the council of Gl东南, anno 824. Nodjyes or Nodjy. Was a word well known among the Saxons to signify necessary fire, being derived from the Saxon neath, that is, necessary, and fy, &S. But the learned Spelman is of opinion from the old Saxon nead, i. abfegium; so that nodjyes were fires made in honour of the Heathen deities. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Non ponendius in affinis & iurislatis, a is a writ founded upon the statute of Wifmam 2. cap. 38. And Ar- tifici st public Chartus. cap. 9. which is granted upon divers causes to men for the freeing them from ofiFicr & jurtis, particularly by reason of age. See P. N. D. fol. 169. and the Regist. fol. 100, 119, 181, 183.

Non procedendo a s leum Rege irnufacte, is a writ to stop the trial of a cause appertaining unto one that is in the King's service, &c. until the King's plea-be further heard. Regist. fol. 73. &c.

Propos. If a plaintiff in an action, doth not declare against the defendant within reasonable time, a rule may be entered against him by the defendant's attorney to declare; and thereupon a non pro. &c. Practif. Stic. 232. And a plaintiff may enter a non pro. against one defendant, where there are two or more in their plea, before the record of the cause is set down by nif. prors to be tried at the affises; but it is said there cannot be a non pro. at the trial at the affises. 3 Stat. 345. Tho' in action against several defendants, it has been ruled otherwise. 2 Stat. 456. Non pro. have been frequent upon informations; but never upon informations, till the reign of King Charles II. Bid. See Belfe pugilis. and Mouflon.

Non-repeute, is applied to those spiritual persons that are not reduct, but do absent themselves willfully by the space of one month together, or two months at several times in one year, from their dignities or bae-fices, which is liable to penalties, by the statute against non-repeute. 21 H. 8. c. 13. But chaplains to the King, or other great persons, mentioned in this statute, and the 24 H. 8. c. 16. may be non-repeute on their livings; for they are excused from reper tune whilst they attend those that retain them: And bishop are not punishable by statute for non-repente; but if a bishop hold a deainty, parsonage, &c. in commision with his bishop-rick, he is punishable by the flat. 21 H. 8. for non-re-fence on the fame. Also where bishops are non-repeute on their bishopricks, they are liable to ecclesiastical cenfure; and the King may inflict a mandatory writ for their attendance, and compel them to it by fasting their temporarities, a notable precedent whereas we have in the case of the bishop of Hereford, in the reign of King Henry 3. 2 Eng. 625. See Reference.

Non-revisoria 999 Electi Regis. Is a writ directed to the ordinary, charging him, not to make a chief of any suit to the King's service, by reason of his non revisoria. Reg. Orig. fol. 98.

Non fane memori. (Non fane memory.) Is an exception taken to any aet, declared by the plaintiff or demandant to be done by another, and whereon he grounds his plaint or demand: And the effect of it is, that the party that did that act, was his own or the other's party, when he did it, or when he made his laif will and testament. See Non compos mentis.

Nonence. Where a matter fett forth is grammatically right but absurd in the sense, and unintelligible, we cannot reject some words to make sense of the rest, but must take them as they are; for there is nothing so absurd and nonsensical, but what by rejecting and omitting may be made fene; but where a matter is nonsenfe by being contradictory and repugnant to what precedent, there the precedent matter which is sense enfer shall not be defeated by the repugnance which follows, but the precedent matter shall be rejected, as in ejection where the declaration is of a demife the 2d of J anuary, and that the defendant polla, selleter the 1ft of January, ejected him; here the felleter may be rejected as being expressly contrary to the polla, and the preceding declaration. Ch. J. 1 Stat. 324. Trin. A. Am. B. R. Wray v. Andal. 1 Mer. Cas. 170. Words unnecessary might in construction be omitted or rejected, nary, or a plaintiff in an action, from giving a demife of the King's for non-repeute. Reg. of Writs, fol. 59.

Non-suit. (Non suti processus, &c.) Is a renunciation of the fuit by the plaintiff or defendant, most commonly, upon the discovery of some error or defect, when the matter is not well pleaded in, as the jury is ready at the bat to deliver their verdict. The Civicard term it Litt renunciationem. Conv. Where a plaintiff is demanded and doth not appear, he is said to be non-suit; and this usually happens, where upon the trial, and when the jury are ready to give their verdict, this plaintiff discovers some error or defect in the proceedings, or is unable to prove a material point, for want of a necessary witness, &c. and thereupon the plaintiff may be demanded, (as he must be) his default is recorded by the feudatory, and the entry is in mifercordia quia his processus est brevis fumus; upon which the defendant recovers his costs against him: but this arising from from copsit put prepul amended, by his being non-suit, it shall be intended that he had a such cause of suit as he declared in, and so that declaration is void, and he hath no day in court. 2 Lit. Reg.

This of the now generally are brought aotions of tref-s, and upon the cafe. Cowell, edit. 1727.

A common nuisance is an offense against the public, or is any thing tending to corrupt the manners of both sexes, by such an open profefion of lewdnes.

Also it hath been adjudged, that this is such an offense, of which a fake covert may be guilty as well as if the were male; and that doe, together with her husband, may be indicted and condemned to the pillory for keeping a bawdy-houfe; or for the keeping the house does not the cellarily import property, but may signify that fcare of government which the wife has in a family as well as the husband; and in this file is prefumed to have a confiderable part, as these matters are usually managed by the intrigues of her sex. Salk. 361. The Que. v. William.

It is clearly agreed, that all common gaming-houses are nuisances in the eye of the law, being deterrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices, and incite, to idlenes and avairious ways of gaining property, great numbers, whole time might otherwise be employed for the general good of the community; also it hath been adjudged, that this is such an offense, for the landlord may be indicted; for as in the preceding cafe, the wife may be concerned in acts of bawdry; for she doe may be active in promoting gaming, and furnishing the guests with all conveniences for that purpose. 1 Haw. P. C. 1038. Trin. 2 Gen. 1. The King v. Dixon.

It seems to be the better opinion, that all common flages for rope-dancers, &c., are nuisances, not only because they are great temptations to idlenes, but also becaufe they are apt to draw together numbers of disorderly persons, which cannot but be very inconvenient to the neighborhood. 1 Med. 76. 2 Reb. 848. 3 Reb. 404. 1 Will. 169. 1 Med. 122. 1 Haw. P. C. 193.

But it seems the better opinion, that playhouses having been originally inftituted with a laudable defign of recommending virtue to the imitation of the people, and expofing vice and folly, are not nuisances in their own nature, but may only become fuch by accident; as where they draw together fuch numbers of coheirs or people, &c., as prove generally inconvenient to the places adjacent; or when they pervert their original intenfion, by recommending vicious and loose characters under beau-

And now, for the better regulating of players and playhouses, by 10 Geo. 2, it is enacted, "That every perfon, who shall for hire, gain, or reward ad, represent or perform, or cause to be acted, represented or performed above, as opera, plays, farces, or other entertainment of the stage, or any part or parts therein, in cafe fuch perfon shall not have any legal fett-element in the place where the fame shall be acted, repre dented or performed, without authority by virtue of letters patent from his Majesty, his heirs, successors or predeceffors, or without licence from the Lord Chamberlain, or his Majesty's household, for the time being, fhall be deemed to be a rogue and a vagabond, within the intent and meaning of the 12 Ann. and shall be liable and subject to all fuch penalties and punishments, and by fuch methods of conviction, as are inflected on, or appoyed by law, for the punishment of rogues and vagabonds, who shall be found wandering, begging and mis-ordering themselves, within the intent and meaning of the faid act."

And feil. 2. it is further enacted, "That if any person having, or not having a legal settlement as aroiled felf, or any other authority or licence as afoferted, shall be or cause to be acted, represented or performed for hire, gain or reward, any interlude, tragedy, comedy, opera, play, farce, or other entertainment of the stage, or any new prologue or epile-ogue, unless the copy thereof be lent to the Lord Chamberlain of the King's households for the time being, in 1 day at least before the acting, representing or performing thereof, together with an account of the playhouse, or other place, where the fame shall be, and the time when the same is intended to be full acted, represented or performed, signed by the maffer or manager, or one of the matters or managers of such playhouse or place, or company of actors therein."

And feil. 3. it is further enacted, "That no perfon shall for hire, gain or reward, ad, perform, represent, or cause to be acted, represented or performed, any new interlude, tragedy, comedy, opera, play, farce, or any entertainment of the stage, or any new prologue or epilogue, unless the copy thereof be lent to the Lord Chamberlain of the King's households for the time being, in 1 day at least before the acting, representing or performing thereof, together with an account of the playhouse, or other place, where the fame shall be, and the time when the same is intended to be full acted, represented or performed, signed by the maffer or manager, or one of the matters or managers of such playhouse or place, or company of actors therein."

And feil. 4. it is further enacted, "That it fhall as may be lawful to and for the faid Lord Chamberlain to the time being, from time to time, and when and as often as he fhall think fit, to prohibit the acting, performing or representing any interlude, tragedy, comedy, opera, play, farce, or other entertainment of the stage or any ad, scene or part thereof, or any prologue or epologue; and in cafe any perfon or perfons fhall be acted, hire, gain or reward, ad, perform or represent, or cause to be acted, represented or performed, any new interlude, tragedy, comedy, opera, play, farce, or other entertain-

It is clearly agreed to be a nuisance to dig a ditch, or make a hedge over-thrust an highway, or to erect a new gate, or to lay out of timber in it; or generally to do any other act which will render it leis commodious: But it seems that a gate, which has continued time out of mind, is no nuisance; but that the same may be justified by prescription, being at first intended to have been set up by consent, on a compropion with the owner of the land, or the laying out the road in which case, the people had never any right to a free passage that was nothing but enjoy. 1 Jones 221. Cro. Car. 184. 1 Bull. 203. 2 Roll. Atr. 137.

And as navigable rivers are deemed highways, it is a nuisance to divert part of the river, whereby the current of it is weakened, and made unable to carry vessels of the same burden as it could before; also the laying of timber in a common river, tho' the foil belong to the party, is equally a nuisance, as if the foil was not his, if thereby the passage of boats, &c. is obstructed; and hence also it seems to follow, that private stairs, from those houses that stand by the Thames into it, are common nuisances: but it seems, that where there are cuts made in the bank, that are not annoyances to the river, the timber lying there is no nuisance. 5 Mod. 405. 759.

It hath been held to be a common nuisance, to divide a houfe in a town from the inhabitant in; by reason whereof it will be more dangerous in the time of infection of the plague. 2 Roll. Atr. 139. pl. 3.

Bringing a great ship of 300 tons into Bollinggate dock, tho' a common dock, yet being only for small ships coming with provision to the markets of London, is a nuisance, in the same manner, as a man using with his cart a common pack and horse way, so as to plow it up, and thereby render it leis convenient to riders, is a nuisance indelible. 6 Mod. 145. The Queen v. Leech.

It seems the better opinion, that a brewhouse, glashouse, chandler's flop or tide for wine, set up in such convenient parts of a town, that they cannot but greatly inconvenient, to the commonwealth, and that therefore they are nuisances. 2 Roll. 2. Of the indictment for a nuisance, how a nuisance is to be removed or abated; and how the offence is punishable.

Every nuisance, punishable by a publick prosecution, must be charged to be ad commune munimentum, or to the general annoyance of all the King's subjects; for if they are only injuries to particular persons, they are left to be redressed by the private actions of the parties aggrieved by them. 2 Roll. Atr. 83. 1 Hawk. P. C. 187.

And therefore an indictment for securing such a common or inclosing such a piece of ground, or disturbing such a water-course, or doing any other act, not apparently of a publick nature, to the nuisance of the inhabitants of such a town to, or of J. S. and his tenants, is not good. 1 Hawk. P. C. 199 and several authorities there cited.

So an indictment in a court leet for keeping a glasshouse at maximum munimentum was quashed; because it was not a nuisance, unless it had been ad commune munimentum. 1 Mod. 107. 3 Keb. 254.

But it hath been held, that an indictment for not repairing a bridge, for good usage Domini Regis transferrunt men Vex.
but it is clearly agreed, that common nuisances against the publick are only punishable by a publick prosecution.
And that no action on the case will lie at the feet of the party injured; as this would create a multiplicity of actions, one man being as well invited to bring an action as another; and therefore, in those causes, the remedy must be by indictment at the feet of the King.

2. The force of an oath, where there is oath against oath; and in what cases the plaintiff's oath is necessary.

By Grym Ch. J. Trin. 1656. B. S. If oath be made against oath, in a cause depending in court, this is a non liquet to the court, by which oath is true; and where the court will take that oath to be true which is to affirm a veridic judgment, or other oath of the court, and not that which is made to destroy them; for this tends more to the honour of the court, and to the expediency of justice. 2 L. P. R. 47.

The court will rather believe the oath of the plaintiff than the oath of the defendant, if there be oath against oath; because it is suppos'd, that the plaintiff hath wrong done him, and that the defendant is the wrong-doer, and may therefore be rather suppos'd to swear falsely to protect himself from the justice of the law, than the plaintiff that is forced to fly to the law to obtain his right. Pach. 47. 2 L. P. R. 247, 248.

Where there is a suit in Chancery, and there is a single witness against defendant's oath, 'tis not sufficient evidence to decree against him, nor will the court after that fend it to be tried at law, where one witt|fie is insufficient. Hill. 1632. 2 Vern. 283. Christ College v. Witherspoon.

There being oath against oath, whether a plea came in in time, it was referred to a trial on a saigned issue, to satisfy the confidence of the court, and in the mean time the judgment to stand. Comb. 399. Mich. 8 W. 3. B. R. Collins v. Lowley.

Where the defendant denied notice of the plaintiff's title, which the plaintiff proved by one witness; by the usage of the court of Chancery it is not sufficient to ground a decree for the plaintiff, being oath against oath; but the cause has been to direct a trial at law. It was now said by the Lord Keeper, that he did not fee the difference between doing it per prora and per pacu|eras; for that it was no law to be tried where the jury will certainly find it on the testimony of one witt|fie, and then decreeing it on that verdict, is the same thing as decreasing on one witt|fie without any trial at all; and therefore directed it to be tried; but that the plaintiff should admit the defendant's answer to be read at the trial, not as evidence, (for that he said it could not be) nor should they admit it to be true, but to be sworn to; so that defendant might have the benefit of his oath at law, as in this court, if it would weigh any thing with the jury.

When a bill alleges the want of a deed, and seeks relief on the matter of that deed by a decree, there oath is necessary that he hath not the deed. But where the bill seeks no deed, but barely to be relieved of the moiety or to have the deed produced at a trial, in that case the plaintiff ought not to be put to his oath. Trin. 14 Cor. 2. 1 Chan. Cheri, 11 Ann. -

But where no relief can be had at law on the deed, if not lost, but the remedy is only in equity (as in a case of coercion for further assistance) - then oath need not be made of the lost, per North Ch. J. 2 Med. 173. in the case of Howard v. Attorney General. Where the bill is for the discovery of deeds generally, and not of a particular bond or deed, oath need not be made of the plaintiff's not having them. Per Lord Macaulay. Ch. Pray. 536. and between you. If the party seeking relief alleges, upon any deed or bond, to recover the money upon the bond, or the profit of the land under the deed, in these and the like cases there must be an affidavit; because such a bill does by consequence seek to transfer the jurisdiction from the Common law to the court of equity. Per King C.

Obligations. See Enquiries.

Obligation. (Obhagitas.) Is a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed, either for payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like, and so differs from a bill that hath no penalty nor condition; and yet a bill may be obligatory. Co. on Litt. fol. 172, and Wiff. Synthet. part. 1. b. 2. sect. 126.

Obligation, says my Lord Cave, is a word of its own nature of a law or precedent, but it is usually taken that dition for payment of money, or to do or suffer some act or thing, and a bill, fast he, is, most commonly taken for a single bond without condition. Co. Lit.

This security is also called a specificity; the debt being particularly specified in writing, and the party's seal, acknowledging the debt or duty, and confirming the contract; rendering it a security of a higher nature than to be entered into without the solemnity of a seal; and therefore bonds or specialties shall be preferred to simple bonds. When the object of administration is either in-being a higher security, it is held, that for a breach of non-performance an action of debt only will lie. 3 Bat.

3. How may obhibors and obligees, and of making feral obligors and obligees.

1. Of the nature of the security, called a bond or obgation.

A bond or obligation is a duty or weight which advi-ded to the obligor or debtor, let it be contracted where it w ill and let the debtor fly to what place he pleases, and be chargeable every where, it need not be dated from an particular place; and therefore usually begins with Not.
An obligation is a promise to pay the lay a place where it was made, that it may receive its if it be denied. Cro. Lib. 773. Salt. 441. 3 L.
348. 6 Mod. 223.

A bond is a chope in action, which cannot be affi-ged over; so as to enable the affiance to sue in his own name; yet he has by the affiance such a title as the instrument and wax, that he may keep or cancel it.
Lit. 232.

Also in equity a bond is assignable for a valuable consideration paid, and the affiance alone becomes herent the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of affiance, pays the money to the obliger, he will compelled to pay it over again. 1 Term. 595. 3 Ed.
45. 10 Mod. 137.

The affiance must take its, subject to the same equi that it was in the hands of the obligee; as if, on a ma-riage treaty, the intended husband enters into a marriage brokerage bond, which is afterwards assigned to credi-yet it still remains liable to the same equity, and is is to be carried into execution against the obliger. 2 Per 595. 10 Mod. 44.

Bonds are to be considered as securities for the performance of contracts, and are usually entered into with parties, which are to be considered as compensations for the breach of the contract; as that a man shall pay 5l.
he omits to pay 100l. within such a time, that shall pay so much; if he does not perform such as conditions, do or omit such and such acts; and in the he may cede fines, provided he be not liable in the

And as the penalty, by the bond being forfeited, becomes the legal debt; so there was no remedy against such penalty, but by application to court, and certifying in the bills, and paying the principal, interest and costs; and so there was no remedy beyond the penalty; because in that the obligee seems to have taken up his security; yet, as it is on the conditioning of doing equal justice to both parties that equity is made, and that which relieves those cases, on payment of principal, interest and costs, then exceeding the penalty.

Samuel. Par. Ca. 15. 11.

And this rule of compelling the party to do equity who has the cause seems to be the reason why an obligee shall have after he has entered upon judgment; for tho' it be true it may be accounted his own fault why he did not take out execution, and therefore not intitled to the security; yet, as by the judgment he is intitled to the security, it does not seem reasonable that he should be prevented of it, but upon paying him principal and the costs, which incurred as well before as after the entering up of the judgment.

Act. Eq. 92, 288.

And by the 45 & 46. Ann. cap. 15. it is enacted, "That where any action of debt shall be brought on any single bill, or where an action of debt, or false fascia, shall be brought on such payment bill and may be pleaded in bar of such action of suit; and where an action of debt is brought upon any bond, which hath a condition or defeasance to make void the same, upon amount of a lessor sum at a day or some certain place; if the obligor, his heirs, executors or administrators have, by the action brought, paid to the obligee, his executors or administrators, the principal and interest due by the defeasance or condition of such bond, the such payment as not strictly made according to the condition or defeasance; yet it shall and may be pleaded in bar of such bond, and shall be as effectual a bar thereof, as if the action of debt had been brought and tried at the day and time of its being brought, and for the condition or defeasance, and had been so pleaded."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, sect. 14. That if at any time, pending an action upon such a bond and with a penalty, the defendant shall bring into court, here the action is depending, all principal money and interest due on such bond, and also all such costs, as have been expended in any suit or suits in law or equity upon such bond; the said money so brought in, shall be deemed as taken in full satisfaction and discharge of the bond, and the court shall and may give judgment of discharge every such defendant of and from the same accordingly."

2. What words create such a security; and of the ceremonies requisite to a bond or obligation; and of signing, dating, and delivery.

Herein we must observe, that the law does not seem to require any particular set form of words, as essentially necessary to create an obligation, but that any words, which declare the intention of the party, and denote his being bound, will be sufficient; because such obligation is only in nature of a contract, which ought to be construed as it is according to the law.

Cro. Eliz. 773. 3 Lev. 348. 1 Salk. 141. But if a bond bear date such a day, but was really delivered at a day after, the obligee may declare on a bond of such a date, but primo deliberatu at a day after; and if the obligee declare on a bond of such a date generally, the obligor may plead it was primo deliberatu on such a day after; but then he must traverse that it was delivered on the day of the date. 1 Brev. 104. 1 Lev. 196. If the bond was delivered before the date, on illus, non el factum, joined on such a deed, the jury are not estoppen to find the truth, viz. that it was delivered before the date, and it is a good deed from the delivery. 2 Co. 4. 6. 2 Keb. 332. In debt on an obligation, the defendant pleads that he delivered it as an ecfrow, &c狍e paturas eft vinculare; this is ill, for he ought to have sworn to whom he delivered it, and the fium non for fals, &e de hoc petit fe, &c. 1 Vent. 9, 110. 1 Salk. 747. So pleading that he delivered it to the obligee as an ecrow, to be his deed on certain conditions, is ill; for by the delivery of it to the obligee, it is become his deed absolutely. Hob. 249. 1 Vent. 9. A bond or deed may be delivered by words, without any act of delivery; as where the obligor says to the obligee, go and take the said writing, or take it as my deed, &c. So an actual tradition, without speaking any word, is sufficient; otherwise, a man that is mute could not deliver a deed; but where on an illus of non el factum, the jury found that the defendant signed and sealed the obligation, and laid it on a table, and that the plaintiff received and took it, this was held not to be the defendant’s deed, without other circumstances found by the jury. If a. enters into an obligation to B. which he delivers to C. the use of B. though this immediately, upon the execution and delivery to C. becomes the deed of A. yet, if after it is preferred to B. he (as he may) discharges it to its purport, by such refusal the obligation loses its effect. Dyer 129. 7. 2c. Ex. 145. 1 Rol. Abr. 148. and 1 Salt. 301, cited. It is clearly agreed, that two or more may bind themselves jointly in an obligation, or they may bind themselves jointly and severally; in which case, the obligea may sue them jointly; but if they are jointly and not severally bound, the obligea must sue them jointly; also, in such case, if one of them dies, his executor is totally discharged, and the survivor and survivors only chargeable. 2 Rol. Where two bound themselves, or any of them, their heirs, or every one of their heirs, etc., and the obligation was sealed and delivered by both of them jointly; it was held to be a joint and severable, and not joint only; and that the word et should be understood as et; and that therefore the joint delivery and acceptance could not make that joint only, per se, as is held on his part by counsel. Abr. 148.

If there are bound in a bond in these words, Obligamus ns & querelam noftrum conjunctam; this is a joint obligation, and one of them alone cannot be sued; the word conjunctam makes the obligation joint, which the word querelam cannot make severable; being inferted, for no other purpose, but to express more strongly that they might be all bound, not that they were to be severally bound. Mor 260. pl. 407. 3 Leon. 206. Wigmore v. Vell. Oligog, he that enters into an obligation, and obligea the person to whom it is entered into. Before the coming in of the Norman law (as we read in Inegilbrus) writing obligations were made with golden crosses, or other small figs or marks. But the Norman law began the making such bills and obligations with a print or seal in wax, to which every one’s special signet, attested by three or four witnesses. In former time many houses and lands thereto posted by grant and bargain, without script, charter or deed, only with the landlord’s word or helmet, with his horn or cup; and, many tenements were demifed with a fur or curry-cumb, with a bow, or with an arrow. Cowell, edit. 1727. See Wang. Didota terræ, In the opinion of some, contains half an acre of land, others but half a perch. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Actions (Obsecutiones). Offerings. 2 Inst. 6. 661. Also ten, revenue, propery of spiritual living. Stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 11. See Offerings.

Detrafla, Is, according to Spelman, taken for an impediment; it signifies also a tribute, which the lord imposed on his tenants. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Stations, Are affectis, wherein Manuspeak speak at large, the word is derived de ascendente, i.e. harrowing or breaking close. See Spelman, vol. vi. and verbo Efferum. Effara velo dicatur que apud opus occasionis munificent. Lib. Niger Sacc. par. 1. cap. 13.

Occupant. If tenant for term of another’s life dies, leaving cessui que vie; he who first enters shall hold the land during that other man’s life, and he is in law called an occupant, because his title is by his first occupation; and so, if tenant for his own life, grant his estate to another, or if the grantee dies, there shall be an occupant. Co. on Litt. cap. 6. sect. 56. and Bullow. 2 Rep. 5 par. 51. 12.

If a man leaves to J. S. for life, and J. F. dies, the land returns to the heir, because the life being spent for which the land was conveyed, it must necessarily come back to the old proprietor; but if J. S. and J. F. are bound to J. S. during the life of A. and the lease has delayed, leaving cessui que vie, or if in the former case J. S. had granted over his estate to B. and B. had died; in these cases he that first took possession of the land was lawfully the tenant, for the recovering could not claim in either case, because he had parted with it during the life of A. in one case, and of J. S. in the other; and J. F. cannot have any right, for that were to act contrary to his own grant, and to claim an interest which he had transferred to another; and the tenant par auter vie being dead, his descendants could not claim it, because they were not comprehended in the words of the original donation; and therefore the first occupant must be the rightful tenant, since this, like all other things which are derrilis, and without any owner, belongs to the first occupant or poiffessor. Co. Lit. 41. b. Cro. Eliz. 182.

The law of occupation is founded upon the law of nature, etc. Ead. tenenda manus voca occupant consequitur. So as, upon the first coming of the inhabitants to a new country, that he first enters upon such part of it, and manures it, gains the property (as is now used in Cornwall, etc. by the laws of the Statuaries); so that it is the actual possession and manure of the land, which was the first cause of tenure, and consequently is to be gained by actual entry. Sid. 342. Graty v. Barentost. The
The true ground of occupancy is, that anciently all trials of titles were by real actions, and therefore he that had the freehold was one to whom the law had a special regard. The ancient law for many respects did not allow leases for above 40 years, till 21 Hen. 8. 15. And another reason there was not only to have that right paramount might know how to try his action, but that the lord might know how to allow for his services (which were considerable things formerly); he ought to know who was his tenant, and therefore the law provided there should be a person on whom he should answer. See Henam Ch. 4. 37, 65. in the case of Geary v. Beresford.

The subject and object of the occupant are only such things as are capable of occupancy, and not the freehold at all; into which he neither doth nor can enter; but the law calls the freehold immediately upon him that hath to 27. 47. for the lives of B. 47. and D. and 27. 47. thing whereof he is occupant, that there may be a tenant to the present; per Vaughan Ch. 3. Hill. 19 & 20 Car. 2. in the case of Holden v. Smallvike.

If tenant by currey grants his estate to another and his heirs, and grantee dies, his heir shall be a special occupant of this estate; 27. 47. 31. to adhere to the grantor and his heirs; it is admissible that the heir of the grantee shall have the land. 2 Rel. Ab. 151. There shall be no occupant of an estate of tenant by the curtey or dower, which are estates created by law. Cro. Eliz. 58.

The tenant pur ater vis makes lease for years to commence from his death; a stranger enters; though the stranger is occupant of the freehold, yet lefsee for years shall fall upon him, and the lease shall bind the occupant; agreed. Lov. 201. in the case of Geary v. Beresford.

If tenant pur ater vis leases for years, in truth for himself and life, and in truth for his wife for her life; and the lefsee for years actually enters, but permits the baron to enjoy it, who dies, and then the feme enters; the feme shall be occupant, and not the lefsee for years. And so a judgment given in C. E. contrary to the opinion of Bridgesman Ch. J. was affirmed pur three juries, abente Kayling Ch. J. Lov. 302. Geary v. Beresford.

The custom of a manor was, that every customary coyo- phold of that manor might be granted to three persons, tabendum to them facerfuit first nominatur, & non alter. A surrenderer was made to 7. 8. and his sffignis for his own life, and the lives of two others. Povell J. feem'd to incline that if 7. 8. had become bankrupt, and the estate assigned, and the assignee had died, living the copy- holder; the lord should immediately have the land; and Povell J. thought that upon the death of the copyholder the estate of assignee would determine, but the assignees were living. But it was agreed, that if the grant had been to 7. 8. for the lives of B. 47. and D. and 7. 47. had died, the lord should have the land again, tho' against his own limitation, because there can be no occupant of a copyhold estate without a special custom; and this would be no mischief, the failure being on the fide of the grantor only. 6 Med. 63, 68. Occupation. (Occupation.) Signifies the putting a man out of his freehold in time of war, and is all one with diffijin in time of peace, faving that it is not so danger- ous. Co. e. Litt. fol. 249. Alio ufe or tenure. So we say, such land is in the tenure or occupation of such a man, that is, in his possession. See Difjusm. Alio trade or occupation, 12 Car. 2. cap. 18. And as an unjust entry upon the King into lands or tenements, is an interufion, to an unlawful ufling of franchises is an usur- pation. But occupations in a larger fcope, are taken for pur- profures, intrusions and usurpations. See 2 Infl. fol. 273.

Difputa. An old writ mentioned in the statute of 39. Ditione, (Debitione.) Is an aq committed against a law, or omitted where the law requires it, and punishable by it. Woffin. Symb. And all offences are capital or not so; capital, those for which the offender shall los his life: And not capital, where an offender may forfeit his lands and goods, be fined or suffer corporal punishment, or both; but not los of life. H. P. C. 2. 13. 94.

Capital offences are comprehended under high treason, petit treason, and felony: Offences not capital include the remaining part of the pleas of the Crown, as come under the title of Misdemeanors. An offence may be greater or less, according to the place wherein it done. Finch 35. But the offence will be in equal de- gree in them, who are equally tainted with it; and the that aet and content therof are alike offenders. See Rep. 80.

Disturbances. Obligations and offerings feem to be on the same thing, and are in a fenece something of the same nature, but not, and the one is only for real or personal. Offerings are reckoned among personal tithes, and as fuch come by labour and induftry, are paid by fervants and others once a year to the paftor, vicar, according to the custom of the place; or the are to be paid in the place where the party dwells; but, four offering-days, as before the statute 27. Diff. (Officeum) Signifies that function by virtue herof a man hath some employment in the affairs of other, as of the King, or of another person. Cawell.
It is said, that the word officium principally implies a fy, and the next place the charge of such duty; and at it is a rule, that where one man hath to do with other's affairs against his will, and without his leave, at this is an office, and he who is in it is an officer.
Eis. 478.

There is a difference between an office and an employment, every office being an employment; but there is a difference which do not come under the denomination offices; such as an agreement to make, has, plough in the earth, &c., which differ only from that of ward of a man, &c. Sir 2d. 142.

By the ancient Common law, officers ought to be ho-men, legal and fage, & qui melius fiant & perfct office intendere; and this, says my Lord Coke, was the policy prudent antiquity, that officers did ever give grace in place, and not the place only to grace the officer.

Officers are distinguished into civil and military, according to the nature of their several trusts. Carib. 9.

Offices are distinguished into those which are of a pub-lc, and those which are of a private nature: and herein is said, that every man is a publick officer, who hath y duty concerning the publick; and he is not the les publick officer, where his authority is confined to narrow limits; because it is the duty of his office, and the use of that duty, which makes him a publick officer, not the extent of his authority. Carib. 479.

Also offices are distinguished into ancient offices, and those which are of a new creation; and herein it is ob-rollable, that constant usage hath not only sanctioned the estabishment of such ancient offices as have existed

what manner to be exercised, how to be dispelled, &c.

The King is the universal officer, and disposer of justice within this realm, from whom all others are to be paid but yet, he cannot create a new office in conflict with our constitution, or prejudicial to the subject. 12

Richard Beaufamp, now bishop of Salisbury, should have it for his life, and after his decease, that his successors should have it for ever; and amongst divers other points it was resolvd unanimously, that this grant was void, for that a new office was erected, and for the juridition or Where ever one office is incident to another, such incident office is regularly grantable by him who hath the grew to be officers in their courts; and this right which they had of constituting their own officers, is further confirmed to them by Wylton. 2. cap. 30. the reasons whereof are twofold; 4th. For that the law doth ever the chief that which is to be done. 20th. The officers and clerks are but to enter, inroll, or effect that which the justices do adjudge, award or order; the insufficient doing wherewith maketh the proceeding of the justices erroneous, than the which nothing can be more dishonour-able and grievous to the justices, and prejudicial to the

The taking or giving of a reward for offices of a publick nature is said to be bribed, and, as it were, Hawahint, nothing can be more palpably prejudicial to the good of the publick, than to have places of the highest concernment, on the due execution whereof the happiness of both King and people doth depend, disposed of not to those who are most able to execute them, but to such as are most able to purchase them; nor can any thing be a more discouragement to industry and virtue, than to fee those places of trust and honour, which ought to be the rewards of those who by their industry and diligence have qualified themselves for them, conferred on such who have no other recommendation, but that of being the highest bidders; neither can any thing but bribery and corruption offend the publick, injure their power by bribery and extortion, and other acts of injustice, than the consideration of the great expenses they were at in gaining their places, and the necessity of sometimes straining a point to make their bargain answer their expectations. 2 Inf. 149. 1 Hawk. F. C. 168—9.

such officers and ministers of the beat and most lawful men, and sufficient to their estimation and Knowledge.

And by the 4 H. 4. cap. 5. it is enacted, That no Officer shall let his heir, or a servant or a farm to any man for the time he occupieth such office.

But the principal statute relating to this matter is the 5 & 6 Ed. 5. cap. 16. which is verisimil as follows, Sect. 1. For avoiding of corruption which may hereafter happen to be in the officers and ministers in thofe courts and places, or in whatsoever office or offices to be had the true administration of justice, or for servants of tru' and to the intent that persons worthy and meet to be advanced to the place where justice is to be miniftr'd, or any service of truit executed, shall hereafter be preferred to the fame, and no other;

Therefore enacted, That if any peror or persons at any time hereafter bargain or sell any office or offices, or deputation of any office or offices, or any part or parcel of any of them; or receive, have or take any money, fee, reward or any other profit; directly or indirectly, or take any promife, agreement, covenant, bond or any assurance to receive or have any money, fee, reward or other profit, directly or indirecoffice or offices, or any part of any of them; or to the reward, against any such office or offices, or for the execution of any of the said offices, or of any of the Majesty's honours, cares, manors, lands, tenements, woods or hereditaments, or any of the King's Majesty's, customs, or any administration, or necessary attendance be had, done or executed in any of his Majesty's curtaut house or house, or the keeping of any of the King's Majesty's towns, carles or fortresses, being used, occuplied or appointed for a place of strength and defense; which shall concern or touch any clerkship to be occupied in any manner of court of record wherein justice is be miniftr'd; that then all and every such person or persons, that shall so bargain or sell any of the said offices or offices, or deputation of any of the said offices, or the execution of any of them, or that shall take any money, fee, reward or profit, for any of the said offices, or offices, deputation or deputations, of any of the said offices, or any part of any of them, or shall take any promife, covenant, bond or assurance for money, reward or profit, to be given for any of the said offices, or offices, or any of any of them, shall in the like manner and by the like right and their right to elate, which such person or persons shall have of, in any of the said offices, or offices, deputation or deputations, or any part of any of them, or of, in or to the gift or nomination of any of the said offices, or offices, deputation department or deputation of which offices or offices, or for the deputation or deputations of which offices or offices, or any part of any of them, any such person or persons shall to make any bargain or sale, or take or receive a sum of money, fee, reward or profit, or any promife, covenant, bond or assurance to have or receive any ward, money or profit; but also that all and every such person or persons, that shall give or pay any sum of money, reward or fee, or shall make any such promife, agreement, bond or assurance for any of the said offices, or for the deputation or deputations of any of the said offices, or any part of any of them, shall immediately and by upon the same fee, money or reward given them, upon any such promife, covenant, bond or agreement had or made for any such office or offices, reward, to be paid as is aforesaid, be adjudged a disablc person in the law to all intents and purposes to have, or copy and enjoy the same offices, or offices, deputation or deputations; or any part of any of them, for the while such person or persons shall to give or pay any sum money, fee or reward, or make any such promife, covenant, bond or other assurance to give or pay any sum money, fee or reward.

Sect. 4. It is further enacted, That all and every such bargains, sales, promisses, bonds, agreements, covenants and assurances, as before specified, shall be void and annulled from and after the same, and all and every such bargains, sales, promises, bonds, covenants or assurances shall be null and void, and all and every such intercourse, transactions, and actions in any manner contrary to the law and effect of this act, yet that notwithstanding the judgments given, and all other acts or acts, executed.
one, by any such person or persons offending by authority, or colour of the office or deputation, which ought to be inflicted, but not occupant of the same office, or of a commission officer, before his commission is registerd, should take the oath there mentioned; that he had not directly or indirectly given any thing for procuring the commission, but the usual fees extended only for horse, foot and dragoons, but not to the marines.

8. It hath been adjudged, that the use of the deputation of the office of a provost marshal of Jamaica, is not within this statute; because this statute does not extend to the plantations. 4 Bald. 222. 9. In a writing in a judgment in Ireland, it was held clearly that the office of clerk of the crown, and clerk of the peace, was within the statute; but that this law did not extend to Ireland, not being enacted there. Trim. 9 Geo. 2. in B. R. Maccartey ver. Wickford.

10. It hath been held, that one who makes a contract for an office, contrary to the purport of this statute, is so far disabled to hold the fame, that he cannot at any time during his life be reformed to a capacity of holding it by any grant or dispensation whatsoever. Hdb. 75. Co. Lit. 234. Co. Car. 301. Co. Jec. 386.

11. It is held, that where an office is within the statute, and the office is certain, if the principal make a conveyance, reserving a letter sum out of the salary, it is good; so if the profits be uncertain arising from fees, if the principal make a conveyance, reserving a certain sum out of the fees and profits of the office, it is good; for in these cases the deputy by his constitution is in place of his principal, yet he has no right to his fees, they still continue to be the principal's; so that as to him it is only reserving a part of his own, and giving away the rest to another; but where the reservation or agreement is not to pay out of the profits, but to pay generally a certain sum, it must be paid at all events; and a part of the fund for performance of the agreement must be void by the statute. Salt. 468. 6 Mod. 234. Godolphin v. Tudor. Comb. 356. S. P.

12. It hath been held, that this being a public law, the judges ex officio are to take notice of it; but yet it seems the more regular and safe way to plead it; but it hath been resolved, that a person in pleading this statute need not allege, that the party against whom it is pleaded is not within any of the provisos or exceptions in the statute; but that if he be, must come on his side to shew it. Trim. 9 Geo. 2. in B. R. Maccartey ver. Wickford.

3. What remedies a person having a right to an office may pursue, to be let into the enjoyment of it, and how a disturbance is punishable.

It is held clearly, that an office lay at Common law for an office, and that therefore though the statute of 5 Gil. 2. cap. 25. speaks only of offices in fee, yet an office fees for an office in tail, or for life; but this is to be understood of offices of profit, for an office of charge and no profit, an office does not lie. 8 Co. 42. a. John Webb's case. 2 Idf. 412. S. P.

But a man shall not have an office of the whole office, unless he be defribed of the whole office, and a man be defribed of parcel of the profits of an office, he may have an office for that parcel only. 8 Co. 49. b. 2 Idf. 412.

In an affize for an office newly erected and constituted, the demandant in his plaint must shew what fee or profit is granted for the exercise thereof; for this office cannot have a fee or profit of any commonalty, but a man may, and for an office without fee or profit no office lies. 8 Co. 49. Webb's case.

But in an affize for an ancient office, the demandant in his plaint need not shew what fee or profit is belonging to it, for it shall be intendment there is some fee or profit. 8 Co. 46.

not be differe thereof, but at his election; and it was likewise held, the proving that B. being in the lobby of the house of commons, took hold of the door of the house, and laid his hands upon the mace, then being in the hands of A. to take it, but hindered by A. was good evidence both of a seisin and differe. 2 Lev. 108.

But when the feigant of the mace to the house of seisin, the damages being recovered in satisfaction of the fees, and he then being out of possession of his office, was doubted; some of the judges inclining one way and some the other; and it was intended to have been found specially, but the plaintiff being unwilling to stand to it

4. Of the forfeitures of an office; and where for corruption, bribery, extortion, and opprobrious proceedings, officers are forfeitable.

It is laid down in general, that if an officer be contrary to the nature and duty of his office, or if he refuse to act at all, that in these cases the office is forfeited.
11 Ed. 4. 1 b. 2 Roll. Abr. 155.

But herein it will be necessary to consider more mi-nately, what shall be said such acts as are contrary to the duty of his office, and how far the same, whether they be acts of omission or commission, amount to a forfeiture; wherein it hath been clearly agreed, that a gaoler by fuf-fering voluntary eaves, by abusing his prisoners, by extorting unreasonable fees from them, or by detaining them in gaol after they have been legitimately discharged and paid their just fees, forfeits his office; for that in the grant of every office it is implied, that the gaoler execute it faithfully and diligently. Co. Litt. 233. 9 Co. 50.

2 as by a maifial or other gaoler's permitting eaves, 2dly. By nonufer; in which there is this difference, when the office be forfeit, the administration of justice or the commonwealth, the officer ex officio ought to attend without any demand or request, there by nonufer or non-attendance the office is forfeited; but where an officer is not obliged to attend, but upon demand or request made by him whose officer he is, there without such demand or request, there can be no forfeiture; and herein also my Lord Coke in another place takes the following divercy.

that non-uit of itself, without some special damage is no forfeiture of private offices, but that it is otherwise in publick offices. 2 Inst. 149. 3dly. To justice.
And as to refual, he says, that in all case where an officer is bound upon request to execute his office, if he does not do it upon request, he forfeits it as if the Reward of a manor be requested by the lord to Office found, is where an inquisition is made to the King's use of any thing, by virtue of his office who inquirit. And therefore we oftentimes read of an office found, which is nothing else, but such a thing found by inquisition made ex officio. And in this sense it is used 33 H. 8. 20. and in Steauty; Pravng. 17, div. 66, where to traverse an office, is to take it out of the power of the King's issue. And in Kitchen, fel. 127, to return an office, is to return that which is found by virtue of the office. And there are two sorts of offices in this signification, issuing out of the Exchequer by commission, viz. an office to intestate the King to the thing inquired of, and of an office of investigation, found in such see 6 Rep. fel. 52. 1. In what cases process of outlawry lies; and by what jurisdiction such processes are to issue.

It seems, that originally processes of outlawry only lay trespass and felony, and was afterwards extended to deads of an enormous nature; and herein it is laid down by ferjeant Hawkins, That processes of outlawry at this day lies in all appeals, and in all indictments of conspireacy and decreit, or other crimes of a higher nature than trespass, &c. or arms; but it lies not in an action, nor, as some fay, on an indictment on a statute, unless it be given by such statute, either expressly, as in the case of premature, or impliedly, as in cases made treason or felony by statute, or where a recovery is given by an action in which such processes lay before, as in the case of felonious entry.

In an affile a capias pro fine lies, and upon that processes of outlawry, if the affile be found with force, but being a mixed action, as favouring of the reality, it is out of the @itute of additions, 1 Hen. 5. cap. 5. which extends only to personal actions, appeals and inquests.

So process of outlawry lies in reprieve, and is given by the statute 25 Ed. 3. cap. 17. which gives the capias in this manner; when on the partes repligati faces the sheriff returns averita et clangata, then a capias in nullam ficies, and on that being returned nulla bona, a capias ficies, and fo to outlawry; but it does not lie on the original writ of reprieve, which is vicissital and determined; and therefore as no addition is required in such original writ, so neither ought there to be any in the second writ; for where a writ or process is founded on a former, it must pursue the former, and cannot vary from
it. 6 M. 84. 1 Salt. 5. Earl of Banbury v. Wood.

But in account, debt, detinue, annuity, covenant, and such actions as are grounded upon negligence or laches never, no capias lay at Common law, but only longmans and disfrses infinite, and therefore the capias and outlawry in these actions were introduced by divers acts of parliament. Co. Lit. 128. 6 Leav. 82.

where the proceeding is by bill, and not by original, as there can be no capias, so there can be no proces of outlawry, as in a bill of privilege by or against an attorney. 1 Leon. 329. 2 Rull. Abr. 70. 1 Lov. Abr. 159. 1 Rol. 577.

It is clear, that the courts of Westminster may issue process of outlawry, and that the court of King's Bench, either upon an indictment originally taken there, or removed thither by certiorari, may issue process of capias and exijlment into any county of England, upon a non ciel treatment, or the arrest of the sheriff of the county where he is indicted, and a teftament that he is in some other county. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 198.

Also justices of oyer and terminer may issue a capias or exijlement, and so proceed to the outlawly of any person indicted before them, directed to the sheriff of the same county, under their封 signature, and by the statute of 5 Ed. 3. cap. 11, they may issue process of capias and exijlment to all the counties of England, against persons indicted or outlawed of felony before them. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 31. 199.

But justices of gaol delivery regularly cannot issue a capias or exijlment; because their commission is to deliver the gaol of prisoners in exijlentibus, so that those whom they have to do with are always intended in custody already. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 199.

Justices of the peace may make out process of outlawry upon indictments taken before themselves, or upon indictments taken before the sheriff, and returned to them as in the above case, that is, when the power of the sheriff, to make any process upon indictments taken before him, is taken away by that statute. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 199.

It is made a statute by Hal. whether a coroner can by law make out process of outlawry against a man indicted by inquisition before him. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 199.

The process to the outlawry, viz. the capias and exijment, must be in the King's name, and under the judicial seal of the King appointed to that court that issues that process, and with the signature of the chief justice or chief judge of that court or seiffions. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 199.

2. Againsf whom proces of outlawry may be awarded; and whether it may be awarded against a peer, an infant, with a female, certain federalists, and principal and accessory.

If a nobleman, or peer of the realm, be indicted, and cannot be found, process of outlawry shall be awarded against him, and shall be outlawed pro judiciatum exijlentatum. 2 Hift. 49. 3 Ed. 31. Staunf. 130. 2 Haw. P. C. 424.

But in civil actions between party and party, regularly a capias or exijlment lies not against a lord of parliament of England, whether secular or ecclesiastical; yet in case of an indictment for treason or felony, yes or but for trespass of &c. arms, as an affault or riot, proces of outlawry may lie against a peer of the realm, because the suit is for the King, and the offence is a contempt against him; and therefore, if a receive be returned against a peer, or if a peer be convicled of a diliufion with force, or denies his deed, and be found against him, a capias pro fine and exijlment flall issue, for the King is to have a fine; and the same reason holds upon an indictment of trespass or riot, and much more in the case of felony. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 199, 200. Crs. Eliz. 170, 503. 5 Co. 54. 1 Rul. Abr. 220.

An infant above the age of fourteen may be outlawed, and the outlawry is not erroneous; but an infant under said age, or of the age of fourteen, cannot be outlawed, for if he be he is erroneous. 3 Hift. 5, 222, 234. 1 B. & C. Tit. outlawry 11. 2 Rul. Abr. 825. Dyer 104. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 207, 208.

But the outlawly of such infant is not void, it bring of record, but is voidable only by writ of error. Dyer 239. 2 Rol. Abr. 825.

A woman is said to be waived, and not outlawed; and if it be waived, it is by Lord Coke, why the outlawry of a woman is legally called treason, that is, because women are not sworn in leers or torns, as men are; who are above the age of twelve; and therefore, says he, men are called traitors, i.e. extra legem majestatis, but women are civitissa, i. e. director, left out, or not required, because they are not sworn to the law. Cr. Lit. 122, 6. Lit. fol. 106.

Therefore where a capias and exijlement were awarded against three men and two women, and the return was exijlentati exijlent, where, as to the women, it ought to have been unwaived exijlent, this was held to be error. If in an action against husband and wife, the husband is outlawed, and wife waived, and the is taken upon the capias exijlentat, though fine is to be discharged of the imprecision, (because the plaintiff cannot proceed against her alone) yet the deed remains waived, and when her husband is taken he must bring her in. For this rule Dyer 271, 1. Crs. Faz. 445. Crs. Eliz. 370. Aust. 86. 1 Sid. 21.

In an action for a debt due by the wife before marriage, the husband was returned outlawed, and the wife waived, but before the return was awarded, an attorney procured for the wife a supersedeas, forming an issue, where the wife had appeared before him as her attorney; and on motion that this appearance of the wife should be received, all the court conceived, that if upon the exijament the sheriff had returned reddidit se, or upon partes capias, the sheriff had returned capi causas upon the wife, then her appearance should be entered, but not by attorneys, as it is here, and the exijlent should only issue against the husband, & idem idem should be given to the wife; but when the husband upon the exijlent is returned outlawed, then it shall be entered alter fum juror for the wife, for the process i are not entered, and the sheriff may pursue his pardon, he shall not have any allowance therein, as in a feire facias, unless he appear for himself and his wife; but if for the husband, the sheriff should return capi capi upon a phias capias, and non civitissa for the wife, yet an exijlent shall issue against both, because it must be presumed that this was an issue in his own favor, but if upon the exijament the sheriff returned reddidit se for the husband and for the wife, and the wife is waived, the husband shall go free; but in this case, because the exijlent was returned against both to be outlawed, the supersedeas suspending the appearance of the wife is merely idle and void; whereas it was entered, and the exjament appointed to be filed against both. When two are adjudged to account, and one is outlawed and accounts, if he discharges himself upon the account, this shall be a discharge to the other, when he uses a seire facias upon a charter of pardon, and if he be outlawed, and he account, this shall be a charge upon the other; because they were adjudged & non commutant juncturly. 41 Ed. 3. 13. 6, 1 Rol. An action of trespass brought against two, one was outlawed for the entry of the writ it was entred, ’by suidendum quod praedidit’ J. S. (one of the defendants) utractus est, and then counts against one of them; and on motion in arrest of judgment, the court held the declaration nought, and that the course of pleading in such cases, after the entry of the writ, was to fly quod praedidit J. S. utractus est in praec. illa, and that the last words are essential, because that he might be outlawed in another writ, and not in this. 1 Sid. 173. 1 Hed. 624. S. C. Guy vtr. Barnard.

As to awarding outlawry against principal and accessory, and the trespass of the peace, and the proceeding to the end of the writ, in such cases, the assize of outlawry was formerly in use, but the same is now disused. 1 Edw. 1. 14. It is declared, That it has been used in some counties to outlaw persons being accused if commandment, force, aid or receipt, within the same time that he which is accused for the deed is outlawed, and therefore it is provided, that none be outlawed upon appeal of commandment, force aid or receipt, unless he shall have been convicted by the writ of true workmen, and none shall be used therein this realm; nevertheless, he shall not appeal if he be outlawed on this interment, nor leave off to commence his appeal at the next county against them, no more than against their principals which be appealed of the deed, but their exequency of the appeal are outlawry or otherwise.

In the construction of this statute, the following particulars are laid down by Sergeant Hawkins as must remarkable.

4th. That it seems agreed, that it extends as well to judgments as to appeals, not only because the word appeal in the statute may in a large sense be taken for any accusation in general but because indictments are certainly within the reach of the statute as appeals; and the Common law, for the settling whereof his writ was made, did make any distinction in appeals and in indictments. 2 Ingl. 83. 2 Hawk. P. C. 306.

2dly. That it seems agreed, that where-ever one of the defendants are expressly charged as principals, and others as accessories, before the award of this exequency, the same or their chargers in action cannot but be retrievable, because it appears upon the record that the exequency issued contrary to the direction of the statute; but if several be outlawed on a writ of appeal, whichchargeth them all alike without any distinction, there can be no advantage taken of the appellant's not having pursued the statute, for it appears he might have charged them all as principals. 1 Hawk. P. C. 306. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200.

3dly. That it is strongly holden, that if an appellant take out the exequency at the same time against all the defendants, he must, when they appear, count against them all as principals, and shall be concluded from charging any of them as accessories, because he has taken out such process as is erroneous where all are not principals; but he makes a doubt, whether this be law at this day, since all errors, as the law seems now to be holden, are 2 Hawk. P. C. 306, and vide 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200.

4thly. That it seems the better opinion, that where there are more than one principal, the exequency shall not lie till all of them are arraigned; and herein it is laid by Hale, that if A. and B. be indicted as principals against C, and both accessory to both, the exequency against the accessory shall lay till both be attainted by outlawry or plea; for that it is said, if one be acquitted, the accuser is discharged in so far as to both, and therefore shall not be put to answer till both be restrained; but hereof he adds a dubitatur, because though C. be accuser to both, he might have been indicted as accessory to one, because the felonies are in law several; but if he be indicted as accessory to both, he must be indicted in several, and not as accessory to both. 2 Hawk. P. C. 306. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202. 207.

In treason all are principals; and therefore proceeds of outlawry may go against him that receives, at the same time as against him that did the fact. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 235.

3. To what place process of outlawry is to issue; and of the quinto exactus, and proclamation on an outlawry.

The exequency must be in the county where the party really resides, for there all actions were originally laid; and because that outlawries were at first only for treason, felony or very enormous trespasses, the process was to be executed at the Town, which is the sheriff's criminal court; and this held not only before the sheriff, but before the coroners, who were ancient conservators of the law; and when a man is outlawed to the side with the sheriff in his court, and who pronounced the outlawry in the county court on the party's being quinto exactus; and therefore anciently there was no occlusion for any proceeds to any other county than that in which the party actually resided; but this matter being since altered, and persons learning their title to be discharged, that the aids of parliament, it will be acccessory to take notice of the statutes themselves. Fiz. Exequency 26. Dyer 295.

And first, It is enacted by the 6 Hen. 6. cap. 1. That before any exequency be awarded against persons indicted in King's Bench for treason or felony, writs of capias shall be directed as well to the sheriff or sheriffs of the county whereof they be named in the indictment, the same capias having the space of six weeks at the least, or longer time, by the direction of the said justices, if the cause require it, before the return of the same; which writs so returned, the justices shall proceed in the manner as they have done before the statute; and if any exequency be awarded, or any outlawry pronounced against such persons, before the return of the said writs, the same capias so awarded, with the outlawry thereof pronounced, shall be set aside and held void; and it is enacted by the 8 Hen. 6. cap. 10. That upon every indictment or appeal, by which any subject dwelling in other counties than where such indictment or appeal shall be taken of treason, felony and trespases, before the justices of the peace, or before any other ministers having power to take such indictments or appeals, or other commissioners or justices in any county, franchise or liberty of England, before any exequency awarded, presently after the first writ of capias returned, another writ of capias shall be awarded, directed to the sheriff of the county whereof he who is indicted is or was supposed to be conversant, by the fame indictment, returnable before the same justices, before whom he is indicted or appealed at a certain day, containing the space of three months from the date of the last writ, where the counties be holden from month to month, and where the counties be holden from fix weeks to fix weeks, the space of four months, or the day of the return of the said writ, by which writ of second capias, the sheriff shall be commanded to take him which is so indicted or appealed by his body, if he can be found within his bailiwick; and if he cannot be found within his bailiwick, to be advertised by public proclamation in two counties before the return of the said writ, that he which is so indicted or appealed shall appear before the said justices, &c. at the day contained in the said writ, to answer, &c. after which writ so awarded and returned, if he which is so indicted or appealed, come not at the day of such writ returned, the exequency shall be awarded; and that every exequency and outlawry otherwise awarded or pronounced shall be holden for none and void.
But it is expressly provided, "That the above recited statute concerning process to be made before the King in his bench fland in force, and that this present statute shall not extend to indictments or appeals taken within the county of Chiltern; and if any person shall be indicted or appealed of felony or treason, and at the time of the same felony or treason superseded, was within the county whereof the indictment or appeal was mentioned, the like process to be made against them as was used before."

And it is further enacted by 10 Hen. 6. cap. 6, "That such second capias as is required by 8 Hen. 6. cap. 10, shall be awarded upon indictments or appeals removed into the King's Bench, or elsewhere, by certiorari or otherwise."

And by the 31 Eliz. cap. 3, it is enacted, "That in every action personal, where any writ of exigent shall be awarded out of any court, one writ of proclamation shall be awarded and made out of the same court having day of teft and return, as the said writ of exigent shall have directed, and delivered of record to the sheriff of the county where the defendant, at the time of the exigent so awarded, shall be dwelling; which writ of proclamation shall contain the effect of the same action: And that the sheriff of the county, unto whom such writ of proclamation shall have been delivered, shall make three proclamations in this form following, and not otherwise; that is to say, of the same proclamation in the open county-court, and one of the other of the same proclamations to be made at the general quarter-feelions of the peace in those parts where the defendant at the time of the exigent awarded shall be dwelling; and one other of the same proclamations to be made one month at the least before the quintus exaltus by virtue of the said writ of exigent, at or near the most usual door of the church or chapel of that town or parish where the defendant shall be dwelling at the time of the exigent so awarded; and if the defendant shall be dwelling out of any parish, then in such place as aforesaid, of the parish in the county, and next adjoining to the place of the defendant's dwelling, and upon a Sunday after divine service and sermon, if any sermon there be; and if no sermon there be, then forthwith after divine service and sermon, and he be also named under an alias dinitus of another, it hath been adjudged, that there is no need of any capias, with a command for proclamation according to 8 Hen. 6. because that which comes under the alias dinitus is no way traversable nor material: Also if a defendant be named of B. and late of C. there is no need of any capias to the sheriff of the county wherein C. lies; because that it appears, that the defendant is at present conversant at B. but if a defendant be named of no certain place at present, but only late of B. and late of C. and late of D. &c. being all of them in counts differed from that in which the prosecution is commenced, a capias shall go to the sheriff of every one of those counties. 2 Hawt. P. C. 304-5. 2 Hall's Hist. P. C. 159-6.

On a writ of error to reverse an outlawry upon the statute of 5 Eliz. of perjury, the first error alleged was, "That the said statute was enacted by the name of N. L. de parochia de Aligatre, and not from what county it was taken for that a county court was held 23 Feb. and the next county court was held 23 March following, so as there were not twenty-eight days between these two county courts, so as there ought to be by law, exclusive and not inclusive. And for the first cause it was alleged, that it was objected to be well enough, because Adalgarus was in the margin, for the parishes should be intended to refer thereto; but because an indictment shall not be taken for an intention, and because the county in the margin shall be referred to the place where the offence was committed, and not to the indictment of the party; and by the statute of 8 Hen. 6. there ought to be the addition of the place and county where the party indicted inhabited; the same thing was held to be ill, and reversed, as the second cause also, it was held to be erroneous; but Tufried field, that ought to be affidged for error in fact, for it might be leap-year, and then it is good, and that matter illusible, Cro. Ten. 167. Lezlee's case."

And exigent facias be delivered to the sheriff, and there are but two county-days before the return, and the sheriff return the first and second exaltus, &c. non comperit, and that there were no more county days between the delivery of the writ to him and the day of the return, there may issue a special exigent facias with an allecato comitatus, if it be prayed after the return, and before any new county-day be past; but if any county-day be past between the lat of the former county-days and the return, no exigent facias shall issue with an allecato comitatus but an exigent facias de novo; for the demand of the party must be at five county-courts successively held one after another, but the second exaltus the offender render himself, and his mainprize, and at the day of the return make default, n exigent facias with an allecato comitatus shall issue, because three county-days intervened, but a new exigent and capias against the bail. 2 Hall's Hist. P. C. 201-2.

"That if such an outlawry be laid, and the act ushers, if it be an outlawry with a venality, and the demand of the party be at four county-courts successively held one after another, and the second exaltus the offender render himself, and his mainprize, and at the day of the return make default, such an exigent facias with an allecato comitatus begins, but if an allecato Huting comes, they shall proceed without omitting any Huting. Palm. 287. 2 Lain. 14. 2 Hall. Hist. P. C. 202."

4. What the party must do in order to intitle him to reversal: and the effects and consequences of a reversal.

Regularly in all outlawries, as well personal as criminal, the party in order to reverse the same was to appeal in person, and could not appear by attorney. Lea. 22.

But now by the 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 18. for it more easy and speedy revering of outlawries in the court of King's Bench, it is enacted, "That from and after the first day of Eastern term thence ensuing, no person perfons whatsoever, who are or shall be outlawed in the said court for any cause, matter or thing whatsoever (treason and felony only excepted,) shall be compelled to come in person into or appear in person in the said court to reverse such outlawry, but shall or may appear by a torney and reverse the same without bail in all cases where special bail shall be ordered by the court."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, "That if any person or persons outlawed, or hereafter to be outlawed, in the said court, (other than for treason,) shall from and after the said first day of Eastern term be taken and arrested upon any cappias ulcutorum of the said court, it shall and may be lawful to and the sheriff or sheriffs, who hath or shall have taken an arrested such person and persons, in all cases where special bail is not required by the said court, to take a attorney's engangement under his hand to appear for the same, and to take the same, and to deliver the same, and to discharged from the sheriff or sheriffs, and therupon to discharge the said defendant and defendants from such arrest, and in those cases where special bail is required by the said court, the said sheriff and sheriffs shall and may take security of the same defendant or defendants by bond, with one or more sufficient security or securities, in the penalty of double the said for which special bail is required, and no more, for his or her appearance by attorney in the said court at the court, when no other perilous thing shall be required by the said court; and after such bond taken to discharge the said defendant and de defendants from the said arrest.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, "That if any perilous or outlawed as aforesaid, and taken by a bail for arrestment, for the payment of the return of the said writ to give security as aforesaid, in cases where special bail is required, so as he or they are committed to gaol for default thereof, that whenever the said prisoner or prisoners shall find sufficient security to the sheriff or sheriffs, in whole custody he or they had any lands shall never be released by writ of said court, at some return in the term then next follow-ning, to reverse the said outlawry or outlawries, and to do and perform such other thing and things as shall be required by the said court, it shall and may be lawful to and for the sheriff and sheriffs, after such security taken, to discharge and set at liberty the said prisoner and prisoners for the same; any law or usage to the contrary now notwithstanding." It hath been held, that if the party outlawed comes in by capi corporis, he shall not be admitted to reverse the outlawry without appearing in person, as in such case be ordered in 1 Hen. 6, cap. 9, 2 Hen. 6, cap. 10. But with the sheriff for his appearance, upon the return of the capi corporis and for doing what the court shall order.

2 Salk. 496.

By Wilm. 1. cap. 9. it is expressly provided, that those who are outlawed, have abjured the realm, and should be detained in perpetuity; which is the order of the court, always held, that the court of King's Bench may in thier determination, in special cases, bail a person upon an oulawry of felony; as where he pleads, that he is not of the same name, and therefore not the same person with him that was outlawed, or alleges any other error in the court in his arrestment. For by the 3 Eliz. cap. 3. sect. 3. it is enacted, "That before any allowance of any writ of error, or revering of any outlawry be had by plea, or otherwise, through or by want of any proclamation to be had or made according to the form of this statute, the defendant and defendants in the original action shall put in bail, not only to appear and answer to the plaintiff in the former suit in a new action to be commenced by the said plaintiff for the cause mentioned in the first action, but also to satisfy the condemnation, if the plaintiff shall begin his suit before the end of two terms next after the allowing the writ of arrest in the said suit of the said outlawry.

A. who was a foreign merchant and never in England, was outlawed at the suit of B., in an action on several promises for goods sold and delivered; and upon a special sapias ulitatum a bill and other effects belonging to A.
were seised, as forfeited upon this outlawry; and it was alleged, that this outlawry may be vacated, and restitution awarded, upon affidavits produced and read, that the de-defendant was never infra legem, i.e. that he never was in England, and therefore could not be outlawed, because that was putting him extra legem. Sed per curiam; This outlawry shall not be vacated upon such affidavits, but there came an error, where he was compelled to do, and thereupon to put in bail to the ac-ction in which he was outlawed according to the new statute of 4 & 5 W. & M. and then the plaintiff confented to the reversal of the outlawry. 3 Car. 459.

Matthews v. Erbe.

H. was outlawed in two actions, one was for 10l. the other for 40l. and upon revering the outlawry the court took special bail for the first, and an appearance for the other, upon the statute 4th & 5th W. & M. and the recognization was taken pursuant to 31 Eliz. 2 Salk. 496.

It is clearly agreed, that an attainer of felony of a person by a writ of capias ulitatum is a legal judgment of error, without a fores facias against all the tenants and lords mediate and immediate; but it is fetted, that such fores facias is not necessary in the case of high treason.

The law is the same in civil cases; and therefore if an outlawry in a personal action be revered, the original

Trespass for taking and detaining his beasts till he made a fine; the action was laid in Sufax; the defendant pleads, that the caufe of action did not arcurne within five years before fuing of the writ. The plaintiff replies, that he was brought as aforesaid, and was at a place in London, intending when the defendant had appeared to have declared for this trespass; and that the defendant was outlawed in London; and that within fuch a time after the reveref of the outlawry he declared here; the defendant demurred; and for the defendant it was infiued, that the suit was laid in London, where the defendant in this action declare in another county, tho' the caufe of action be tranfitory; but upon information by the prothonotaries that the course of the court is, that altho' the original be laid in London for expediting the outlawry, yet when the defendant comes in, the plaintiff may declare againft him in any other county, or the action be local or tranfitory; and the statute 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16. gives to plaintiffs generally a power to commence a new fuit within the year after the outlawry reverfed; and that he may do this in cace to warrant his declaration within the course of the court; and judgment was given for the plaintiff. 2 Lev. 245. Whitson v. Huthnurd.

It hath been adjudged, that if the King grant over the lands of a person outlawed for treason or felony, and afterwards the outlawry be reverfed, the party may enter on the patentee, and need neither to sue a petition to the King nor a fores facias against the patentee. 1 Med. 188.

If the goods of a person outlawed are fold by the sheriff upon a capias ulitatum, and after the outlawry is revered by writ of error, he shall be reftored to the goods themselves; because the Sheriff was not compellable to fell these goods, but only to keep them to the life of the King.

If an adowfon come to the King by forfeiture upon a outlawy, and, the church becoming void, the King pre-ents, and then the outlawry is revered; yet the King shall enjoy that presentment, because the presentment is made in the name of the King as the profit of the adowfon.

But if the church be void at the time of the outlawy, and the presentment is thereby forfeit as a chattel principally and dlintinct of itself, there, upon the reveref of the outlawy, the party shall be reftored to the prezentname, Cru. Eliz. 170. accorded for curiam.

If a termor being outlawed for felony grants over his term, and after the outlawy is revered, the grantee may have trefpas for the profits taken between the reveref of the outlawy and the aflignment; for by the reveref it is as if no outlawy had been, and there is no record of it.

It is said, that if a man be outlawed in the King's no reflitution; the reason whereof is, for that the court of King's Bench cannot send a writ to the Treasurer; and the court of Exchequer have no record before them to issue out a warrant for refutation. 5 Med. 61.

It is contrary to Chancery, that if A. being possessor of several houses for a long term for years, mortgages the same, and is outlawed for high treason, upon which those houses are feised into the King's hands, and the same granted for valuable consideration to J. S. who likewise gets an assignment of the mortgage; that yet the receiver of the mortgage, or J. S., may feise into the King's hands; and that it was undoubtedly so as to a freehold or inheritance, and he saw no substantial difference in the case of a leasehold. 2 Vern. 312. Oyer of a deed, Is when a man brings an action upon a deed, bond, &c. and the defendant appears and prays that he may hear the bond, &c. wherewith he is charged; and the same shall be allowed him. And he is not bound to plead till he has it, paying for the copy of it. L. P. R. tit. Oyer of a deed, &c. To demand oyer of a deed of obligation, is not only for the defendant's attorney to define the plaintiff's attorney to read the obligation to him, as the word seems only to import, or to have a sight of it, but that he may have a copy of it, that his client may confide by it what to plead to the action said. Ibid.

Upon formerly all demands of oyer were in court, as it is now in cases of appeals; but now it is demanded and granted between the attorneys, and where there ought to be oyer, one is not bound to plead without it; and if one attorney in time demand oyer of the other, and the other demands it, to that he may take it, it is what the former attorney may not be expected, to make a mortgage demand, and a giving of oyer; for if attorneys are admitted so to do, they will fet forth the matter falsly; though which could not enframe the other side, because they may produce the right writ, &c. and have it enter, yet it would be very tedious and inconvenient; as if a deed be pleaded, it remains in court all that term, yet the plaintiff may not be able to take oyer of it without leave of court, or of the attorney; and the very form of pleading it must be upon demand; an oyer of writ is in order to object to it. Per Pocwall J. Mod. 28. Mich. 2 Ann. B. R. Longvill. v. Hundred of Thirlwely.

Pallium. Is in many places taken for the silk with which garments were made: "Tis a word often mentioned in our old historians, but little understood at this time. Durandus, in his Rationale, tells us, that it is made of white wools, and dyed every year on the feast-day of their saint, offer two white lambs on the altar of their church, whilist they sing Agnus Dei in a solemn Mass; which lambs are afterwards taken by two of the canons of the Lateran Church, and by them given to the pope's sub-deacons, who put them to pasture till the following year, then they are burned, and the pall is made with their wool mixed with other white wool. "Tis a garment of three fingers breadth, cut round, that it may cover the shoulders: It hath two fringes on each side, before and behind; that on the right side is single, but that on the left is double. It hath likewise four fringes of the right and left, before and behind; and 'tis fastened with three pins made of gold, whose heads are spirally. The pall then made is carried to the Lateran Church, and there placed on the high altar by the deacons of that church on the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul: And after the usual watching, "tis carried away in the night, and delivered to the sub-deacons, who lay it up very safe. And because it was taken from the body of St. Peter, it signifies the plenitude of ecclesiastical power, and therefore it was the prerogative of popes, who pretend to be the immediate successors of that saint, to invest other prelates with it, which at first was always done by the but at Rome; but at present, by procuration, in other places in this form, viz. Inflanter, Infantis, Infantis in confessioni a jamno pontifice spectatum. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Palta. (Pallia, mentioned in flat. 25 H. 8. 20.) Are veletures made of lamb's wool, in breadth not exceeding three fingers; and having two labels hanging down before and behind, which the pope gives or sends to archbishops and metropolitan, who wear them about their necks at the altar, above their ornaments. The pall was first given to the bishop of Offilia, by pope Marcus the Second, anno 336. And the preface to an ancient fynod here-mentioned, is in the words of Odo, and Cardinal Canterbury, prefided, begins thus, —Ego Odo humilis & extrumen, divina largitio Clementis, alim præfûlû & pallisti honore diiatus, &. 6 E. Alfo.
Alfred is enabled by 3 Car. 1. cap. 2. 4 That if any person under the obedience of the King shall go, or shall convey or fend, or cause to be fent or conveyed, any part of the King's dominions into any parts beyond the seas, out of the King's dominions, to the fide of any rebel, or to the forces of any rebel, or trained up in any priory, abbey, nunnery, popish university, college or school, or house of jutes, priests or in a private popish family, and shall be there by any popish person infrufed, perfuaded or strengthened in the popish religion, in any fort to profec the fame, or difaffemblies, or fends, or car fends, or fent any thing towards the maintenance of any person fgoing or fent; and trained and infrufed as aforefaid, or under the colour of any charity, towards the relief of any priory, £t. or religious house whatsoever; every person fending, &c. any fuch person or thing, and every person paffing, conveying or conveying any part of the King's dominions to any foreigner, or fent any thing in law or equity, or be executer or administrator to any perfon, or capable of any legacy or deed of gift, or to bear any office within the realm; and shall forfeit all his goods and chattles, and shall forfeit all his hereditaries, offices and eflates of freehold, during his life.

In the construction of the 3 Jac. 1, it has been holl- den, that if E. T. being the King's ward of lands holden of the King by knight service in chief, die the King's ward, and it is found that A. and B. are his heirs and heirs, both of full age, and that A. in the life-time of her brother departed this realm contrary to this statute, and the King was profefled this act may then take no reftoriny in his own hands till thefe, according to the 1 Ef. take the oath of supremacy required on fuc- king out livery; for the words of the statute 3 Jac. 1. are, shall take no benefit by defent, &c. not that the party should not take by defent; and therefore the eflate does not veft absolutely in B. the fifer and next heir, but her right is to the King's rents and profits during the non- conformity of her filter, for which in cafe of common lands fie might enter; but in this cafe the King is inten- tered, and is not oblid to give livery to the heir, till fuch time as the oath of supremacy be taken. Hob. 73. 74. Le 59. Thedely's cafe.

So if such an heir being beyond Seas, shall bargain and fell his lands to a stranger, the bargain in fuch cafe will prevent the next of kin, and the bargainee may take the lands out of the hands of the next of kin, in cafe he had entered; for the eflate never vefted absolutely in fuch next of kin, but in fuch cafe the King may refufe to give livery to the heirs, if he refufes to take the name of the heir, except the heir himfelf appears and takes the oath of supremacy in his proper perfon. Hob. 74. per Herbart.

Lord Gerard, notwithstanding the eflate-tail limited to the heirs male of the body of Tho- mas Lord Gerard subsififying in Philip, alleging, that Lord Charles and his brother Philip, being fent abroad and educated in a popifh seminary, were fo utterly inca- pable of taking any eflate, that the had the right of entry in this right of G. Lord Gerard, notwithstanding the eflate-tail limited to the heirs male of the body of Tho- mas Lord Gerard subsififying in Philip, alleging, that Lord Charles and his brother Philip, being fent abroad and educated in a popifh seminary, were fo utterly inca- pable of taking any eflate, that the had the right of entry in this (by 1 Jac. 1. cap. 4. fet. 6. had fo far difabled Lord Charles to take the eflate by defent, that the recovery fuffered by him was void, and that the fame difability being ftili flill upon Philip, that there being no perfon in being who could take the eflate-tail, the Dutches as heir at law, must be intituled to take at præfent, as if the eflate were actually flipp'd. But it was refolved, that the words of the defent, being that the offender fhall be difabled as in refpect of himfelf only, and not in refpect of any of his heirs or pofterity to inherit, purfuà, &c. this qualifies and re- frains the difability; fo that the defent does not extend beyor the perfon offending, nor beyond the time of his non-conformity; so that the defent hath preferred in the offender an ability to inherit, &c. for the benefit of pofter- itvity; and this defent having made no application of the pro- priety to infubftance, and this being a difability particu- lated for a publick offence, the King is intituled to the nahty; and to create in the offender a total difability would be very in inconvenient, for in the cafe of an inte- ritude, it would be difficult to know when or in what manner the heir fhould take; it could not be in the hie- time of the conformation, but this defent is made void by the per- son living; and if there be a fon under no difability cannot take, it would be merely by conftitution to carry the eflate over his head for the benefit of a remainder- man, who was not intended to take as long as there was any ilue of a prior tenant in felf; and an heir can intitle himfelf only through his ancestors, and fuch as are inhe- ritable; that this is not like the cafe of a monk, for in times of popery he was civillly dead; the 3 Jac. 1. gives the pernuity of the profits, in cafes of difabilities, to the next of kin, that is not a popifh recufant; and R. Ow. was the next proteflant of kin; the 3 Car. 1. does not repeal the 1 Jac. 1. but was made to explain, amend and apply the cafe of the 1 Jac. 1. Herein it is evident that act was to arise; the 3 Car. 1. has provided, that it fhall be upon convicion, and expressly makes a for- feiture for life, and a refitution in cafe of conformity, in which the former act was flent; fo that if the former act were to be put in execution, under the explanation of 3 Car. 1. there being no conviction in the cafe, the Dutchefs could have no title, but the land on convicion would be forfeited for life, which must be to the King Hill. 12 Ann. in C. By the 3 Jac. 1. cap. 4. fett. 25. it is enabled, "Tha no perfon fhall bring from the feas, nor fhall print, bu or fell any popifh primers, ladies palfers, manuals, rof- ries, popifh catechifs, miiffifs, brevaires, portals, le- gends and lives of faints, containing superflitious matter printed or written in any language whatsoever, nor any other fuperflitious book, printed or written in the English tongue, on pain of forfeiting forty fhillings for every book, &c. and the book to be burnt."

By the 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 4. fett. 3. it is enabled, "That if any papifh, or peron making prefumption of the popifh religion, fhall be convict of keeping school, or taking upon himfelf the education of government, or taking upon himfelf the education of youth, in any place within the realm, or the dominions therunto belonging, they fhall be adjudg- ed to perpetual imprisonrment."

By the 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 4. it is enabled, "Tha if any popifh parent, in order to compel a proteftant child to a change of religion, fhall refuse to allow such child a fufficient maintenance, fuitable how the require- ability of fuch parent, and to the age and education of fuch child, the Lord Chancellor upon complaint may make fuch order therein as fhall be agreeable to the intent of the faid act."

By the 3 Jac. 1. cap. 5. fett. 18, 19, 20, 21. Popifh recufants convif are difabled to prefe to a church; and by the 1 W. & M. cap. 26. this difability is extended to perons refusing to make the declaration against popery mentioned in 30 Car. 3. And by the faid statute 1 W. & M. cap. 26. fett. 4. it is enabled, "That if the truftee, mortgagee or grante of any avoidance, whereby this statute was enacted, be in any perfon recufant conviction, he fhall be without giving notice in writing of the avoidance to the university, &c. within three months after the avoidance, he forfeits 500 l."

And by the 12 Ann. cap. 14. This difability is exten- ded to all perons making prefumption of the popifh religion, to which purpofe it is enabled, "That every papifh 3 perf. be upon making profession of the popish religion, &c., and every mortgagee, trustee or person any ways intrusted for such papist, &c., with or without writing, shall be disabled to prefer to any benefice, college or hospital, or to grant any avoidance of any benefice, prebend or collation, or that in all such cases the faculties shall prefert.

Also by force of the said statute, "The ordinary may under the declaration against transubstantiation to any related papist making a profession, and upon a refusal to take the same, the profession shall be void; also the faculties, upon any such preference or bill, shall be at law evidence against such person, in respect of such a profession, but not as to any other purpose."

In the construction of the 3 Jac. 1, the following insults, which are said to be likewise applicable to the 1 W. & M. and 12 Ann. have been held.

1 Harw. P. C. 32.

That where a preferment is pro bono, note verified in the inquisitor, by reason of the patron's being a papist recent at the time when the church became void, it shall be revolved again by his conferring himself to the same.

20 C. 57. b.

That such a person is only disabled to prefer, and not to administer as to all other purposes, and therefor he shall confirm the leaves of the incumbrance, &c. Const. 230.

That such a person, by being disabled to grant an advowson, is no way hindered from granting the advowson itself in fee, or for life or years, bona fide, and for good consideration.

That if an advowson or avoidance belonging to such person come into the King's hands by reason of an outlawry or conviction of recusancy, &c., the King, and the university, shall prefer. H. 126. Wisch. 7.

3 Mer. 372. 1 Jac. 20.

On the statute 12 Ann. the following was resolved by my Lord Chancellor Talbot, in the case of Mr. Brett, who was censured by the university of Oxford to a living belonging to Mr. Fitzherbert of Quorn,

In the 11 & 12 W. & M. it is enacted, 'That from and after the 29th day of September, which shall be in the year of our Lord 1700, any person shall not hold or be intrusted in the popish religion, or professing to the same, shall, not within six months after he or she shall attain the age of eighteen years, take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and also subscribe the declaration set down and exprested in an act of parliament made 30 Car. 2. intit. An act for the more effectual preventing the King's perfon and government, by disabling papists from fitting in either house of parliament, to be by him or her made, repeated or subscribed in the courts of Chancery or King's Bench, or quarter-seals of the county where such person shall reside; every such person shall in respect of him or herself only, and not to or in respect of any of his or her heirs or potties, be disabled or made incapable to inherit or take by descent, devise or limitation in possession, reversion or remainder, any lands, tenements or hereditaments within the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick upon Tweed, and that during the life of such person, or until he or she shall take the said oaths, and make, repeat and subscribe the said declaration in manner as aforesaid, the next of his kindred, which shall be a tenant, shall have and enjoy the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, without being accountable for the profits by him or her received during such enjoyment thereof as aforesaid; but in every and all such lands, tenements or hereditaments obtained from such papist, without a full and valuable consideration, grants of such favours, and right of presentation, nomination and onston, upon confidence only that such grantees will, at the request of such papists, prefer to such benefice or ecclesiastical livings clerks nominated by such papists, without a full and valuable consideration, grants of such favours, and right of presentation, nomination and onston, upon confidence only that such papists will, at the request of such papists, prefer to such benefice or ecclesiastical livings clerks nominated by such papists, who have been uncles or relations of such papists, and that the said papists, upon confidence only that such papists will, at the request of such papists, prefer to such benefice or ecclesiastical livings clerks nominated by such papists, who have been uncles or relations of such papists, and that the said papists, shall be free from such papists, and that the said papists, shall be free from

3 Of the disabilities of papists to purchase.

The statutes relating to estates conveyed by or to papists, and the disabilities they are under to take by purchase, &c., are the 11 & 12 W. 3. 3 Geo. 1. and 11 Geo. 2.

By the 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 4, it is enacted, "That from and after the 29th day of September, which shall be in the year of our Lord 1700, any person shall not hold or be intrusted in the popish religion, or professing to the same, shall, not within six months after he or she shall attain the age of eighteen years, take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and also subscribe the declaration set down and exprested in an act of parliament made 30 Car. 2. intit. By the 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 4, it is enacted, "That from and after the 29th day of September, which shall be in the year of our Lord 1700, any person shall not hold or be intrusted in the popish religion, or professing to the same, shall, not within six months after he or she shall attain the age of eighteen years, take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and also subscribe the declaration set down and exprested in an act of parliament made 30 Car. 2. intit. An act for the more effectual preventing the King's perfon and government, by disabling papists from fitting in either house of parliament, to be by him or her made, repeated or subscribed in the courts of Chancery or King's Bench, or quarter-seals of the county where such person shall reside; every such person shall in respect of him or herself only, and not to or in respect of any of his or her heirs or potties, be disabled or made incapable to inherit or take by descent, devise or limitation in possession, reversion or remainder, any lands, tenements or hereditaments within the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick upon Tweed, and that during the life of such person, or until he or she shall take the said oaths, and make, repeat and subscribe the said declaration in manner as aforesaid, the next of his kindred, which shall be a tenant, shall have and enjoy the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, without being accountable for the profits by him or her received during such enjoyment thereof as aforesaid; but in every and all such lands, tenements or hereditaments obtained from such papist, without a full and valuable consideration, grants of such favours, and right of presentation, nomination and onston, upon confidence only that such grantees will, at the request of such papists, prefer to such benefice or ecclesiastical livings clerks nominated by such papists, who have been uncles or relations of such papists, and that the said papists, shall be free from such papists, and that the said papists, shall be free from
By the 3 Geo. 1. cap. 18. reciting, that some doubts have arisen upon the act therein recited, as also upon one other act made and passed in the parliament held in the 11 & 12 W. 3. intituled, An act for the further preventing the growth of popery, and upon another act made in the 13 Geo. 1. for the due execution and effectuation of the statute made in the 1 & 2 W. 3. intituled, an act for making certain other publick offices, tenements, and other acts made against papists and papish recusants, touching the sale of the real estates of persons professing the popish religion, or incurring the disabilities and incapacities in the said acts mentioned, it is enacted, "That no sale for a full and valuable consideration of any manor, messuages, lands, tenements or hereditaments, of any interest therein by person or persons, being reputed owner or owners, or in the possession or receipt of the rents or profits thereof herebefore made, or hereafter to be made, or to for protestant purchaser and purchasers, and merely and only for the benefit of protestants, shall be avoided or impeached for or by reason, or upon pretence of any of the disabilities or incapacities in the said acts, or any of them contained, incurred or supposed to be incurred, by any of the persons making or joining in such sale, or by any other person or persons, from or through whom the title of such manors, &c. is derived, or supposed to be derived; unless the person buying or having, by law, the same title of such manors, messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, by reason of such disability or incapacity shall have recovered such manors, messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, with prejudice to any person or persons intitled to any of the disabilities or incapacities in the said acts, or any of them contained, incurred or supposed to be incurred, by any of the persons making or joining in such sale, or by any other person or persons; and it is enacted, that the said sale shall not pass to the use of any popish person or persons, unless the same be disallowed and declared a fraude against the publick peace and quiet and community, and that the person that is to buy the same, or any other person or persons that are the representatives, executors, or assigns of the person that is to buy, shall be and remain in full force as if this act had never been made.

And it is farther enacted by the authority aforesaid, "That from and after the 29th of September 1712. no manner of lands, tenements, hereditaments or any interest therein, or rent or profit thereout, shall pass, alter or change as the benefit of such in the possession of, or persons intitled to, any person or persons intitled by law, to the benefit or to the use or to the benefit or to the possession of such disability or incapacity, who now is or are in actual possession of, or shall have, precedent to the making of such record, been in quiet possession of any such manors, messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, b the space of two calendar months.

Provided always, and it is further enacted, That if any such person or persons, so conforming as aforesaid, afer such conformity return to or profess the popish religion, every such person and persons full shall for ever after wards be disabled from, and be incapable of, having or enjoying any benefit, privilege or advantage of this act and shall from thenceforth be liable to the same disabilies and incapacities as if he, she, or they, had not taken the said oaths and subscribed the declaration aforesaid.

Provided always, That nothing in this act contains shall extend to take away or prejudice the right of any person intitled to any remainder or reversion in any such manors, messuages, lands, tenements or hereditaments, in cafe such person shall pursue his or her right b some action or suit to be commenced within the space of twelve calendar months next after the precedent eftates, on which such remainder or reversion depends, and is expextant, shall be determined; or within twelve calendar months from and after the 29th of September 1738. If such precedent estate or estates be already deternined by the death or deaths of any person or persons whose whole death has been concealed from or not known the person intituled to such remainder or reversion, by cause of the having and holding the fee or of the private and clandestine manner at home, and shall possess such action or suit with due diligence.

On the first of these statutes there have been the following cases and resolutions.

"John Roger, Esq; being seized of several manors, lands, and all debts and legacies paid, which were legally done; whereafter was the lord reserved the decree, principally for this reason, that if the devise of the residue to the plaintiffs was good, they would in equity be intitled to pay off the antecedent debts and legacies, and when that was done, keep the estate, which would be a means of evading their trusts, and enabling a papit to take the estate contrary to the intention of the testator, and accordingly it was also resolved in this case, that a devise is a purchase within the meaning of this act."

The Earl of Dorsetwater was tenant in tail, with remainder in fee to himself, and intending to marry Sir John Webb's daughter, he by advice of counsel suffered a common recovery without declaring any use, it being intented, what he should thereby become tenant in fee, and be enabled to make a proper settlement; accordingly by indentures of lease and release he forfeited his estate to the use of himself for life; remainder to trustees for preserving contingent uses; remainder in tail successively to the fifth and other sons of the intended marriage, with remainders over; the marriage took effect, and there was issue a son and a daughter; the said Earl was attainted of high treason on account of the Pretender; the marriage was executed; and by an act made thereupon, all the forfeiting persons lands were vested in commissioners for the use of the publick; and it was expressly provided, that where the forfeiting peron was forfeited of an estate-tail at the time of the forfeitures, the same should be vested in the commissioners as an absolute fee, discharged of all remainders and reversions.

The commissioners of forfeitures, on a claim exhibited before them in the name of the said Earl's son, determined that the whole estate was in them on this foundation, that the Earl continued tenant in tail notwithstanding the recovery, and consequently nothing more than an estate for his use during his life, and for the use of himself for life; remainder to trustees for preserving contingent uses; remainder in tail successively to the fifth and other sons of the intended marriage, with remainders over; the marriage took effect, and there was issue a son and a daughter; the said Earl was attainted of high treason on account of the Pretender; the marriage was executed; and by an act made thereupon, all the forfeiting persons lands were vested in commissioners for the use of the publick; and it was expressly provided, that where the forfeiting peron was forfeited of an estate-tail at the time of the forfeitures, the same should be vested in the commissioners as an absolute fee, discharged of all remainders and reversions.

due arising by such sale she devised to her said granddaughter Frances, when she should attain her age of 21 years, or be married with the consent of the said traitfees, and soon after died. The said Frances, at the age of fifteen, was married to Flilius, according to the ceremo-nomy and ushe of the church of Kames, and a week af-fterwards, was married to Thomas Roper, and at the age of 18 she conform'd according to the directions of the foature; it was held, that she was within the first clause, and that a devise to a pa'ipit under the age of 18 years is good, if he conforms within six months after he comes to that age; and the age of 18 was a proper period by itself, as they were their own, whether they would conform or not; and the bill exhibited by the protestant heir was dismiifled with cost. 3 Bat. Ad. 757. Hill v.

utees, to the ufe of the traitfes and their heirs, in ufe for A. for life; reminders to the faid traitfes to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to the fifth and every other fon of A, and for default of fuch effe, in ufe for B, and his effe; A. was a papilt, and B. a protestant; B. exhibited his bill in Chancery, fuggelthirg, that A. was a papilt, and had no fon, and that therefore the traitfes might account to him for the rents and profits of the land, to make the heirs of B, and deand and hearing, this caufe before the Lord Macleiflidh, and afterwards by the Lord King, they both held, that though the truft to A. was void, he being a papilt, yet that notwithstanding, the legal effe was full in the traitfes, because they were traitfes not only for the papaints, but for the fettlement, to the fons of A. who were yet unborn; and as they were traitfes to preserve contingent remainders for fuch fons who might be papifts, they thought, that the effe should remain in the traitfes for that purpofe; and they held, that the heir at law was intituled to receive the profits during the life of A. as a truft unfidoed; but that B, the remainder, had no right to the death of A, without a fon capable of taking; and this decree was affirmed,

The caufe upon a special verdict in ejciement was:
Thomas Dorrel had one brother and four fifters, and being fed in fee by will 4 Decemb. 1750, devised the lands in quceton to traitfes, to the ufe of them and their heirs, in ufe for his fift, and every other fon in tail male; and for want of fuch effe, removed to his brother Arthur for life, remainder to his fift and every other fon in tail male; and for want of fuch effe, that there might be land and be fent to the fole and proper ufe and benefit of fuch eldelt and fift fon lawfully begotten, or to be begotten of John Dorrel, as shall not be heir at law and inferior to the faid John Dorrel, and the heirs of his body, and for default of fuch iffue by him, remainder to the third, and fourth and fift, and every other fon of the faid John Dorrel, and the heirs of their respective bodies. The traitfes, by a clause in the will, were impowered, by the rents and profits of the effe, or by mortgage and fale, to raise fo much moneys as would satisfy the traitfes's debs: Thomas and Arthur both died without effe, John Dorrel is living, and has feven fons: George the defendant, and all the fons of John Dorrel are papifts, and educated in the popift religion, except his younger fon, who is too young to be faid, as yet, to be of any religion; George Dorrel was under eighteen years of age when the limitation by the defevle fell upon him, but is now above eighteen years, and has not received his portion by virtue of 11 & 12 W. 3, and is married, has now two fons and a daughtcr, who, as well as for his wife, he has made a fettleinent of two lands;
the four fifters of Thomas Dorrel are lefl'ees of the plaintiff, as heirs at law; and the queation is, whether George the fohn of Arthur, or the heirs at law, be inititle to the fale. For the plaintiff, the heirs at law, it was urged, 1f, That George was not a pawnit, and that pa-plaintiffs who fall refeu, above six months after they arrive at the age of eighteen, to take the oaths of allegiance, are by the faid edufe disabled from purchafing; and therefore as a defevle is a purchafe, and be to hold Cor.
18, and by the Lords, in the caf of Roper and Rodiffe, confequently George Dorrel takes nothing by it. 2dly.
That the defevle was void for uncertainty, being to fuch effe and first fon of J. D. as shall not be heir at law nor any one cay fay who will be heir to J. D., in the ufe of the faid propertv in the fole and property, and veniens; and he who is to be heir is not to fale, for none but a fon who will not be heir can take, for both defevlements muft coincide. Hob. 29; Hardwicke Ch. J. in breaking the caufe faid, two objedions have been made to the defendant's title; 1f, That the limitation, under which the defendant baue to perform is void; 2dly: That the description to certain enough, yet by 11 & 12 W. 3, the defendant is disabled from taking the effeate, as being a papift; there feems at prefent to be good deal of weight in the first objedion, and yet it may possibly be reduced to a certainty, and if fo, may be made good; and it seems natural to imagine, that by the words of the will, the fettor intended the second fon of John Dorrel should take, and the rather, as the fettor had made the next limitation to the third, fourth and fifth fons, Gt. of the fain John Dorrel but if the second fon cannot take, yet it the third, &c. fons are well defcribed, the fitters of have taken place, and at prefent yet void, it cannot be ceffarily described. As to the fecoid objedion, I think myfelf bound by the determination of the house of Lords in the caufe of Roper and Rodiffe, that the word purchafe extends to a defevle, and therefore that a papift is in capable of taking an effeate by will; but yet, be the de-endant's title as it will, the plaintiff muft recover on his own ftrengct, and not on the weaknefs of the de-endant's title; and my greatest doubt is this; the def-here is to traitfes to the ufe of them and their heirs, and I think this would clearly be a defevle to the ufe of traitfes, though the clause of raffing' mofly by renfale, as it here appears; fo here it is a defevle to traitfes in ufe not only for the faid fon of John, but for all other his fons now living, one of which is to be found to be a papift; it has been faid indeed, that this dife being for the benefit of papifts, the ftrait trulst void; but the queation is, if the entire ftrait should be for the benefice of papifts, in the prefent caufe, a younger fon of John Dorrel may be able to take ought appears to the contrary; and therefore I think this latter part of the traitfes being lawful will support their legal effeate in the traitfes; and here he put the cafe fepa. Carrick v. Errington, and faid, that according to the folution in this caufe, the lands in question cannot be fale, because here it is a ftrait for a fon of John Dorrel, who was a papift, and well for other children yet unborn, so that the plai-tiffs have no title to recovery in this action, but have taken their remedy; for if they have any, it seems to by bill in equity againft the traitfes for an account the profits and extent, in the above-mention cafe, that the effeate could not refl in the remainder-main because he being then in by purchase, it could never was polluted of a long term for years, and made his will, and his lady, who was a papist, executrix thereunto. It was thought, and very well observed here, that the filing the disabling act 11 & 12 W. 3. the term vefted absolutely in her, and that this was not a purchase within that act; and he said, that a papist may be tenant in

It had been adjudged, that a papist may devolve to a pretended; in which case it was agreed, that where an actor died deafer of an estate of inheritance, it descends upon and vests in his heir, (though a papift) for the behalf of his children and the next Protestant akin has only a right to the perception of the profits during the non-uniformity of the heir. 3 Bac. Ab. 799. Mislum v.
Bringles, Puch. 1738. in C. B.
Upon the marriage of Mr. Paine with one Mrs. Gage, and in the county of Surrey were settled and conveyed the use of the husband and wife for their lives, and he life of the survivor of them; then to the use of the rift and every other son in tail, remaining to the right issues of the husband; the marriage took effect, and Mr.
Paine the husband died in the life-time of Mrs. Paine, without leaving issue, having first devolved all his lands to his wife. In 1739 Mrs. Paine married Mrs. Johnson, her real estate to the defendant, subject to a few legacies mentioned in her will, but lived and died a papist; but not being able to prove at law, the plaintiff Mr. Smith who had married Elizabeth Paine, heir at law to Mrs.
Paine, he and his wife filed their bill against the de defendant to set aside the marriage settlement that will Mr.
Paine the husband, under which Mrs. Paine claimed; and in particular prayed, that the defendant might dis over whether Mrs. Paine the wife, under whom he will aimed, was a papist or not. To which the defendant pleaded the statute of 11 & 12 W. 3. Upon arguing his plea it was insisted upon for the defendant, that it made no difference, whether Mrs. Paine was a papist or not; and his discovery of that fact, whether he is or not, can never be a forfeiture of his estate, because he ever had the right to sell it; so the case of a baffard who is nullius filius, and incapable of claiming any estate, he shall discover whether he is fo or not, for the same reason; so a perfon claiming under a bankrupt, whose goods are vested in the affignees of the commission of bankruptcy, for the benefit of creditors, must discover whether the perfon under whom he claims, was a bank rupt or not at the time of the claims, for none of the telese cases depend upon the same reason, and were no forfeitures, because the estates were never in them; so if Mrs. Paine was a papist, she was incapable of having the estate herself, and could not give it away; and there fore the defendant could never forfeit it, because the ef tate was never vested in him. From which point of opinion, that the defendant was not obliged to disco over whether Mrs. Paine was a papist or not; that there is no rule better established in this court, than that a man shall not be obliged to answer what may subject him to the penalty of an act of parliament; no perfon can doubt whether this act is not a penal law, and whether the clauses relating to papists are not disabilities or inca pacities, imposed by way of penalty upon all persons ex ercising that religion. It is objected, that this is not the case of a forfeiture, because the estate was never vested, and therefore cannot be devolved; yet it all falls un der the statute, for every man is subject to the disability to hold at all by act of parliament, is certainly as much a penalty as the forfeiture of an estate by a perfon who had a right to enjoy it before the forfeiture. That if a bill is brought against a perfon for a discovery, whether he is a papist or not, he is not bound to discover; and where is the difference between him and the perfon claiming under him; here is a disability imposed by par liament, by way of penalty, upon a particular set of men upon the account of their religion, and the discovery of that fact subjects him to a penalty; and this is not like the case of an alien or baffard, who are incapable by the general law of the land, because of their religion, before they had the estate; it is, as much is the great inconvenience that would follow, should this plea be disallowed; we should have nothing in this court but bills of discovery, whether such persons were papists or not, and nobody knows what confusion would follow; the plea must be allowed. 3 Bac. Ab.

Parcens in se, is that it seems, that anciently the right of pardon offences within certain drifts was claimed by the long grants from the Crown, or by prescription. But now by the 27 H. 8. cap. 24, sect. 1. it is enacted, that The no person or persons, of what estate or degree ever the the King shall have the whole and sole power and authority thereof, united and knit to the imperial crown of

Cor. Lit. 3, fol. 233.
It is laid down in the king, that the King may pardon any offence whatever, whether against the Common wealth Statute law, so far as the publick is concerned in it, for it is over, and consequently may prevent a popular action in a statute, by pardoning the offence before the suit is commenced; but it is feared, that he cannot wholly pardon it continues such, because书法 pardon would take away the only means of compelling redress of it; yet it is said, that such a pardon will save the party from any fine to the time of the pardon. Plato

Voeb. 333.
But it seems agreed, that the King can by no previous licence, pardon or dispensation make an offence dispensable which is made in fe as being either against the public law or in subversion of the public good as to be indestructible at common law; and that a grant of this kind, tending to encourage the doing of evil, which it is the chief end of government to prevent, is plainly against reason and the common good, and therefore void.

Dev. 73. 5 Co. 35. 12 Co. 29.

And hence it has been insisted, that the King's grant to the bishop of Salisbury and his successors, having the custody of a prison, that they shall be quiet from all escapes, which has been adjudged to be a good grant, is not law; as being but a single inference, and contrary to this rule; because a grant of this kind, tending to make a greater evil to be lawful, is a discharge of his negligence, is plainly against the common good.

2 Hawk. P. C. 389. 3 H. 7. 15. pl. 30.

But where a thing in its own nature lawful, is made unlawful by parliament, as the carrying bell-meal, &c., out of the realm, importing merchandise in foreign ships, selling wines beyond a certain price, or without a licence, multiplying gold, &c., coined money of a base alloy, &c., it was formerly taken as a general rule, that the King might dispense with it, as to a particular time or place, or person, so far as the public was concerned in it; unless such dispensation could not be attended with an inconsequence, and contrary to the public interest; the general benefit of the end for which the law was made; or as the licensing a particular person to import foreign cards or wines, &c., in which case it was commonly taken to be void; also, where a statute gives a particular interest or right of action to the party griev'd, as the statutes of mortmain, theft against maintenance, forfeiture entries, carrying difficulties out of the hundred, escape, &c., it has been always agreed, that no charter from the King can bar the right of the party grounded on such statute; also where a statute is express, that the King's charter against the purport of it, and with the clause of non obstante, shall be void; it seems that if any statute has been always generally agreed, that no such clause could dispense with it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 386, 390, and several authorities there cited.

It seems to be agreed, that no dispensation of any nature, except the statutes of mortmain, was of any force, without a clause of non obstante; neither is such clause of any efficacy against a statute, enacted by W. & M. eff. 2. cap. 2. That no dispensation by non obstante of or to any statute, or any part thereof, can be allowed; but that the same shall be held void, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute; but it is provided, that no charter, grant or pardon, granted under any other religion than the Protestant, will be allowed by that act, but that the same shall be and remain of the same force, and none other, as if the said act had never been made. 2 Hawk. P. C. 391.

The King can by no charter whatsoever bar any right of entry or action, or any legal interest or benefit before vested in the subject; and therefore it seems clear, that he cannot bar any action on a statute by the party griev'd, nor even a popular action commenced before his pardon, nor a recognition for the peace before it is forfeited.

Neither can the King pardon an appeal, except only where it is carried on at his suit, after a non suit; and therefore if a pardon attainted, on an appeal carried on as the suit of the party, get the King's pardon, he must sue for a feire facias against the appellant before the pardon shall be allowed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 392.

When a defendant appear on a feire facias, he may pay execution notwithstanding the pardon; but if the return find a feire facias, or two nolites, and the appellant appear not on demand; or if he return the appellant dead, the appellee shall be discharged; but some have held, that in this last case a feire facias shall go against the heir, and the death supersede it, 3 Hawk. P. C. 393.

But there is no need of any feire facias against the lord by eichers, because the pardon no way tends to rethe King shall take him to his grace, if it please him." 2 Hid. 316.

But it seems to be settled at this day, agreeably to the ancient Common law, in affirmation whereof this statute was made, that in such a case, or where one indicted of homicide set defendendo confesses the indictment, the party cannot be convicted unless the crown, as the Chancellor well of course make him a pardon without speaking to the King," and that by such pardon the forfeiture of goods may be saved; for these words, "If it shall please the King," shall be taken as spoken only by way of reverence to him, and not intended to make such a pardon diabolicum. But if the party be found to have lied, it is made a quare factum, if the pardon save the forfeiture of the flight, for that is not grounded on the homicide, but on the contempt of the law. 2 Hawk. P. C. 380, 381.

If an approver convict all the appellees, whether by battle or veridil, the King ex meritis justitia ought to pardon him as to his dues, and what wages he had earned from the time of the appeal to the time of the conviction. 3 cf. 139. 2 Hawk. P. C. 209. 2 H alf. Hilj. P. C. 233.

By the 4 or 5 W. 3 & M. cap. 8, it is enacted, "That if any person or persons out of prison shall commit any robbery, and afterwards discover, two or more who then had or afterwards shall commit any robbery, so as two or more of them shall be convicted, any such discoverer shall be intituled to a pardon for all robberies committed before the discovery, which shall bar an appeal." And by the 6 or 7 W. 3 & M. cap. 17, it is enacted, "That if any person or persons out of prison shall be guilty of clipping, forgery, counterfeiting, walking, filing, or otherwise diminishing the coin of this realm, and afterwards discover two or more who then had or afterwards shall commit any of the said crimes, so as two or more of them shall be convicted; any such discoverer shall be intituled to a pardon for all his crimes committed before the discovery." By the 10 & 11 W. 3, c. 23. (which excludes clergy from those who shall in any shop, warehouse or flable, privately steal any goods, &c. of the value of 5s. of thofe shop, &c. not broken open, and tho' no person be therein, or thall affit, hire or command any person to discovers offence.) 44 If any person or persons shall commit any burglary, house-breaking or felony, in feating of any horse or horses, or any money, wares or goods, from whom clergy is by that act taken away, and being out of prison shall discover two or more who then had or after shall commit any such felony, and shall be convicted thereof, and again, any such discoverer that he be intituled to a pardon for the felonies aforesaid committed before such discovery, &c." And by the 5 Ann. cap. 31, it is enacted, "That every person who shall be guilty of burglary, or of the felonious breaking and entering a house in the day-time, and after shall discover two, who shall have committed such felony, so as they be convicted, &c. shall have 40l. and a pardon of all felonies, except murder, &c."

It is laid down as a general rule, that wherever it appears by the recital of the pardon, that the King was misinformed, or not rightly apprized, both of the heinousness of the crime, and also how far the party stands convicted, it is allowed that the pardon was made upon a prejumption that it was gained from the King by imposition. Yel. 43, 47. Cro. Jac. 18, 34, 548. 2 Rot. H. 188. Dyer 352, pl. 26. Rym. 13. 1 Sid. 41. 3 Hif. 338.

And upon this ground it seems agreed, that if a man attainted of felony get a pardon, which doth not mention the crime, it is granted, and the pardon will be void. If it be held, that the pardon of a person convicted by verdict of felony is void, unless it recite the indictment and conviction; allo it hath been questioned, if the pardon of a person barely indicted of felony be good, without mentioning the indictment; but it hath been adjudged, that such a pardon is void on the words the words free indebitum free

2 Hawk. P. C. 382-3.

It hath been held, that anciently a pardon of all felonies, included all treasons as well as felonies; and it seems to be taken for granted in many books, that such a general pardon is even at this day pleading to any felony, except murder and rape, and piracy; and that the only reason why it may not also be pleaded in murder and rape is, because 13 Rich. 2. requires an express mention of them; and that the only reason why it is not pleaded in rape is, because it is the subject of the Statute of Attainder. 52 Haw. P. C. 383-4. 1 Hal. Hilj. P. C. 466. 2 Hal. Hilj. P. C. 45.

By the 37 Ed. 3. cap. 2. it is enacted, "That in every pardon of felony granted at any man's suggestion, the name of him who makes it, shall be comprised; and if any other man shall be attaindered, and the charter shall be alleged, shall inure of the same suggestion, and if they find it untrue, shall disallow the charter. No pardon of felony shall be carried beyond the express purport of it; and therefore if the King, reciting an attainder of robbery, pardon the execution, he thereby neither pardons the felony itself, nor any other consequence of it besides the execution. 6 & 7 Ed. 3. Hawk. P. C. 384.

It is enacted by 2 Ed. 3. cap. 2. that charters of pardon of manumissions shall not be granted but where the King has a rule of law, oath, that is, a new man layereth another in his own defence, or by misfortune; neither is there any precedent in the Register of the pardon of any other homicide, but such as is done either in self-defence or by misadventure, or by infants or madmen, and from hence some have disputted the King's power o the word pardon, and the nature of the pardon of a man疮 in the general tenor of the books, and also to the plain text of 13 Ric. 2. cap. 1. which reciting, that treasons murder, and rape, had been frequently committed, cause pardons had been easily granted in such cases, or dialect. That no pardon shall be allowed for murder or for the death of a man slain by, in avert, or in one of a woman, unless the said murder be, &c. be specifed in the same charter; and as charter of the death of a man be alleged before any juror; in which it is not specified that the party was mutinied or slain by avert, or malice preponted, it is specifed, that in the voyage where the dead was slain, if he were murdered or slain by avert, &c. and if they find that he was murdered or slain by avert, &c. the charter shall be disallowed. Hawk. P. C. 385-6. and several authorities there cited.

It hath been formerly often adjudged, that murder might be pardoned under the general description of a fit murder, and a publica murder, lifting out of the rule of 4 W. & M. justf. 2. cap. 2. it is declared, that no dispension by non offensae of or to any statute shall be allowe 1 Sid. 366. 2 Bow. 238. Keiling 24. 2 Med. 37. But pardons of manumissions remain as they were: Common law; and therefore the pardon of the felon's killing of 7. 5. may be pleaded to an indictment of manumission in killing him; but where such a pardon is pleaded to a coroner's inquest of manumission, the court may refuse to allow it, till the fact be found manumitted by a jury directed by a higher court. 2 Kebl. 303, 415. Keiling 24. 2 Jem. 56.

If a general act expressly pardon petit treason, and except other treasons, it cannot be avoided by incurring a pernicious guilty of petit treason for murder only, omitting it word prudtoriae; for the less offense being included in the greater is pardoned by the pardon of it; and these are such an exception of murder is to be intended, such murder only as is specially fae called, and doth amount to petit treason. Dyer 50. pl. 4. 235. pl. 14. 6 Gra.

Neither doth the exception of murder in a general act of pardon of all felonies extend to feo de feo; for his offence be of a kind that is, murder in common speech, according to which statutes are commonly ex pounded, it is generally underwritten or preceded with prima facie to import the murder of another. 1 Lev. 8, 120. 1 Sid. 50. 1 Kebl. 66, 548.

Parity Clerks. In every parish the parson, vicar, &c.

hath a parson clerk under him, who is the lowest officer of the church. There were formerly clerks in orders, and their baniets at first was to officiate at the altar, for which they have a competent maintenance by offerings;

but now they are laymen, and have certain fees with the parson, on churifications, marriages, burial, &c. besides known to be of honest conversation, sufficient for their reading, writing, &c., and be well skilled in reprobate divine learning, reading of lectionary, reading of lectionary for psalmers, &c. And in the large parishes of London, they have some of them deputies under them for the dispachant of the baniets of their places, which are more gainful than common recclary. Ibid. The law books upon and such a park differs from a chase or warren, in that it must be inclosed, and may not lie open; for if it do, that is a good cause of feizeur into the hands of the King, Parliament. (Parlamentum). Is deduced from the French, vni. parler, to speak, and ment, ment, the mind; and the writ which summons it, says, Ad confellandum, &c. de ardira Regni negotii. It is indeed a solemn conference of all the states of the kingdom communioned together by the King's only authority, to treat of the weighty affairs of the realm. The ancient Britons had no such assemblies; for Taciatus says, That although Othin Regibus pareábant, nunc per principes solabimur & studia trahamur; ne aliud adventus buildimur; gentes praebemus alligam quaedam in commune non consulant; turma, bardos et tribus profarum, communi pariter atque

William the Conqueror divided this land among his followers in such manner, that every one of them should hold their lands of him in capite; and they again distributed part thereof among their friends and servants; who for the same were bound to do them service in their houses. The chief of these were called Baron, who thrice every year assembled at the King's court viz. at Christchurch, Ely, and Whitby; among whom the King was wont to come in his royal robes, and his Crown on his head, to consult about the publick af-airs of the kingdom. But this ancient custom, as well as the three estates of the realm, viz. the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons, for the debate of matters touching the commonwealth, especially in

3. Of the original and antiquity of parliaments.
To trace out exactly the original and antiquity of the supreme court of parliament, whole transcendent jurdiction, says my Lord Coke, is such, that it maketh, large, and diminisheth, abrogateth, repealeth and re-viveth laws, statutes, acts and ordinances concerning our free and personal liberty, as well sense, as civil, maritime, maritime, &c. And to point out the several aerations it met with, and how it came to be modelled; the shape we see it at this day, seems indeed, if not in possible, a work of the greatest difficulty; but this difficulty is not to be attributed to any peculiar defect in or constitution, but only to time, the loss decreed, and the progress of consummation, especially in the Barons wars; nor have the prejudices and different views, which conducted the pens of those who wrote on this subject, helped little to obscure and perplex the matter. Co. Lit. 111.
In fol. 36.
However, it appears by those lights which we have received, and from the inquiries and revisions of so beft antiquaries, that there hath always been sometiml of the nature of a parliamentary assembly, as ancient thing any which we know of our constitution, in what the people feared the prince in the legislative power;
this assembly was sometimes called Magnates regni, regi nobles, priferes & fetes regis, uniconigii regii

In the Saxon times, the general court of the whole kingdom, or the Witan-gemot, to which the Earls town, and appeared on the King's summunum; this court met once a

Upon the coming of William the Conqueror, every person found out in arms against him forfeited his whole estate, in which he placed his Norman; and he compelled all those, who were not in arms against him, to take out patents of their lands to hold of himself; and in order to the making a general survey of the whole kingdom, which was called Domesday, and changed the nature of the tenures, which in the Saxon times were al-lodial, into feudal, to be holden of himself by knight-service; and by this means made the property of their estates depend on their allegiance to him: and hence it follows, that all lands are holden mediately or immediately from the Crown. See Wright's Tenures.
The baronies and feudoms were anciently created by granting to many knights fees, viz. If the grant consisted of 13., knights fees, the party was compellable to hold for baronum; and he that had twenty knights fees, to hold for baronum. But in order to the making a general survey of the whole kingdom, which was called Domesday, and changed the nature of the tenures, which in the Saxon times were al-
lodial, into feudal, to be holden of himself by knight-
service; and by this means made the property of their estates depend on their allegiance to him: and hence it follows, that all lands are holden mediately or immediately from the Crown. See Wright's Tenures.
Alto William the Conqueror erected a new court, called Curia or Aula Regii, composed of his principal officers of state; to thefe, when any matter of moment was in agiatization, as levying a new war, raising an echeage, &c., were called lord of the barons, and chief persons who held in curia, and they transferred all business civil and military, and also relating to the revenue, and were the great court-baron of the kingdom; where every thing done therein, was found to be done per concilium regni; it was in the election of the King to summons the barons and other freemen to plead to this court, and such attendance being deemed a burden in former days, they barons were seldom called, especially when they rove that grandeur as to make such a concourse formidable to the King. See Middex. cap. 2. 3.
In this great assembly of parliament, it seems plain, looked upon by the commonwealths of England were no part; and therefore the tenants in ancient cemenne, who used to maintain the King's table, and also those who held by burgage tenure, as by certain court, setting out ships in the navy, &c. according to the duty of their parents, were wont, upon any extraordinary occasion, besides the duty of the tenure, to grant an aid to the King, which was demanded of them by the justices itinerant; and which, if they refused to pay, the King, at the end of the expedition might, with the advice and consent of his council, call them to a tenant of all their estate, but not to more; for none could be taxed at pleasure but villains, and those who held by the King. Middex 491. See Ryly 516.
The great controversy, with respect to the original and antiquity of parliament, relates chiefly to the power and full formation of a house of commons after the conquest.
Some have affected that they have always been part of the kingdom, and are therefore of the same nature by their representatives, have always composed a part of that august assembly; others hold, that the house of common was formed 49 Hen. 3. when the King had given an overreach, at the battle of Evesham, to Simon Munster, Earl of Leicesters, and the barons that adhered

A rent afgiffed in lieu of dower may be by parol without deed, though it be a freehold created de novo: And though a rent lies in grant, because this is not properly a grant, but an appointment. 12 Med. 201. v. Trin. 10 W. 3. Saunders v. Owen. Letters for years surrendered to the lefser by parol referring rent; adjudged, this was a good reformation up on the contract, and that an action of debt would lie for the rent after the first day of payment incurred, though the reformation was by way of contract, and without any deed. 3 Salk. 512. pl. 7.

If one has a contract by parol, he may authorize another to do some thing upon it by parol, and when that is done, it is all one as if he had done it himself; per Holt Ch. J. at Nike prius. 12 Med. 564. Mich. 1701. Amos. An insuance was made from Archangel to the Downs, and from the Downs to Leghorn, but there was a parol agreement at the same time, that the policy should not commence till the ship came to such a place, and it was held, that the parol agreement should avoid (or defeat) the writing; cited per Holt Ch. Deputation of an office is in it's own nature grantable by parol, and therefore though it should happen to be granted by writing, yet since it is in itself grantable by parol, it may be revoked by parol. 10 Med. 74. Hill. 10 Ann. B. R. in the case of The Queen v. Sutton.

Parol agreements of the right of justice of peace may, by word of mouth, authorize one to arrest another who is guilty of a breach of the peace in his presence, &c. Dal. 117.

Parol damarum, is a privilege allowed to an infant, who is sued concerning lands which came to him by descent; and the court thereupon will give for judgement, quibit, upon the evidence, whether the infant comes to the age of twenty-one years. And where the age is granted on parol damarum, the writ doth not abate, but the plea is put fine diis, until the infant is of full age; and then there shall be a re-fummons. 2 Eild. Abr. 280. 2 Inf. 256. Roif. Entr. 363. The granting of a parol damarum is in favor of an infant, and for his benefit, that he may not be prejudiced in his right for want of well knowing his estate, &c. And if his ancestor dies seised, and the lands depend to him, and he enters and takes the profits, it would be a prejudice to the infant to lose the possession which he hath; so that in that case it shall lay until his age. 6 Rep. 3. The tenant in an action, cannot make a demand, until the infant demandant comes of age; this is expressly provided for by 6 Ed. 1. cap. 2. And it would damage the infant, if he should be so delayed upon an action brought by him, where an estate is defended to him from his ancestor. 6 Rep. 3. 5.

In parol damarum when it may be proved, that two are voided, to the end of null parol damarum for the nonage of the one; it shall be for the other also. 45 Ed. 3. 23. See Age piet.

Parturens. (Parturium,) Signifies the rector of a church.

He is called parjue, because of his office; for the profits of the church were to maintain magnam perjunea or rather, because he is bound by virtue of his office in perjuria perjuneas. Deo. Cowell, edit. 1727. See Socj categoria. courts, &c.

Partunage, (Partun, partuni,) Is sometimes taken to be a church, and sometimes for the benefice itself. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Partunage, or Rittery, Is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithe, and other oblations of the people, separated or dedicated to God in any congregation, for the service of his church there, and for maintenance of his clergy, that the charge of the same is committed. Spelm. De non tenerasque Eccles. 2.

Parson impotenture, (Perjima impotentera,) Is he that is in possession of a church, whether a proprietor, or not appropriate. In the New Book of Entries, perjuma seems to be the patron, or he that hath right to give the benefice, by reason that before the lateteren Council, he had right to the tithes, in respect of his liberty used in the erecting and endowing the church, quasi solitaris perjuna ecclesie et perjima impotentera, to be he to whom the benefice is given in the patron's right, for we may read in the Register Judicial, perjima impotentera, for the rector of a benefice pretentive, and not appropriate. Int. 2 Par. 405. 1632. A deed and chapter be perjima impotentera of a benefice appropriated unto them; and sol. 221. expressly fresh. That perjima impotentera is he that is included, and is in possession of a benefice. So that perjima seems to be termed impotentera, in respect of the possession that hath of the benefice or rectorly, be it appropriated, or by the act of another. C. 3 Rich. 30. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Parson mortall. The rector of a church instituted, and inducted for his own life, was called perjuna mortalis and any collegiate or convivial body, to whom the church was for ever appropriated, were called perjima mortalis. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Parties, Are those which are named in a deed a fine, as parties to it; as those that levy the fine, and whom the fine is levied: So they that make any deed and to whom it is made, are called parties to a deed. Cowell, edit. 1727. See 16 Fin. Abr. tit. Party.

Partition, (Partitio,) Is a division of land, or by custom, among coheirs or part owners, where there are two at least; and this partition made four ways, whereof three are by agreement, a fourth by compulsion. The first partition by agreement is, when they themselves divide the land equally into many parts as they are coparceners, and each to one part of each, according to order. The second when they chuse certain of their friends to make the division for them. The third is, by drawing lots thus: Having first divided the land into as many parts as the be parcorners, they write every part severally in a dinner scroll, and wrapping it up, throw each of them into hat, bason or such thing, out of which each person draws a piece according to their seniority, and so the lot is feverally allotted. The fourth partition, which is by compulsion, when one or more of the parcorners, by reason of the refusal of some other, fouls out a writ a partition, facundito, by force whereof they shall be compelled to part. In Kent, where the land is not divided of two in height, from the same fusciner, to divide. In Latin it is called bercificer. Partition also may be made by joint-tentants, or tenants common by assent, by deed, or by writ. 1. 324. 32 H. 8. 31. 9. 32. See joint-tenants, Partners.

Partitio familiae, (Mentioned in civ. Lim. H. 1 cap. 1.) Is a writ that lies for those who hold lands tenements pro indiviso, and would suffer to every one his part, against him or them that refuse to join in partition, as copartners, tenants in great levelland, &c. Old Nat. Rec. fol. 142. P. N. B. fol. 61. See Partition.

The word where or more persons agree to come in share and share alike to any trade or bargain. If there are two partners in trade, and judgment is recovered against one of them, the moiety of the goods in partnership only shall be taken in execution. Shoe. Rep. 174. See 16 Fin. Adu. tit. Partners.

Partners, Are those that are concerned in ship matters, and who have joint share therein. And when there are part-owners of a ship, the majority may sit her out, without the consent of the rest; and if they do, such majority run all the hazard, and are to partake of the profits. Shoe. 13, 30. Action lies as well against a part-owner of a ship, for the loss of spoiling of goods delivered to the master, as against the master; for as the master of a ship is chargeable in respect of his wages, so are the part-owners in respect of the freight; but the action against the part-owners must be brought against all of them, or the defendants may take advantage of it by pleading in abatement, &c. Shoe. Rep. 30, 105. 3 Lev. 259. Particunity. 14 Cor. 2, cap. 11. See Particulars.

Patago, See Paper.

Patruyal. The form of it was freight, which signified redsum regimen. All the top part of it was crooked, and the other part sharp: The crooked signified, that the bishop professed over the people; and the sharp signified, to punish the stubborn. Cowell. edit. 1727.

Pattis, Is generally any place where cattle may feed; and feeding for cattle is called paffa, wherefore we call feeding grounds common of paffa: But common of paffa is properly a right of putting beasts to paffa in another man's foil; and in this there is an interest of the foul and of the tenant. Wood's In. 195. 197. See Natural Law.

Pattis, Is the same by procuration, or the provision which the tenants of the King, or other lords, are bound to make for them at certain days or seasons, or as often as they make a progres to their lands: And this in many places was turned into money. Ies mdo per annum libereis a pallu Recti quod nobilis. Monall. raz. tom. 123.

Patentee, Is he to whom the King grants his letters patent. 7 E. 6. cap. 3. See Letters Patent. The form of patents of confirmation of grants and liberties, St. Form. Cowell. 13 Ed. 1. fi. 6.

A settlement or exemption of part of letters patent may be pleaded and take effect.

Pattis, Properly signifies the country; but in the law it denotes the men of a neighbourhood; so when we say inquisition per patrimoniam, we mean a jury of the neighbourhood. In like manner, Alia per recognizant per eijam, idem per good recognizant. Paton, edit. 1727.

Pattircb, (Pattircb,) Is a Greek word signifying a chief father. Ann. 385. In the general council held at Constanimate, it was decreed, That the bishop of Con- stantine should for ever be called a patriarch.

Patrimony, An hereditary estate, or right derived from ancestors. The legal endowment of a church or religious house, was called ecclesiastical patrimony; and the lands and revenues united to the see of Rome, are called St. Peter's Patrimony. Cowell. edit. 1727.

Patruinus, A godfather. Id. 18.

Patttor, (Pattorum,) Is used in the Civil law for him that hath emancipated a servant, and thereby is both juftly accounted his great benefactor, and challengeth certain reverence and dignity in his name, during his life. See De jurc Patronato in the Digest, with the Frangipolc pro autore fuddit. Humano verbo Patronus, in his Comment. de verbis feudal. Both in the Canon and Common law it signifies him that hath the gift of a benefice; and the reason is, because the gift of churches and benefices belonged unto fuch good men as either built, or else endowed them with some great part of their revenue. The King is patron paramount of all ecclesiastical benefices in England, Cowell. edit. 1727. See Patronage.

Stat. See &c. pauperis. By the stat. 11 Hen. 7. cap. 12, it is enacted in the words following, "Prayin the Commons in this present parliament assembled, that where the King our Sovereign Lord, of his most gracious disposition, willent and intended indifferent justice to be had and ministered according to his Common laws to all his true subjects, as well to the poor as rich, which poor subjects be not of ability, ne power to sue according to the laws of this land, for the redres of injuries and wrongs to them daily done, as well concerning their persons and their inheritance as other causes; for remedy whereof in behalf of the poor persons of this land not able to sue for their remedy after the course of the common law, be it ordained and enacted, That every poor person or persons, which have or hereafter shall have cause of action or actions against any person or persons within this realm, shall have, by the direction of the Chancellor of this realm for the time being, writ or writings original and writs of juflamina, according to the nature of their causes, therefore nothing paying to his highness for the writing of the same, nor for the writing of the fame writs to be hereafter used; and that the said Chancellor for the time being shall affign such of the clerks, which shall do and use the making and writing of the same writs, to write the same ready to be sealed; and also learned counsel and attorneys for the time being shall attend taking their fees for the said writ or write be returned, if it be before the King in his bench, the justices there shall affign to the same poor person or persons counsel learned, by their directions, which shall give their counsel, nothing taking for the same; and likewise the justices shall appoint attorneys and attorneys for the same poor person or persons, and all other officers requisite and necessary to be had for the redres of the said writs to be had and made, which shall do their duties without any reward for their counsels, help and bufines for the same; and the same law and order shall be observed and kept of all such writs to be made afore the King's juftice of his Common Place and Barons of the metropolis, and all other justices in the court of record where any such fuit shall be."

Before a person is admitted to sue in forma pauperi, he must have a counsel's hand to his petition, certifying the judge to whom the petition is directed, that he conceives the petitioner hath good cause of action; he must also make application to his petition, that he is not worth 5 l. all his debts paid, except wearing apparel, and his right to the matter in question. Lit. Reg. 653.

On motion to dipauper one who was plaintiff in an action, he had a living of 40 l. per annum; Turton and Gould juftices, were against it, because he was in debt more than it was worth; but Hot Ch. J. directed, if for his being indebted for his being indebted, in effect, being mortgaged, is no reason, it is enough that he has a considerable estate in possession. 2 Salk. 507.

A person admitted to sue in forma pauperi, can only sue in that cause for which he is admitted, &c. fett. 1. tit. 5. Lit. Reg. 633.

It seems that, after the statutes which introduced either plaintiff or defendants could sue or defend in forma pauperis, for that was a means of depriving the other party of the costs given him by the statute; and the above-mentioned statute 11 Hen. 7. enables peror only to sue as paupers; and as the statute 23 Hen. 8 hereafter fet forth, excepts only plaintiffs who are paupers from the statute, it feems, that the defendant cannot not be admitted in a civil action to defend as a pauper. But it hath been adjudged that a person may be admitted to defend an indictment in forma pauperis for a milde nor, such as a conspiracy, keeping a disorderly bower &c. for in such proceedings there being no costs, it judges have a discretionry power of admitting or reful ting them by the common law. Post. 9 Geo. 2. Tit. King v. Wright. Also by 2 Geo. 2. cap. 28. sect. 8. it is enacted "That in cafe any person, arrested and imprisoned b virtue of any writ of capias, or information relating to the culprits, shall make affidavit before the judge a judgment of such facts, that the defendant shall shall be brought, or before any other person committed by such court to take affidavits, that he is not worth, over and above his wearing apparel, the sum of five pounds (which affidavit the said judge or judge of such court, and such person to committed, is at an expense of his own), and required of such person shall thereupon petition such court to be admitted to defend himself against such action or information in forma pauperis, that then the judges of such court shall according to their discretion, admit such person to defend himself against such action or information in forma pauperis, that to the suitor such court shall not in any manner, and with the same privileges, as the judge of such court are by law directed and authorized to an allignment to himself of the bond, and likewise pays other money to other creditors by vendor's order, but took security for re-payment, on certain conditions. De- creed to be no payment to the vendor, so long as the allignment of the bond was kept on foot, and not delivered up to be paid. Fin. R. 84. Hill. 25 Car. 2. Magfain & Sitwell v. Fane, Clinton & al. A note drawn on A. to pay money for value received, is a good discharge of a debt, though the note be not made, unless the creditor return the bill in convenient time. Per Holt Ch. J. Storyn. 155. Peoples. 8 W. 3. Darrac v. Savage. A. gives B. a bill of exchange on C. in payment of a former debt; this is not allowable as evidence on non as- sumptio, unless paid; for a bill shall never go in discharge of a precedent debt, except it be part of the contract that it should be paid. And it is said, that it ought not to be admitted to remove causes out of inferior courts, but ought to save themselves with the jurisdiction within which their actions properly lie. 1 Mod. 388. per North. By the orders of the courts, if the party admitted to a in forma pauperis give any fee or reward to his coun- sel or attorney, to make any contract or agreement with them, he shall from thenceforth be dispaupered, and no afterwards admitted again in that suit to prosecute in forma pauperis. Ord. Cur. 94. Also it is said, that if a pauper gives notice of trial, and does not proceed, he shall be dispaupered. 1 Sail. 506. In the statute 23 Hms. 8. c. 15, there is a provison, that whoever procures in forma pauperis shall not pay costs, but shall suffer such other punishment as the age of the court shall think fit. But notwithstanding this statute, if he be dispaupered nonuit, the usual practice is to tax the costs, and r non-payment to order him to be whipped. 1 Rol. 19. 3 Sail. 506. Site. 356. A. brought a bill in forma pauperis, to which the de- fendant put in a plea and demurrer, which were both over-ruled; and it was instituted upon, that he should not owe costs, being at none; but my Lord Samers, after long debate and inquiry of all the ancient counsel and clerks, and after much discussion, it was thought more fit to ask it like other suitors; for though he is at no costs, but small costs, yet the counsel and clerks do not give his labour to the defendant, but to the pauper. 125. Paton, See Clerks, Plaguing. Maint. See Plaguing. Payment, is the discharge of a debt or promise. "Jauff, What amounts to a payment, and what is a good plea of ament. A. paid B. 100 l. in redemption of a mortgage; B. as C. put it into his cloths, which C. did. Then A. paid for the security, which B. refused to deliver, whereupon A. required his money again; B. bid C. fetch it, to deliver it back to A. which C. did, and turned it out on the table for A. to take it in presence of B. had he a good payment of the mortgage; but A. re- taking the money is accountable to B. for the money as his own money. Cro. E. 614. Trin. 40 Eliz. B. Jenner v. Bartolomew. A. brought 100 l. to pay to B. who was B.'s son, fratched 20 l. out of the hundred, and went way with it. Pecopea. A word often met with in old writings. Most authors agree that it is the same with that garment called Rationale, which the high-priest in the old law wore on his shoulders, as a sign of perfection. 'Tis written also in the high-priest of the new law, as a sign of the greatest virtue. Quae gratia & ratioe præstet, for which reason it is called Rationale. 'Tis by some taken to be that part of the pall which covers the breast of the priest, and from thence it is called Pectorela. But all agree that it is the richest part of that garment, embroidered with gold, and adorned with precious stones. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Peers of the realm. (Peers regni, process.) *Are the sovereign of the kingdom, and lords of parliament; who are divided into Dukes, Marquises, Earls, Viscounts, and Barons: And the reason why they are called peers, is for hat notwithstanding there is a distinction of dignities in our nobility, yet in all publick actions they are equal; so in their votes of parliament, and in posing up the laws, and in the Peers' investigation of matters of necessity, or a voluntary act, it is necessary that you have it under his hand, or his solicitor's hand, for your indemnity for parol waiver, in such case, will not be sufficient.

2. In what cases peers are to be sworn; and for what degraded.

In the pleas of parliament, 18 Ed. I. between the Earl of Gloucester and Earl of Hertford, John de Holping a baron, upon long debating the suit ought to be sworn because he was a peer of the realm, it was resolved, that he ought to lay his hand to the book. The like was resolved, to Lord Keeper.*

George Neville, Duke of Bedford, was degraded by force of an act of parliament, 16 June 17 Ed. 4. which act, reciting the matter of the said Sir George Duke, doth express the cause of his degradation, in these words, viz.
And forasmuch as it is openly known, that the said George hath not, nor by inheritance may any livelihood to support the said name, estate and dignity, or any name of estate; and oftentimes it is so feen, that when any lord is called to high estate, and hath not convenient livelihood to support the same dignity, it induceth great poverty and indigence, and caufeth oftentimes great extortion, embracery and maintenance to be had, to the great trouble of all such countries where such estate shall happen to be:
Wherefore the King by advice of his Lords spiritual and temporal, and by the commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, ordaineth, affiduedeth and enacteth, That from henceforth the same creation and making of the said Duke, and all the names of dignity given to the said George, or to John Neville his father, be from henceforth void and of none effect, &c.
In which act these things are to be observed: First, That although the Duke had not any possessions to support his dignity, yet his dignity cannot be taken from him without an act of parliament. Secondly, The inconveniences do appear, where a great state and dignity is, and no livelihood to maintain it. Thirdly, It is a good reason to take, away such dignity by act of parliament, and therefore the said act of the 16 June 17 Ed. 4, which act is to the general words of the writ, to take away such inconvenience. 12 Rep. 106, 107, in the Earl of Shrews-bury's cafe.
3. Of the trial of peers, and the power of peere of trial.

By flat 7 W. 3. cap. 3. f. 10. it is enacted. That upon the trial of any peers or peersesses, either for treason or misprision of treason, all the peers who have a right to sit and vote in parliament, shall be duly summoned 20 days at least before the trial, and every peer so summoned and appearing shall vote in the trial, first taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy required by t W. & M. and subscribing and repeating the Teft enjoined by 30 Ga. 2. 12.

Sed. 11. Provided, That this shall not extend to impeachments or other proceedings in parliament. Sed. 12. Nor to the treasons of counterfeiting the coins, the Great seal, Privy seal, Sign manual or Privy signet. But the 6 Ann. cap. 23. f. 12. Peers shall be indicted in Scotland as in England. If a peer be impeached by a commoner, yet such cause shall not be tried by peers, but by a jury of the county; for 'tho' the peers are the proper pares to a lord of parliament in capital matters, where the life and nobility of a peer is concerned; yet in matter of property, the trial of such a peer is not by them, but by the inhabitants of those counties where the facts arise, since such peers living through the whole kingdom could not be generally cognizant of facts arising in several counties, as the inhabitants themselves where they are done; but this want of having noblemen for their jury was compensated as much as possible, by returning peroms of the best quality; therefore a knight is necessary to be summoned in any cause where a peer is party. G. Hil. C. B. 78, 79. cap. 8.

It has been adjudged, that if a peer on an arraignment before the lords refuse to put himself on his peers, he shall be dealt with by the laws that the bands mort for it; for it is as much the law of the land, that a peer be tried by his peers, as a commoner by commoners; yet if one who has a title to peerage, be indicted and arraigned as a commoner, and plead Not guilty, and put himself upon his country, it has been adjudged, that he cannot afterwards forget this he is a peer, and pray a trial by his peers. 2 H. 3 H. & C. Hil. C. B. 44. f. 19.

The order and process of this trial appears anno 1 H. 4. r. and anno 13 H. 8. 13. That when a lord of the parliament is to be arraigned of treason or felony, of which he is indicted, the King by his letters patents shall make one great and gage lord to be the High Steward of England for the day of the arraignment, who before the flat day shall make precept to his serjeants in arms, (who is appointed to serve him during the time of his commission,) to cause to come before him twenty or eighteen lords of the parliament at the same day; and after at the day when the trial shall be used, shall have the benefit of utmost from upon the arraignment of the prisoner, and has cau- sed to be read his commission, the said serjeant shall return the flat precept, and the lords shall be thereupon demanded and when they have appeared, and are seated in their places, the court of the Lords shall be demanded to be opened, when the clerk of the crown shall be conducted by him to the bar, and then the said High Steward shall shew to the prisoner the caufe for which the King has assembled thers the lords and him, and command him anfwer without any dread, and thereupon shall cause the clerk of the crown to read the indictment to him, and to demand of him if he be guilty or not, to which, at that, he has answered Not guilty, the clerk shall demand further of him, how he will be tried? To which he may say, by God and his peers; and immediately upon the said fentence and King's attorney shall give evidence against him; to which, when the prisoner has answered the said confable shall be commanded to retire with the said precept from the bar to some place for the time being, and the lords severally shall take in the said court together and thereupon the lords shall rise from their places, as confult together, and that which they do they upon their honour without any oath to be administrated to them, therefore of them, or the greater part of them as they agreed they shall return to their places to the further of thecau-

Pen, signifies an high mountain, as Mr. Camden tells us in his Britannia. It was so called by the Britains; and not only by them, but by the old Gauls: From whence those high hills which divide France from Italy, are called Appennines. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Penfions of churcheis. Are certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes. And some churches have settled on them annuities, pensions, &c. payable, or the interest of pension, to their clergy or prelates, by virtue of some decree made by an ecclesiastical judge upon a controversy for tithes, by which the tithes have been decreed to be enjoyed by one, and a pension instead thereof to be paid to another; or they have arisen by virtue of a deed made by the consent of the parson, patron and congregation. But where they have been paid during twenty years, then it may be claimed by the curate, and be recovered in the spiritual court; or a parson may prosecute his fuit for a pension by prescription, either in that court or at Common Law, by a writ of annuity; but if he takes his remedy at law, he shall never afterwards sue in the spiritual court: If the prescription be decreed, that must be tried by the Common Law. 4. N. B. 51. Hardt. 230. VIN. 120. A spiritual person may sue in the spiritual court, for a pension originally granted and confirmed by the ordinary; but where it is granted by a temporal person to a clerk, he cannot; as, if one grants an annuity to a parson, he must sue for it in the temporal courts. Gra. Edit. 675. See Eccles. tribunal.

Penfion of the inns of courts, That which in the two Temples is called a parliament, and in Lincoln's Inn a council, is in Gray's Inn termed a penfam; that is, an annual allowance of thirty pounds a year, to the members of that house, to consult of the affairs of the house. And in the inns of court, pensions are certain annual payments of each member to the house. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Penfurers, (Penfmurers.) Are a band of gentlemen so called, that attend as a guard upon the King's person. They were first established 1539, and have an allowance of fifty pounds a year, to maintain themselves and two horses for the King's service. See Stow's Annals 973.

Perjury and Substitution. Perjury, (Perjura est mendacium cum juramento foradam.) Is a crime committed, when a lawful oath is administered by any that have authority to any perfon in any judicial proceeding, who swears absolutely and falsely in a material matter to tlie issue, or cause in question, by their own ait, or by any substitution of others. And if a man call me perjur man, I may have my aiton upon the cafe, but it must be intended contrary to my oath in a judicial proceeding. But for calling me a false man, no aiton lies; but the cause the forswearing may be extra-judicial. Coke's In 3 part. fol. 163.

Perjury by the Common law is defined a willful false oath by one who, being lawfully required to depone a true and any proceeding in a court of justice, swears a falsely in a matter of some consequence to the point question, whether he be believed or not. 2 Haw. C. 273.

Perjury by the Common law is an offence in procuring a man to take a false oath amounting to perjur man, who actually takes such oath; but it seems clear, that if the perfon, incited to take such an oath do not actually take it, the perfon by whom he was incited is not guilty of falseamoration; yet it is certain, that he is so liable to be punished, not only by fine, but as by infamous corporal punishment. 1 Rol. Abi. 5: Yev. 72. Cre. Jec. 158. 2 King. 399. 3 Mod. 12: 1 Hawk. P. C. 177.

2. How restrained and punished by statute.

By the 7 Eliz. c. 3, it is enacted, "That whosoever unlawfully and corruptly procure any witness or witnesses by letters, rewards, promises, or by any other fraudulent and unlawful means or means whatsoever, to commit any willful and corrupt perjury in any matter or cause whatsoever depending in fuit or variance by any writ, action, bill, complaint or information in any writing concerning any lands, tenements or hereditaments, or goods, chattels, debts or damages in any of the King's courts of Chancery, or Whitehall, or elsewhere, within any of the King's dominions of England or Wales, or the marches of the same, where any person or persons shall have authority by virtue of the King's commission, patent or writ, to hold plea of land, or to examine, hear or determine any such lands, or any matter relating to the merits of a cause, or in a collateral matter; as where one, who offers himself to be bail for another, swears that his subsistence is greater than it is, &c. but neither a false oath in a mere private matter, as in making a bargain, &c. nor the breach of a promissory oath, by a man who is bound in such an oath, &c."

1 Haw. P. C. 173. 4.

3. What is a false oath.

A false oath is, when any person, upon oath taken, swears falsely.

1 Haw. P. C. 174. 5.

4. For what cause an oath is taken.

An oath is taken for the purpose of enabling the parties to make their proceedings wholly or in part.

1 Haw. P. C. 175.

5. When the oath is taken.

The oath is taken by a person sworn to depose the truth; and therefore a false verdict comes not under the notion of perjury, because the jurors swear not to depose the truth, but only to judge truly of the depositions of others; but a man may be convicted of perjury who swears falsely in an answer in Chancery, or in an answer to interrogatories concerning a contempt, or in an affidavit, &c. as by an oath taken by him as witness in another's cause.

1 Haw. P. C. 175.

6. What the oath is.

The oath must be taken absolutely and directly; and therefore if a man only swears as he thinks, remembers or believes, he cannot be guilty of perjury.

1 Haw. P. C. 175.

7. When the oath is taken.

The oath ought to be taken in some way material, and altogether immaterial, and neither any way pertinent to no matter in question, nor tending to aggravate or extenuate the damages, nor likely to induce the jury to give the reader credit to the substantia part of the evidence, it cannot amount to perjury, because it is wholly inexcusable; as where a witness gives his evidence, with an impertinent preamble of a florid concerning previous facts, no way relating to what is material, and is guilty of a falsity as such facts; but it seems a reasonable opinion, that a witness may be guilty of perjury in respect to a false oath concerning a mere circumstance, if such oath have a tincture of and change the more material part of the evidence; as if a trepass for spoiling the plaintiff's clothe with the defendant's sheep, a witness swears that he saw such a number of the defendant's sheep in the clothe; and being asked how he knew them to be the defendant's, swears that he knew them by such a mark, he has no mark of him which in truth the defendant never used any such mark.

1 Haw. P. C. 175.

8. What is a false oath, that is not material.

It does not seem material, whether the false oath were credited or not, or whether the party, in whole prejudice it was taken, were in the event any ways damaged by it; for the prosecution is not grounded on the damage to the party, but on the abuse of public justice.

in such wife as they might have done and used to do to all purposes, so that they fer not on the offender left punishment than is contained in the said act.

The argument of this statute the following opinions have been holden:

That every indictment or action on this statute must exactly pursue the word of it; and therefore if it allege, that the defendant deposed such a matter falsly & deceptively, or falsly & corruptly, or falsly & voluntairly, without saying, voluent, &c, it is not good, though it concluded, that se voluntairium & corruptiam commit perjurium contraiam flam flanum, &c. Also it is said to be necessary expressly to shew, that the defendant was sworn; and that it is not sufficient to say, that tales per se fuerat evangeliis deputati. Cro. Eliz. 147. Hebr.
2, 14. 2 Leon. 211. 1 Show. 198. Cro. Eliz. 103.

But there is no need to shew, whether the party took the falle oath through the subornation of another, or of his own act, tho' the words of the statute are, "If perjury by subornation, &c. or their own act, &c. shall commit wilful perjury;" for there being no medium between the betrayer and the perjuror, that one set nothing in the other's behalf, and to express no more than the law would have implied, and therefore operate nothing. 3 Bulst.
147.

It hath been adjudged, that a man cannot be guilty of perjury within this statute, in any case wherein he may not have been suborned by the party who is within it for it is reasonable to give the whole statute the fame construction; neither can it be well intended, that the makers of the statute meant to extend its purview farther as to perjury, which they seem to eftem the eller crime, than to subornation of perjury, which they seem to eftem the greater; and therefore since the clause concerning subornation of perjury mentions only matters depending by writ, bill, plaint or information, concerning heredi-taments, goods, debts or damages, &c. extends not to perjury on an indictment or criminal information; the clause concerning perjury, tho' penned in more general words, hath been adjudged to come under the like retriction: Also since the clause concerning subornation of perjury relates only to perjury by witnesses, that concerning perjury shall extend only to the like perjury; and therefore not to perjury in an answer in Chancery; or in fearing the peace against a man; or in any presentment by a homager in a court baron; or in a wager of law, or in fearing before commissioners of inquiry of the the King's title to lands; and by the opinions of some, a false affidavit against a man in a court of justice is not within the statute; but if such affidavit be by a third person, and relate to a cause depending in suit before the court, and either of the parties in variance be grieved, hindered or defrauded, in respect of such cause, by reason of the perjury, it may strongly be argued that it is within the purview of the statute; also it seems the better opioion, that a false oath before the sheriff on a writ of inquiry of damages is within the statute. 5 Co. 99. Cro.
T. 120. 3 Inst. 164. 2 Leon. 204. Titob. 120. Cro.
Eliz. 145. 2 Kelt. Abr. 77.

But it is the reasonable inference from the clause which gives an action to the party grieved, that no false oath is within the statute, which doth not give some perfon a just cause of complaint; and therefore, that if the thing sworn be true, tho' it be not known by him that fwear it to be so, the oath is not within the statute, because it gives no just cause of complaint to the other party, who would take advantage of another's want of evidence to prove the truth; also from the same ground no false oath can be within the statute, unless the party against whom it was sworn suffered some disadvantage by it; and therefore in every prosecution on the statute, you must set forth the record which the party to whom you oppose the perjury to have been committad, and must prove it to be true, either by the authentic record, either by actually producing it, or an attested copy; also in the pleadings you must not only set forth the point wherein the false oath was taken, but must also shew how it conducd to the proof or difproof of the matter in question; and if an action on the statute be brought by more than one, you must shew how the perjury was prejudicial to each of the plaintiffs; but it feems that perjury, which tends only to aggravate or extenuate the damages, is not much within the statute as a perjury that goes directly to the point in issue; and a perjury in a cause wherein an erroneous judgment is given, is a good ground of prosecution upon the statute till the judgement be reverfed. 1 Hawk. P. c. 187.

If perjury be committed, that is within this statute, but concludes not contin formam statuti, yet it is a good indictment at Common law, but not to bring him with the corporal punishment of the statute. 2 Hal. 514.
P. C. 191-2.

By the statute 2 Gen. 2. c. 25. § 2. The more effec-tuall to deter persons from committing wilful and corrupt perjury, a subornation of perjury, it is enacted that besides the punishment already to be inflicted by law to great crimes, it shall and may be lawful for the court or judge before whom any person shall be convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury, or subornation of perjury according to the laws now in being, to order such person to be sent to some house of correction within the same county, for a time not to exceed the whole of which shall be kept to hard labour during all the fall time, or otherwise to be transported to some of his Majesty's plantations beyond the seas, for a term not exceeding seven years, as the court shall think proper; and therefore judgment shall be given, that the person convicted shall be committed unto the service of the crown, or other punishment as the decree shall be adjudged to be inflicted on such person agreeable to the laws now in being; and if transportation be directed, the same shall be executed in such manner as is or shall be provided by law for the transportation of felons; and if any perfon comitted or transported shall volunteer to escape or break prifon, or return from transportation before the expiration of the time for which he shall be ordered to be transported as aforesaid, such person being lawfully convicted shall suffer death as a felon without benefit of clergy, and shall be tried for such se-lony in the county where he so escaped, or where he shall be apprehended.

Stat. 23 Gen. 2. cap. 11. sect. 1. In every information or indictment for wilful and corrupt perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged and by what court, or before whom the oath was taken averting such court or prifon to have authority to administer the fame) together with the proue avertment of the same, and the time, and place where the perjury was committed. For an information of perjury shall not putting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding;
and committing the person or authority of the court or prifon before whom the perjury was committed.

Stat. 2. In every information or indictment for subornation of perjury, or for corrupt bargaining with others to commit wilful and corrupt perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged without putting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, and without putting forth the commission or authority of any such person before whom the perjury was committed, or agreed to be committed.

Sell. 3. It shall be lawful for any judge of assize, or near assize, or general gaol-delivery, or of any of the great sessions of Wales, or of the counties palatine (fiting the court or within 24 hours after) to direct any person exa-imined as a witness before them, to be prosecuted for perjury, in case there appear a reasonable cause; and to assign the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, counsel who shall do their duty without fee.
And every prosecution so directed shall be carried on without payment of any tax, and without payment of any fees in court, or to any officer of the court. And such fee as is due shall be paid to the person so assigned or other officer of the court attending when such prosecution is directed, shall without fee give the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, a certificate of the fame being directed, with the names of the counes assigned him; which certificate shall be deemed sufficient of such prosecution having been directed as aforesaid, proved that no such direction or certificate shall be given in evidence upon a trial against any person upon prosecution to directed.

Perfonal. (Perfonalis) Signifies as much as enabled to maintain plea in court: As for example, the defendant was judged perfonsal to maintain this action, Old Nat. Brev. fol. 142. and in Kitchin, fol. 214. The tenant pleaded, that the wife was an alien, born in Portugal, without the ligeance of the King, and judgment 3. was demanded of the defendant. It should be answered: The plaintiff faith, he was made personal by parliament, that is, as the Civillians would speak it, Habite perfonam favel in juidic. Perfonal is also as much as to be of capacity to take any thing granted or given. Plowd. fol. 27. Chiliur's case.

Perfonal. (Perfonalis) Being joined with the substanatives, things, goods or chattels, as things personal, goods personal, chattels personal; signifies any movable thing belonging to a man, be it quick or dead: So it is used in 1. A. had a warrant to arrhe J. S. and A. demanded of a perfon what his name was, who said his name was J. S. whereupon A. arrested him. The perfon brought false impeachment; and adjured it lay; for the bailiff ought at his peril to take notice of the party. Ms. 457. Trin. 38 Eliz. Cost v. Litchworth.

Lord Keeper said, he had always noted this difference. If one of my name levies a fine of my land in my name, I may well confess and avoid this fine, by flewing the special matter. But if a perfon, who is not of my name, levies a fine of my land in my name, I shall not be received to aver that I did not levie the fine, but another in my name; for that is merely contrary to the record; and so it is of a recognizace, and other matters of record. But he conceived, that when the fraud appears to the court, as in the principal case, they may well enter a vacat on the roll, and so make it no fine, albeit the party cannot stand by averment, during the time that it stands as a record. Crs. Ellis. 531. Mich. 38 & 39 Eliz. Huber's cafe.

B. was taken in execution upon a recognizance of bail, and he made it appear to the court, that he never acknowledged the recognizace, but was peremptoried by another; and thereupon it was moved, that the bail might be discharged, and he discharged, as was done in Cotton's cafe. 2 Crs. 256. But the court said in 21 Jac. cap. 26. by which this offence was made felony without clergy, it is not convenient to vacate it until the offender is convicted; and so it was done 22 Car. 2. in Spicier's cafe; wherefore it was ordered, that B. should bring the money into court, and be let at large to prosecute the offender. Twijleden said it must be tried in Middlesex, though the bail was taken at a judge's chambers in London, because filed here, and the entry is venit coram Domino Regis. &c. so it differs from a recognizace acknowledged before my Lord Huber, upon 23 H. 8. at his chambers, and recorded in Middlesex, where the fine was deducted in London or Middlesex. Petition, (Petrino) Hath a general signification to all kinds of supplications made by an inferior to a super- rior, and especially to one having jurisdiction. 3. P. C. It is held for that reason for that which the sub- ject hath to help a wrong done by the King, who is in a pragraetive not to be fixed by writ: In which sense is either general, that the King do him right and reason, whereupon follows a general indemnification upon the same. By statute 13 Car. 2. c. 5. The soliciting, labouring or procuring the putting the hands or content of about twenty persons to any petition, to the King, or either house of parliament, for alterations in church or statute unless by consent of three or more justices of peace of the county, or a majority of the grand jury, at the assizes or fellops, &c. and repairing to the King or parliament to deliver such petition, with above the number of ten persons, is subject to a fine of 100l. and three months imprisonment, being proved by two witnesses, within fix months, in the court of B. R. or at the assizes, &c. And the act of any person or persons by this statute notified, must be taken that petitions to the King contain nothing which may be interpreted to reflect on the administra-tion; for if they do, it may come under the denomina-tion of a libel: And 'tis remarkable, that the petition to the city of London, for the fitting of a parliament we deemed libellous; because it suggested the King's own will. Physicians. By statute 3 Hen. 8. cap. 11. foll. 1. No person within London, nor within seven miles of the same, shall exercise as a physician or surgeon, except he be examined and approved by the bishop of London yearly by the dean of St. Paul's, calling to them four doctors of physick, and for surgery other expert persons in that faculty, of them that have been approved; upon the pain of forfeiture for every month, 51. one half to the King, and the other to the person that shall make the information. See Stat. 2. No person out of the said city and precinct of seven miles, except he have been (as aforesaid) approved, shall exercise as a physician or surgeon in any diocese, but if he be examined and approved by the bishop or his vicar general, calling to them such expert persons as their discretion shall think convenient, and giving their letters testimonial upon like pain. See Stat. 3. This shall not be prejudicial to the university.

Stat. 14. & 15 Hen. 8. cap. 5. foll. 2. The corporation of the commonalty and fellowship of the faculty of physick erected by King Henry VIII. and every thing contained in the letters patent of incorporation, are confirmed in parliament; and the six persons in the letters patent named, coming to them two or more of the commonalty, shall be called eleets, and the elects shall freely chuse one of them President; and as oft as any of the places of the elects shall be void by death or otherwise, the superintendents of the elects (within forty days) shall chuse more of the faculty in London, to supply the number of eight; so that they be first by the said superintendents freely and according to such as shall be deviled by the elects, and by superintenders approved. See Stat. 3. No person shall be suffered to practice in physick through England, until he be examined at London by the President and three of the elects, and have from them letters of testimonial, except he be a graduate of Oxford or Cambridge, &c.

Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 40. foll. 1. The president of the commonalty and fellowship of physicians, and the common and fellows of the same, shall be discharged to keep watch or ward in London, and shall not be chosen constable, or any other officer in the city. See Stat. 2. The said president, common and fellows, may yearly elect four of the said commoners and fellows; and the said four persons after oath ministrated by the president or his deputy, shall have power to enter the house of every apothecary within the city, to search such apothecary wares as they have in their houses; and all such drugs as the same four persons shall find defective, the same four persons calling to them the warden of the pharmacy of apothecaries, or one of them, shall cause to be burnt, or otherwise destroy the same; and if the apothecaries do obstinately or willingly refuse the said persons to enter their houses for the purpose before rehearsed, they shall forfeit 100 l. the one half to the King, and the other half to him that will sue for the same; and if the four persons referred to be worn, or do obstinately refuse to make the search once in the year, having no lawful impediment, for such default, every of the said four persons shall forfeit 10 l. 6 M

Stat. 3. Any of the fellowship of physicians, being admitted by the said president and fellowship, may practice the science of physick including surgery.

Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. cap. 8. sect. 3. It shall be lawful to every person being the King’s subject, having knowledge of the nature of herbs, roots and waters, to minister to any outward wound, sore, apoplexy, swelling or disease, any herbs, ointments, medicines, baths, poutlets and plasters, according to their experience, or drinks for the stony, stranguary or ague.

Stat. 1 Mar. flot. 2. cap. 9. sect. 2. The statute 14 Hen. 8. cap. 5. shall continue in force.

Sect. 4. Whenever the president of the college of physicians in London, or any other college of the said privileges as the said president and college shall yearly authorize to correct offenders in the said faculty, shall commit any offenders to any gaol within the same city and precinct (the Tower of London excepted) the goaler shall receive such persons, until such offenders be di-charged by the said president, and such persons as from the said college; upon pain that every such gaoler doing the contrary shall forfeit the double of such fines and amerce-ments as such officer shall be afflicted to pay, so that the same be not at one time above 20s. the moiety thereof for the Queen, the other moiety to the president and college.

Stat. 5. It shall be lawful for thewardens of the procures to go with the physicians in their search, and every such person as shall refit such search shall forfeit 10l.

Sect. 6. All justices, mayors, sheriffs, confablers and other officers, upon request shall affit the president of the said college, and all persons authorized, for the due execution of the said fratres; upon pain to run in contemp of the Queen’s Majesty.

In an action for practising physick within seven miles of London without licence, the case upon a special verdict was, that the defendant being an apothecary by trade, was sent to by J. S. then sick of a certain distemper; and he having seen, and being informed of the said distemper, did without prescription or advice of a doctor, and having seen the advice, continued to send the said
J. S. several parcels of physick, as proper for his said distemper, only taking the price of his drugs; and if this were a practising of physick, such as is prohibited by the statute was the question: And after several arguments the court at last unanimously agreed, that practicing physick was a matter of the statute confina, 11th.
In judging of the distemper and its nature, constitution of the patient, and many other circumstances. 2dly, In judging of the fittest and properest remedy for the disease. And 3dly, In directing and ordering the application of the remedy to the diseased. And that the proper business of an apothecary is to give medicines and complaint of their preparations of the doctor pursuant to his directions.

It was also agreed that the defendant’s taking upon himself to send physick to a patient as proper for his distemper without taking ought for his pains, is plainly a taking upon himself to judge of the disease, and fitness of remedy, as also the executive or directing part. Et per-tem. The defendant had judgment. Note: This judgment was reversed in domo priorum, 6 Med. 44. 4th. 2dun.
B. R. College of Physicians v. Reye.

One that has taken his degree of doctor of physick in either of the universities may not practice in London, and within seven miles of the same, without a licence from the college of physicians; per cap. 6. sect. 1. and it is thereby made to appear that by reason of the charter of incorporation, confirmed by 14 & 15 Hen. 8. cap. 5. penn’d in very strong and negative words. As to the testimonials granted by the universities upon a person taking the doctor’s degree, the court was of opinion, that these might have the nature of a recommendation of the proficiency of the candidate, but conferred no right; and consequently all those certificates which have confirmed the privileges of the univeris furies would re-vice or confirm nothing but the reputation that this temminion might give such graduates. And as to the long clause of this statute, that none shall practice in the country without a licence from the president and three electors, unless he be a graduate of one of the universities; it was said, that all the inference from that would be, that pofibly two licences may be necessary where a person is not a graduate. In the case of Doctor Lest, Lord Ch. J.

Holt did not think this question worth being found specially. The college of physicians, without doubt, are more competent judges of the qualifications of a physician than the universities; and there may be many good reasons for taking a particular care of those that practice physick in London. Adjournatur. 10 Mod. 353. 25 Eliz.

Debt upon the statute 14 Hen. 8. cap. 5. by the plaintiff as professor of the college of physicians in London, and of the corporation of physicians there, for that the defendant used the art of physick in London without licence from the college thereof, against the statute and the charter; for which he demanded 5l. for every month, being the penalty given by the statute; the defendant pleaded the statute 34 Hen. 8. which enables every one to practice physick or surgery, being skilful therein, not withstanding any act to the contrary. The plaintiff replies and swears the statute 14 Hen. cap. 5. which confirm their charter, and every article thereof to stand in force; and any act, statute, law, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. Hereupon the defendant demurred; but, caused this general clause in this law doth not restrain the statute of 34 Hen. 8. 2dly, That this pleading is a departing from what has been already argued for the plaintiff, 11th, that the act of 34. H. 8. is repealed by the 1 Mar.
quoad the college of physicians in London, as fully as if it had been by express words recited and repealed. For when it confirms the charter of 14 H. 8. and appoints that it, and every part thereof shall stand and be available, the statute of 34. H. 8. cannot stand, for the statutes in quia leges posteriores leges praeerent cord, gave rule that judgment should be entered for the Pip, (Pipes,) Is a roll in the Exchequer, otherwise called The Great Roll, anno 37 E. c. 4. See Clerk of the pipe. It is also a measure of wine or oil, containing half a tun, that is, fix score and six gallons. 1 R. 7. 3.

Piper, (Pirata,) Is now taken for one who maintains himself by pilage and robbing at sea. But in former times the word was used in a better sense, being attributed to such persons to whole care the mole or pier of a haven was intruded; and sometimes for a sea-folder, or sea-ganger. Cowell, ed. 1727.

Piracies and depredations at sea are capital offences by the Civil law; also piracy is said to have been punishable at common law, before the 25 Ed. 3. as petit treason, if committed by a subject, and as felony if committed by a foreigner; but it seems agreed, that after that statute, by which all treason is confined to the particulars therein let down, it was cognizable only by the common law. Strange, P. C. 10. 3 Inf. 112. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 369, 370. 1 Hawk. P. C. 98.

But this proving very inconvenient, because by that law no offender shall have judgment of death without his own consent, and to avoid this direct proof by eye witnesses, it was enacted by 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. "Every one that commits a robbery, &c. upon the sea, or in any haven, river, creek or place where the admiral or admirals have or pretend to have power, authority or jurisdiction, shall be inquired, tried, heard, determined and judged in such ships and places in the realm as shall be limited by the King's commission or commission to be directed for the same, in such form and condition as if any such offence or offences had been committed or done in or upon the land; and such commissions shall be under the King's great seal, directed to the admiral or admirals, or to his or their lieutenant, deputy and deputies, and to three or four other bailiffants, or shall be named or appointed by the Lord Chancellor of England for the time being, from time to time, and as oft as need shall require, to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of this land used for felonies, and robberies, &c. done and committed upon the land within this realm.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, " That if any perfon or persons happen to be indicted for any such offence done or hereafter to be done upon the sea, or in any other place above limited, that then such order, process, judgment and execution shall be used, had, done and made to and against every such perfon and persons, to be done or made after the form and condition as if any such person or persons had been committed or appointed to be directed to the admiral or admirals, or to their or his or their lieutenant, deputy and deputies, and to three or four other bailiffants, or shall be named or appointed by the Lord Chancellor of England for the time being, from time to time, and as oft as need shall require, to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of this land used for felonies, and robberies, &c. done and committed upon the land within this realm.

In the construction of this act the following opinions are held:

That it does not alter the nature of the offence, so as to make that which was before felony or a capital offence by the common law, now become a felony by the Common; for the offence must still be alleged as done upon the sea, and is no way cognizable by the Common law, but only by virtue of this statute; which, by ordaining that in some respects it shall have the like trial and punishments as are used for felony at Common law, shall not be carried so far as to make it also agree with it in other particular matters which are not mentioned; and from hence it follows that this offence remains, as before, of a special nature, and that it shall not be included in a general pardon of all felonies. 3 Inf. 112. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 370. Mar. 756. 3 Inf. 113. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 370.

From the same ground also it follows, that no person in respect of this statute be confined to be, or punished as accessaries to piracy before or after, as they might have been, if it had been made felony by the statute, whereby all those who would incidentally have been accessaries in the like like cafes in which they would have been acceding to a felony at Common law; and from hence it follows, that accedences to piracy, being neither expressly named in the statute, nor by construction included in it, remain as they were before, and were triable by the Civil law, if their offences were committed on the sea; but on the land, by no law, until 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 92. for a 46 Ed. 6. cap. 12. which provides again accedences in one county for a felony in another, extends not to accedences to an offence committed in no county, but on the sea; but by the said statute of 11 & 12 W. 3. they are triable in like manner as the principals are by the statute of 28 H. 8. 3 Inf. 112. 1 H.auk. P. C. 99.

It has yet been resolved, that an offender standing mute on an arraignment, by force of this statute, shall have judgment of pains fort & dures; for the words of the statute are, that a commission shall be directed, &c. to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of the land. 3 Inf. 114. Dyr. 241. pl. 49. 308. pl. 73.

It has been held, that the indictment for this offence must allege the fact to be done at sea, and must have both the word felonite and pirate. and that no offence is punishable by virtue of this act as piracy, which would not have been felony if done on the land, and consequently that the taking of an enemy's ship by an enemy is not piracy. 3 Inf. 112. 1 Roll. Rop. 175. 1 Hauk. P. C. 100.

It is agreed, that this statute extends not to offences done in creeks or ports within the body of a county, because they are and always were cognizable by the Common law. Mar. 756. 1 Roll. Rep. 175. 1 Hauk. P. C. 100.

By the 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7. it is enacted, "That all piracies, felonies and robberies, committed in or upon the sea, or in any place where the admiral has jurisdiction, may be tried and determined at sea or upon the land, and in lany of his Majesty's islands or plantations, &c. to be appointed by the King's commission under the great seal, with all the admirals, &c. and such persons and officers by name or for the time being, as his Majesty shall think fit; who shall have power jointly or severally, by warrant under hand and seal of any of them, to commit any person against whom information of any such offences shall be given upon oath, and to call in a court of admiralty, which shall consist of seven persons at the least, and shall proceed in the trial of the said offender according to such directions as are set forth at large in the said statute of; continued by 1 Geo. 1. for five years, and by 6 Geo. 1. made perpetual.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, sect. 8. "That none of his Majesty's natural born subjects or denizens of this kingdom, shall commit any piracy or robbery, or any act of hostility, against other his Majesty's subjects upon the sea, under colour of any commission from any foreign prince or state, or pretence of authority from any person whatsoever; such offender and offenders, and every of them, shall be deemed, adjudged and adjudged by the admirals, felons and robbers, and they and every of them, being duly convicted thereof according to this act, or the aforesaid act of 28 Hen. 8. shall have and suffer such pains of death, lots of lands, goods and chattels, as pirates, felons and robbers upon the seas ought to have and suffer." It is farther enacted by the said statute, "That if any commander or master of any ship, or any seaman or mariner, shall in any place, where the admirals hath jurisdiction, bestray his trust, and turn pirate, enemy or rebel, and piratically and feloniously run away with his ship or ships, or any barge, boat, ordnance, ammunition, goods or merchandise, or yield them up voluntarily to any pirate, or bring any seducing message from any pirate, enemy or rebel, or confude, combine or confederate with or attempt, or endeavoure to corrupt any commander, master, officer or marine, to yield up any ship, goods or merchandise, or turn pirate, or go over with pirates, or if any person shall lay by violent hands on his commander, whereby to hinder him from pursuing his cargo, or from undertaking any thing to his trust, or that shall confine his master, or make, or endeavour to make, a revolt in his ship, shall be adjudged to be a pirate, felon and robber, and being convicted thereof according to the directions of this act, shall have and suffer pains of death, lots of lands, goods and chattels, as pirates, felons and robbers upon the sea ought to have and suffer." And it is farther enacted by the said statute "That all and every perfon and persons whatsoever, who shall either on the land or upon the seas willingly or knowingly set forth any pirate, or aid and affist, or maintain, procure, command, counsel or advice any person or persons whatsoever, to do or commit any piracies or robberies upon the sea, and such perfon or perrons shall thereupon do or commit any such piracy or robbery, then all and every such person or persons whatsoever so as aforesaid setting forth any pirate, or aiding or affilling, maintaining, procuring, commanding, counselling or advising the same, either in the making thereon or the setting forth the same, shall be adjudged to be accessory to such piracy and robbery done and committed. And farther, that after any piracy or robbery is or shall be committed by any pirate or robber whatsoever, every perfon or persons, who, knowing that such pirate or robber has done or committed such piracy and robbery, shall upon the land or upon the water receive, entertain, harbour, or receive, take into his custody any ship, vessel, goods or chattel, which have been by any such pirate or robber piratical and feloniously taken, shall be by this statute likewise adjudged to be accessory to such piracy and robbery; and that all such accedences to such piracies and robberies shall be inquired of, heard and determined, and adjudged according to the common course of the law, according to the said statute of 28 Hen. 8. as the principals of such piracies and robberies may be, and no otherwise, and being thereupon attainted shall suffer such pains of death, lots of lands, goods and chattels, and in like manner as the principals of such piracies and robberies may be, and no otherwise, shall be by this act declared to be accessory to the said piracies and robberies, as the said statute of 28 Hen. 8. doth declare to be in full force; any thing in the act to the contrary notwithstanding."

And by 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11. "All persons who shall commit any offence for which they ought to be adjudged pirates, felons or robbers by 11 & 12 W. 3. may be tried, and determined as by the said statute of 28 Hen. 8. and shall be excluded from their clergy. By the 8 Geo. 1. cap. 24. for the more effectual suppressing of piracy, it is declared and enacted, "That if any commander or master of any ship or vessel, or any other perfon or persons, shall any wife trade with any pirate, by trade, barter, exchange or in any other manner, or shall furnish any pirate, felon or robber upon the seas with any ammunition, provision or stores of any kind, or shall fit out any ship or vessel knowingly, or with a design to trade with or supply, or corresponde with any pirate, felon or robber upon the seas; or if any person or persons shall any ways conspire, combine or confederate with any pirate, felon or robber upon the seas, knowing him to be guilty of any such piracy, felony or robbery; such offender and offenders, and every of them, shall in each and every of the said cafes be deemed, adjudged and taken to be guilty of piracy, felony and robbery, and he and they shall amaze the goods and Chattels, bear avengeance, make all or any of the matters aforesaid, according to the first made 28 Hen. 8. for pirates, and the statute made 11 & 12 W. 3. and he and they being convicted of all or any of the matters aforesaid, shall suffer such pains of death, lots of lands, goods and chattels, as pirates, felons and robbers upon the seas ought to suffer; and in case any perfon or persons belonging to any ship or vessel whatsoever, upon meeting any merchant ship or vessel
For prevention of seamen or mariners defecting merchant ships or vessels abroad in the plantations, or in any other parts of the world where the chief occasion of their turning pirates, and of great detriment to trade and navigation, and is chiefly occasioned by the owner or owners of ships or vessels paying wages to the seamen or mariners when abroad, it is enacted, 'That no master or owner of any merchant ship or vessel shall pay or advances, or cause to be paid or advanced to any seaman or mariner, during the time he shall be in parts beyond the seas, any money or effects upon account of wages, exceeding one moiety of the wages which shall be due at the time of such payment, until such ship or vessel shall return to Great Britain or Ireland, or the plantations, or to some other of his Majesty's dominions whereeto they belong, and from whence they were first fitted out; and if any such master or owner of such merchant ship or vessel shall pay or advance, or cause to be paid or advanced, any wages to any seaman or mariner above the said moiety, such master or owner shall forfeit and pay double the money which he shall pay or advance, to be recovered in the high court of admiralty by any person who shall first discover and inform for the fame.

Platina, Dean, or pleadings, or debarces and trials at law. Placito is a word often mentioned in our hisories and law books: At first it signified the public affemblies of all degrees of men, where the King prefided and where the public were often told about the great affairs of the kingdom, and these were called generalia placito, because generalitas universorum hominum tam clericorum quam laicorum itinerum comitabantur. This was the custom in our neighbouring nation of France, as well as here, as we are told by Hume, De Ordine Palatii, cap. 20, and by Blackstone, in his Annuals of Prince in the year 1767.

Some of our historians, as Simeon of Durham, and others, who wrote 300 years afterwards, tells us, that these assemblies were held in the open fields: Nullam eum spasit Regem in litinis officinarum curia, ubi Rex ju-dicat in aperto, ibi est curia fas. Some are of opinion, that these Placita generalis, and Curiae Regis, were what we now call a parliament: "This true, the lords courts were so called, viz. Placita generalis, but officer Curiae generalis, because all their tenants and vassals were bound to appear there.

We also meet with Placitum miniatum, i.e. the day appointed for a criminal to appear, and to make his defense. Leg. 111. 1. cap. 70, 46, 50. Placito fratrum, i.e. when the day is past. Leg. 111. 1. cap. 59.
My Lord Coke tells us, that the word is derived from placenta, quae bene placentis forae satura placet: This seems to be a very fanciful derivation of the word: It seems rather to be derived from the German platz, or from the Latin platurus, i.e. fields or fereers where these assemblies or courts were first held. But this word placet did sometimes signify penalties, fines, mulcts, or emendations, according to Gerofes of Tilbury, or the Black Book in the Exchequer, lib. 2. tit. 13. Placita autem dicimus paenae temporariam in quibus incidunt delinquentes. So in the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 17, 15. Hence the old rule of custom Omne habit tenuit denarium placitum, is to be thus understood; the Exil of the county shall have the third

Pleas, (Placitum, from the Saxon plac, or pleb, i.e. juris actus,) Signifies that which either party alleged for himself in court, which was wanted to be done in French from the conquest until Edward the Third, who ordained them to be done in English, in the 35th year of his reign, cap. 15. This term divided into Placitum of the Crown and Common Pleas. Pleas of the Crown of Scotland are four, viz. robbery, rape, murder, and wilful fire. Sacra de verb. signif. verbo Placitum. With us they are all suits in the King's name, against officers committed against his Crown and dignity. Staunf. Pl. Cap. cap. 1. Or against his Crown and dignity. Staunf. Pl. Cap. cap. 9. And those seem to be treasons, felonies, mifprisions of either, and malinois. Geo. 4. cap. 14. Edward the First enfeoff'd Walter de Burg, in the land of Oiler in Ireland, excepting the pleas of the Crown, to wit, rape, horrid, wilful firing, and treason-trove. Camb. 11. Ireland, c. 2. Sect. 3. Pleas of the Crown, without, and those without and pleasurable to them, a suite, cap. 11. Pleas are of that specification, that pleas be with us, and pleasurable to them, with equity, Edin. in verbo Final, verbo Placitare.

enacted by the 36 Ed. 3. cap. 15. which statute was made to abolish a law introduced by William the Conqueror, which ordained, that the pleadings in all courts of justice should be in French. 4 Bac. Abr. 1. 10 Co. 132.

But now by a 4 Geo. 2. cap. 26. it is enacted, That all writs, process, pleadings, rules, indentures, records, and all proceedings in any courts of justice within England, and all pleadings in any courts in Scotland, shall be in that English tongue, and be written in such common hand as acts of parliament are usually ingrossed in, the lines and words to be written at least as close as the said acts usually are, and not abbreviated; and all persons offending against this act, shall forfeit 50l. to any person who will sue for the same. By 6 Geo. 2. cap. 14. it is provided, That the above penalty shall not be extended to the expressing the names of writs, or technical words in the same language, as hath been used, nor to abbreviations used in the English language.

In pleading there are several general rules laid down in our books; by that good master must be pleaded in right form, apt time and due order, but that, that which is but inducement or conveyance to the subsidence, need not be so certain and accurate, as that which is the gist of the plea. Co. Lit. 303. Plow. 56. 81. 1 St. Jaw. 362.

That which is apparent to the courts, and appears from the nature of the action in the record, need not be averred. Co. Lit. 303. 7 Co. 40.

That every man's plea shall be taken most strongly against himself, as every body is presumed to make the most of his own case. Dyr 16. Co. Lit. 303. Hdb. 234. Laish 186.

That what the parties have agreed in pleading shall be admitted, tho' the jury find otherwise. 2 Mod. 5.

That when a man will recover a thing from another, it is not enough for him to destroy such person's title, but he must prove his own a better, according to the rule, mater est conditionis, &c. Faugb. 58. 60. Co. Lord Faughan.

That every man shall plead such pleas as are pertinent and proper for him, according to the quality of his case, estate or interest. Co. Lit. 285. 303.

That the law requires in every plea two things, the one, that it be in matter sufficient, the other, that it be deduced and expounded according to the forms of law; and the other party may, by the wants of the plea, be caused of dammner. Hdb. 164. Co. Lord Hakart.

That every plea in bar, being a confession and avoidance of the plaintiff's action, must be substantive and certain, with an avoidance of the plaintiff's demands, which he may traverse, and thereon go to issue, because the plaintiff's plea is null confusion, as far as it is not avoided by the defendant. Dyr 66. Gedh. 253. 1 Lem. 78.

That if a count, senvory (which is in nature of a count) replication, &c. want form, or omit circumstance of time, place, &c. they may be made good by the replication, and the replication by the rejoinder. Ut. 7 Co. 25. a. 8 Co. 120. Co. Lit. 372.

That all pleas must be alleged directly, and not by way of reprehens; nor is it sufficient, that what ought to be expressly pleaded, may be deducted by argument from what is pleaded. Co. Lit. 303.

That in matters triable by our law, all things insufiuble ought to be specially alleged in order to have a convenient trial; but in matters spiritual the law is otherwise, because there is no peril in the trial, and therefore if certain enough to ground a certificate, it is sufficient. 3 Lem. 300.

That where one is authorized to do a thing by Common law, statute, custom, grant or commission, be ought to shew, that he hath purposed the subsidence of it accordingly. Co. Lit. 303.

That general estates in fee-simple may be generally alleged; as that if. S. was feigned in fee; but the commencement of particular estates must be shewn, because they could not originally commence, without a conveyance, which must be shewn, unless they be alleged by way of inducement only. Co. Lit. 212. a. 303.

Plea of the fraud. Placita ad gladium. Ranulf the third Earl of Chester, in the second year of Henry the Third, granted to his barons of Cheshire a simple charter of liberties, Exceptis placitis ad gladium maxims. See Pat. in archives Regis infra concessam Grefina. 3 E. 4. The reason why William the Conqueror gave the Earldom of Chester to his kinman Hugh, commonly called Luptus, ancestor to the Earl Ranulf, Tenia iniblib forbidden to be libidinum, fictit infra Rex Williamus tenet Anglicam pro cernam. And constant hereunto in all inducments for felony, murder, &c. in this case only the form was anciently, Conspec pacem Domini comitis, gladium & dignitas sua, or Cons. dignitas gladium caufer. These were the pledges of the ducity of the Earl of Chester. Sir Peter Leisier's Hist. Antig. fol. 164. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Plebantia, Plebnahis sceltoa, A mother church, which has one or more subordinate chapels. Cowell, ed. 1727.

Plebanatus, A rural dean, because the deaneries were commonly affixed to the plebanie or chief mother churches within such a district, at first commonly of ten parishes. But it is inferred from several authorities, that plebanus was not the usual title for every rural dean, but for such a dean in a country parish, exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary, who had not before the authority of a rural dean committed to him by the archbishop, to whom the church was immediately subject. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Pledge, (Plegius, may be derived from the Fr. pleger fidigue, as pledger æuumum, i. falsi jure pro aliquo, to be surety for a person; in the same figurigation is pledge, used by Glanvill, lib. 10. co. 5. and plegiatus for the act of suretyship in the interpreter of the Grand Coufian of Normandy, cap. 60. Plegi dictur peronum, quam obligant ad box, ad quod quis eis mittit, etc. &c. and the same book, cap. 69. 90. plegiatus is used in the same sense with Glanville; to obi plagi are used for pledge, Plegius. Pleg. Oculi. part. cap. 22. Charta de Forella. Th word plegius is used also for Frank-pledge sometimes, in the end of William the Conqueror's law, set out by Lambard, in his Archivum. fol. 125. in these words Omnium homo qui voluntueri faci, etc. in fit plegnas in regno, to obi plegias, fit quod offenderit, &c. and these are called capital pledges. Kitchin, fol. 11. See Co. 4. Inf. fol. 180.

When writs were delivered to the sheriff to be by his return into C. B. he was obliged before the return thereof to take pledges of prosecution, which when the distance was considerable, were real an responsible persons, and answerable for these amends. But they being now so inconsiderable, there as only formal pledges entered, viz. John Doe and Richar Rex. But there is a difference in debt and in trespass for in trespass the attachment of the goods is in the hands, and because the defendant is thereby hurt, there fore the writ commits the sheriff to take pledges before he executes the process. But in debt they begin with a summons, and so the defendant is not hurt in the first instance, and therefore there is no command in the writ to the sheriff to take pledges, but unless he does, that is not a sufficient authority from the return to warrant further process, unless pledges are put in above, as in R. they always do on the bill. The reason why pledge were not taken in Chancery, but committed to the sheriff, was, that he living in the county was suppos'd to know who were sufficient security, and being to levy amercement afterward, they were to take ample security for it. Pledge or Pledgor, (French pléger, Latin fidem). For the security of the money lent, and for the pledge to be taken and delivered to his agents, if the debtor fails to appear, the pledge shall require the confable and marshal to deliver his pledge, and to discharge them of their legory; and the confable and marshal shall have leave of the King to acquire his pledge, after that the applicant has come in his lift, C. Ca. ed. 1727.

Pledging. In cases of chancery and chancels are delivered security for money lent, and by such pledging the pawnbroker hath more than the naked poiffession in the nature of a bailment; for he hath the property and interest in the thing itself; and by the better opinions, shall have a reasonable use of it, so that it be without damage to the pledgee. D. and S. 173. 1 Ed. 358, 673. Owen 124, 2 Salt. 522.

If a man pledge goods to B. and they are stolen, B. shall not answer for them, because he hath a property in them; and his custody is but a consequent of that property; and therefore he doth undertake to keep them in his own; for a man that undertakes to secure what is his master's is bound to keep them at all adventures, since he right owner might possibly defend them with his life; and where a man is only obliged to keep them as his own, an unavoidable accident is to be imputed to him. Co. a. 89. a. 3 Jul. 108. 4 Co. 83. Palm. 531. Owen 124, 2 Salt. 522. C. Jur. 244. 1 Bull. 29, 20. 3 Rep. 181.

But if a man pledges goods, and tenders the money to the pawnbroker, and he refuses, this determines the unpledged property, and therefore if after such tender the goods are stolen, the bailor shall have satisfaction made to him in an action of trespass; for a tender and a reful of the goods amount to a payment; because the other man could not again come to his own, since the money is over the value lent. C. Jur. 243. Yelv. 79. 1 Bull. 29. Br. Bailment 7. 1 Rep. 129. 2 Salt. 89.

And though the borrower tenders the money, and ren- dens the goods in an action of trespass, yet the pawn- broker may have an action of debt for his money; because though the security ceases, yet the debt remains, as much as the money lent is not paid back to the party whom it came. C. Jur. 243. Telv. 179. 1 Bull. 29. 31.

And if a man lends perifhable goods as a pledge, and say decay, yet the person to whom they are pledged, shall have an action of debt for his money, because the duty continues. Telv. 179. Co. Lit. 209.

These goods thus taken to pledge, cannot be forfeited by the pawnbroker for his offence, nor can they be taken in execution, nor attached, as they are real estate; and therefore they are not alienable, nor by confent forfeitable; because they cannot be forfeited without los and danger to the absolute owner; and all qualified poiffessors do take the property under the refraction to prefer the property of the right owner. Br. Attachment in 120. 10.

A man pledge goods, and after is attained of fe- nor, the King shall not have the goods without paying the funeral for which they were pledged; for the alteration of the general property doth not alter the special property in the pawnbroker. 2 H. 7, 1 Bull. 29.

If a man pledge goods, and then is outlawed, he cannot redeem them as soon as the absolute property of him in the King's; but if the outlawry is reversed, then the outlawed person is reinstated in his property as if there had been no outlawry, and therefore may redeem them, 1 Bull. 29.

If the money be not paid at the day, the property is absolute at law, but till the right owner has his redemption in equity, as in case of a mortgage. C. Lit. 105. 166.

One pawned jewels to A. who signed a writing that they were to be redeemed in twelve months; otherwise the 120. last lent they were to be as bought and sold; and within a short time after delivers over the jewels, together with some plate of his own to B. as a pledge for 200l.

afterwards A. borrowed 38l. and 50 l. of B. on promis- toy notes, to be repaid on demand; B. by his anwser in Chancery, infifted it was agreed that the pledge should be restored. In the meantime the notes, as for the money first lent, but could make no remonstrance by such promise or agreement; and though a redemption was decreed, yet it was on payment of all that was due to B. as well upon the notes as on the pawns; but the goods of A. which were pawned were to be first applied as far as the value of the notes would extend. 2 Vern. 177, 698, 699. Atr. Co. in Eq. 754.

In the old books they took the nature of a pledge to be, that it ought to be delivered at the same time that the money was lent; and if the goods were not delivered at the same time, in security of the money, they did not plead it as a pledge, but in the nature of a li- ence to execute it for the same. 5 Hen. 7, 31.

But byatter authorities it appears, that the pawn- broker hath a special property, though it be not delivered at the time of the money lent. 2 Leom. 30. Telv. 164.

As if A. be indebted to B. and delivers goods to C. in satisfaction for the debt of B., the property is thereby altered, and the right to the goods is vested in B. so it is where the goods are delivered to C. in satisfaction of the money of B. there B. hath a special property in them, and in these cases A. cannot countermand such delivery to C. or take the goods back again, because the property of these goods is vested in B. for here is a confederation to alter the property, and that is the debt due to B. but that does not. The party may possibly revoke before the poiffession be vested in C. himself, for ex. nudo pacto non uritur aitio: for there is no confederation to found an action on a naked donation, but here there is a confederation to alter the property; so that upon the immediate delivery of the goods, the property is vested in B. 2 Leom. 31. 31. Pleure administrativus, Is a plea pleaded by an executor or administrator, where they have administered the deceased's estate faithfully and justly before the action brought against them. On pleure administrativus pleaded by an executor, if it be proved that he hath goods in his hands which were the testator's, he may give in evidence that he hath paid to the value of his money, and need not plead it to the full to prove that the executor before the action had paid the money in equal degree with that demanded by the plaintiff, he may plead fully administered generally, and give the special matter in evidence. 2 Lill. Art. 330. And where a testator or in- testate was indebted to the executor or administrator, upon bond, they may plead pleure administrativus, and give their own bonds in evidence against any other bond; so likewise upon an indebitatus, having the privi- lige of paying themselves first. Ibid. Pleure admini- strativus is no plea where an executor, &c. is sued in the debt and denies, because he is charged for his own oc- cupation, in equity. And if pleure administrativus was pleaded, omitting the words, 'and that he hath not any other goods or chattels of the testator, nor had on the day of exhibiting the bill aforesaid, or at any time after, &c.' it is naught on a demurrer, and not helped by verdict. Plurality, (Pluralitas, mentioned in flat. 21 Hen. 8.
cap. 13.) The having more than one, chiefly applied to some churchesmen, who have two, three or more benefices. Selden, in his Titles of Honour, fol. 587; mentions this subject. See Institute. edit. 1727, C. 11.

Plurality of livings, Is where the same person obtains two or more spiritual preferments, with cure of souls; in which case the first is void ipso facto, and the patron can prefer to it, if the clerk be not qualified by dispenation, &c. for the law enjoins reliance, and it is impossible that the same person can reside in two places as clerk, at the same time. Pam. Common. 94. By the Canon law no ecclesiastical person can hold two benefices with a cure simul et simul, but that upon taking the second benefice, the first is void; but the pope by dispensation did dispense with that law; and at first every bishop had power to grant dispensations for pluralities, till it was abolished by the council, held ann. 1215, and this confutation was received till the statute 21 H. 8. c. 12.
Mort 119. 2 Nofj. Abr. 1271. The flat. 21 H. 8. ordains, That if any person having one benefice with cure, of the yearly value of 8l. or above, in the King's books, accepts of another benefice with cure, and is instituted and inducted, then the first shall be void: So that there must be a residue of a benefice within the statute; and a plurality by the Canon law. 2 Latro. 1506. The power of granting dispensations to hold two benefices with cure, &c. is vested in the King by the aforesaid statute: and it has been judged, that a dispensation is not necessarly for a plurality, where the King presents his chaplain to a second benefice without a dispensation, a preventum temporis, which the King hath power to grant as supreme ordinary.
But if such a chaplain be presented to a second benefice by a subjule, he must have a dispensation before he is instituted to it. 1 Salic. 161. The archbishop's dispensation and King's confirmation, regularly are necessarly to hold pluralities; and the statute 21 H. 8. ought to be confidered strictly, because it introduces non-refulence and plurality of benefices against the Common law. 2 Nof.

1. Statutes concerning the poor.

Stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 2. sect. 1. It be enabled by the authority of the present parliament, That the churchwardens of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, as shall be thought meet, having respect to the proportion and greatness of the same parishes and parishes, to be nominated yearly in Easter week, or within one month after Easter, and under the hand and seal of two or more justices of the peace in the name of the says shall be of the commonwealth, dwelling in the same parish or division where the same parishes doth lie, shall be called overseers of the poor of the same parish: And they, or the greater part of them, shall take order from time to time, by and with the consent of two or more of such justices of peace, as is aforesaid, for fitting to work the children of such whose parents shall not by the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to keep and maintain their children: and also for fitting to work all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, to use no ordinary and daily trade of life to get their living by: And aforesaid, for putting out such children, and not able to work, and also for the putting out such children to be apprentices to be, whosoever, to the ability of the same parish; and to do and execute all other things, as well for the discharging of the said fock, or otherwise concerning the premises, as to them shall seem convenient.

Sect. 2. Which said churchwardens and overseers so to be nominated, or such of them as shall not be by sickness, or other ill justify to be allowed by two such justices of peace or more, as is aforesaid, shall meet together at the least once every month, in the church of the said parish, upon the Sunday in the afternoon, after Divine service, there to consider of some good course to be taken, and for some meet order to be fett down in the premises, and shall within four days after the end of their year, and after other things respecting their said office, and the sum or sums of money as shall be in their hands, and shall pay and deliver over to the said churchwardens and overseers newly nominated and appointed, as aforesaid; upon pain that every one of them abettling them without lawful cause, as aforesaid, from such monthly meeting for the purpose aforesaid, or being negligent in their office, or in the execution of the orders aforesaid, made made by and with the assent of the said justices of peace, or any two of them before-mentioned, to forfeit for every such default of absence or negligence 20 l.

Sect. 3. And it is hereby enacted, that if such justices of peace do perceive, that the inhabitants of any parish are not able to levy among themselves sufficient sums of money for the purposes aforesaid, then the said two justices shall and may tax, rate, and asfess, as aforesaid, any other of other parishes, or out of any parish within the hundred, or within the county, or shall, at their discretion, or the greater number of them, shall rate and asfess, as aforesaid, any other of other parishes, or out of any parish within the county for the purposes aforesaid, as in their discretion shall seem fit.

Sect. 4. And that it shall be lawful, as well for the present as subsequent churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, by warrant from any such two justices of the peace, as is aforesaid, to levy as well the said sums of money, and all arrearages, of every one that shall refuse to contribute according as they shall be asfessed, by diftreffes and fale of the offender's goods, as the sums of money shall be due and owing upon any account to be made, as aforesaid, rendering in such manner as the said justices shall direct, in the overplus: And in default of such diftreffes, it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until payment of the said sums, arrearages and flocks. And the said justices of peace, or any of them, to send to the house of correception, or common gaol, such as shall not employ themselves to work, being appointed thereto as aforesaid; and also any such two justices of peace to commit to the said prison every one of the said churchwardens and overseers which shall refuse to account, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until he have made a true account, and satisfied and paid so much, as upon the said account shall be remaining in his hands.

Sect. 5. Enact., That churchwardens and overseers may bind poor children apprentices, and that they may by leave of the lord of the manor build houfes on the waste for the poor to inhabit, but not to be afterwards used by the inmates, nor any of any others, on the pains contained in the 31 Eliz.

Sect. 6. Provided always, That if any perfon or persons shall find themselves griev'd with any feds or tax, or other aét done by the said churchwardens or other persons, or by the said justices of peace; that then it shall be lawful for the justices of peace at their general quarter-feftions, or the greater number of them, to take such order therein, as to them shall be thought conuenient; and the fame to conclude and bind all the said parties.

Sect. 7. Enact., That the father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children of every poor person, or any of them, no other being present, it being a poor person not able to work, being of a sufficient abihty, fhall at their charges relieve and maintain every such poor person in that manner, and according to that rate, as by the justifes of peace of that county where such deficient persons dwell, or the greater number of them; or any other of their charges, shall be asfessed upon pain that every one of them shall forfeit 20 l. for every month which they shall fail therein.

Sect. 8. Mayors, &c. of corporations being justifes of peace, shall have the fame authority within their limits, as justifes of peace of the county. And every alderman of London shall have the power for much, as is appointed and allowed by this aët to be done by or two justifes of peace of any county within this realm.

Sect. 9. And be it also enacted, That if it shall happen any parish to extend itself into more counties than one, or part to lie within the liberties of any city, town or place corporate, and part without, that then as well the justices of peace of every county, as also the head officers of such city, town or place corporate, shall deal and administer the law in the same, as far as may concern the said parish as lies within their liberties, and not any farther.

And every of them respectively within their several limits, wards and jurisdictions, to execute the ordinances before-mentioned concerning the nomination of overseers, the content of binding apprentices, the giving warrant to bring their goods to market, the supporting of churchwardens and overseers, and the committing to prison, as if it shall happen them to be within the county of the town or place corporate, and one other, before the said justices of peace, or any such two of them, as is aforesaid.

Sect. 10. For not appointing overseers yearly, every justice, &c. of the division shall forfeit 5 l.

Sect. 11. The penalties and forfitures in this aët shall be employed to the use of the poor of the fame parish, by diftreffes and fale, or in default thereof, the offender shall be committed to prison, there to remain without bail or mainprize, till the said forfitures shall be satisfied and paid.

Sect. 12. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the justices of peace of every county or place corporate, or the more part of them, in their general feffions to be holden next: after the feast of Eliz. next, and so yearly as often as they shall think meet, shall rate every parish to a weekly sum of money as they shall think convenient, fo as no parish be rated above the sum of 6 d. nor under the sum of one halfpenny, weekly to be paid, and as the total sum of such taxation of the parishes in every county amount not above the rate of 2 d. for every parish within the said county.

Which sums for taxed shall be yearly asfessed by the agreement of the parishioners within themselves, or in default thereof, by the churchwardens and petty confables of the same parish, or the more part of them, or in default of their agreement, by order of such justice or justices of peace as shall dwell in the same parish, or (if none be there dwelling) in the parishes next adjoining. And if any person or persons shall be so negligent, or neglect to pay any such portion of money so taxed, it shall be lawful for the said churchwardens and confables, or any of them, or in default thereof, for any justice of the said liberty, to levy the same by diftreffes and fale of the goods of the party so refusing or neglecting, rendering to the party the overplus. And in default of further steps, it shall be lawful to any justice of that limit to commit such person to the said prison, there to abide without bail or mainprize till he have paid the fame.

Sect. 13. Provided always, That whereas the ifland of Paulinf in the county of Eliz. being environed with the sea, and having a chapel or eafe for the inhabitants thereof, and being always in a state of danger, or out of the reach of the church wardens of the same, and the fame are situated within divers parishes far distant from the said ifland; Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the said justices of peace shall nominate and appoint inhabitants within the said ifland, to be overseers for the poor people dwelling within the said ifland, and that both the said justices and the said overseers shall have the same power and authority to all intents, confederations and purposes, for the execution of the parts, and articles of this aët, and shall be subject to the fame pains and forfeitures; and likewise, that the inhabitants and occupiers of lands there shall be liable to be chargeable to the same payments and exercises and orders, in such manner and form as if the said ifland were a parish. In consideration whereof, neither the said inhabitants, or occupiers of land within the said ifland, shall not be compelled to contribute towards the relief of the poor of those parishes wherein their house over, and the reasons of their taking relief examined, and a new list made and entred of such persons as they shall think fit and allow to receive collection; and no other person shall be allowed to receive collection at the charge of the parich, but by authority under the hand of one justice residing within such parich, or (if none be there dwelling) of such persons or body of persons as shall be chosen by the order of the justices in feisions, except in cases of pestilential diseases, plague or small pox, for such families as shall be therewith infected.

Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. feet. 2. Every person who shall be upon the collection, and receive relief of any person charged with' the charge of the poor, or who shall be the party of any parich, or other place of publick meeting, or of any persons cohabiting in the same house, such child only excepted, as shall be by the churchwardens and overseers permitted to live at home, in order to attend an impotent and helpless parent, shall upon the shoulder of the fleece of the uppermost garment, in an open and visible manner, wear a large Roman P, together with the first letter of the name of the parich or place, whereof such poor person is an inhabitant, cut either in red or blue cloth, as by the churchwardens and overseers shall be directed: And if any such poor person shall neglect or refuse to wear such badge, or mark, or shall be found, having his allowance to be abridged, suspended or withdrawn, or otherwise by committing him to the house of correction, to be whipped, and kept to hard labour, or exceeding 21 days, and if any churchwarden or overseer shall relieve such poor person, not wearing such badge, and be thereof convicted of the same, one or before one justice, he shall forfeit 20s. by distress, half to the informer, and half to the poor.

Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 8. feet. 1. Whereas sometimes men run away, leaving their wives and children, and sometimes women run away, leaving their children, upon the charge of the parich, although not to receive any benefit to themselves, or any other estate which should ease the parich of their charge, in whole or part; it shall be lawful for the churchwardens or overseers, where any such wife, child or children shall be so left, on application to, and by warrant or order of two justices, to take and receive what is part of the goods and chattels, and receive so much of the annual rents and profits of the lands and tenements of such husband, father or mother, as such two justices shall order and direct, towards the discharge of the parich or place where such wife, child or children are left, for the bringing up and providing for such wife, child or children; which warrant or order being confirmed at any general feisions, it shall be lawful for the justices there, to make an order for the churchwardens or overseers, to dispence of such goods or chattels by sale or otherwise, or so much of them, for the purposes aforesaid, as the court shall think fit, and to receive the rents and profits, or so much of them as shall be ordered by the said feisions, of his or her lands and tenements for the purposes aforesaid.

Sec. 2. And the said churchwardens and overseers shall be accountable to the justices at the quarter-seisions for all such money as they shall receive.

9 Geo. 1. c. 7. feet. 1. enacts, That no justice of peace shall order relief to any poor person dwelling in any parich till oath made of some reasonable cause for it, and that he had applied to the parishioners at vestry, or some publick meeting, or to two overseers of the poor, and was refused, and still summoned of two overseers of the poor to shew cause.

Sec. 2. And any person ordered to be relieved shall be entered in the parish books, to be relieved so long as the cause for relief continues, and no longer. And if any parish officer (except upon sudden and emergent occasions) doth give any relief to any person not ordered to be so given to any person not registered, he shall forfeit 5l. to be levied by distress and sale, by warrant of two justices, to be applied to the use of the poor of the said parich by direction of such justices.

Sec. 4. It shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers, in any parish, township, or place, with the consent content of the major part of the parishioners or inhabitants in the several parishes, townships or places, as shall be put out of the collection book, and not to be intituled to have relief.

Whereas great inconveniences do often arise in cities, towns, corporal bodies, or societies, with the consent of the major part of the parishioners or inhabitants of the said parish, townships or places, as shall be put out of the collection book, and not to be intituled to have relief.

Stat. 17 Geo. 2. cap. 3, sect. 1. Whereas great inconveniences do often arise in cities, towns, corporal bodies, or societies, with the consent of the major part of the parishioners or inhabitants of the said parish, townships or places, as shall be put out of the collection book, and not to be intituled to have relief.

Stat. 17 Geo. 2. cap. 3, sect. 1. Whereas great inconveniences do often arise in cities, towns, corporal bodies, or societies, with the consent of the major part of the parishioners or inhabitants of the said parish, townships or places, as shall be put out of the collection book, and not to be intituled to have relief.
ace and by virtue thereof, shall extend to, or be deemed continued to extend to, or in any wife affect or determine the bounds of any parishes or parochial places, or to any intent or purposes, other than for the purpose of rating and assessing such lands, tenements and hereditaments to the relief of the poor, and to all other parochial rates within such parochial place or to which they shall be allotted as aforesaid.

Stat. 17. sec. 9. and 10. Whereas by reason of some defect in an act of parliament made in the forty-third year of the reign of the late Queen Elizabeth, intitled, An act for the relief of the poor, the money raised or that purpose is liable to be misapplied, and there is seen great difficulty and delay in raling of the funds necessary for the support of the poor, whereas it is manifest that from and after the first day of July, 1744, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall yearly and every year, within fourteen days after their overseers shall be nominated and appointed to succeed them, deliver in to such succeeding overseers, a full, true and perfect account in writing, fairly entered in a book, ten, to be kept for that purpose, and signed by the aforesaid churchwardens and overseers, hereby directed to account as aforesaid, under their hands, of all sums of money by them received, or rated and assessed and not received, and also of all goods, chattels, stock and materials that shall be in their hands, or under their control, to be written, and of all monies paid by such churchwardens and overseers to accounting, and of all other things concerning their said office, and shall also pay and deliver over all sums of money, goods, chattels and other things as shall be in their hands, unto such succeeding overseers of the poor; which funds shall be verified by oath, or by the affixing of persons called Quakers, before one or more of his Majesty's officers of the peace, which said oath or affirmation such officers or justices is and are hereby authorized and required to administer, and to sign and attest the said oath, or the act of the said officers or justices, and the copy of the said oath or affirmation of persons, or the book or books or books of such as shall be carefully preserved by the churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, in some publick or other place in every parish, township or place; and they shall and are hereby required to permit any person then affecting or liable to be affixed to insert the same at all reasonable times, paying such expense for such inspection, and shall upon demand forthwith give such copies of the same, or any part thereof, to such person, paying at the rate of sixpence for every three hundred words, and so in proportion for any greater or less number.

Stat. 2. And it is hereby further enacted, That in case any churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or any of them, shall refuse or neglect to make and yield up such account verified as aforesaid, within the time herein before limited or appointed, or shall refuse or neglect to pay and deliver over such sums or sums of money, goods, chattels and other things in their hands, as by this act is directed, shall remove as aforesaid, be fined before such removal deliver over to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place, his accounts verified as aforesaid, with all rates, assessments, books, papers, sums of money and other things concerning his office, under the like penalties as are inflicted by this act on any other person after the expiration of his office; and if any overseer shall die as aforesaid, his executors or administrators shall within forty days after his decease deliver over all things concerning his office to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place, and shall pay out of the affiox left by such overseer all sums of money remaining due which he received by virtue of his said office, before any of his other debts are paid and satisfied.

Stat. 4. And in case any person or persons find him, her or themselves aggrieved by any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, or shall have any material objection to any person or persons being put under the charge of such rate or assessment, they shall, before they shall bring his Majesty's justices of the peace; it shall and may be lawful for such person or persons in any of the cases aforesaid, giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish, townhip or place, to appeal to the next general or quarter-feelions of the peace for the county, riding, division, corporation or franchise, where such parish, township or place lies; and the justices of the peace there assembled are hereby authorized and required to receive such appeal, and to hear and finally determine the same; but if it shall appear to the said justices that reasonable notice was not given, then they shall adjourn the said appeal to the next quarter-feelions, and then and there finally hear and determine the same; and the said justices may award and order to the party for whom such appeal shall be determined reasonable costs, in the same manner that they are empowered to do in case of appeals concerning the settlement of the poor, by an act of parliament in the twenty and ninth years of King William the Third, intituled, An act for applying some defects in the laws for relieving the poor of this kingdom.

Stat. 5. Provided always, That in all corporations or franchises, where have not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons in any of the cases aforesaid, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter-feelions of the peace for the county, riding or division wherein such corporation or franchise is situate.

Stat. 6. And whereas it hath been held, that upon appeals from rates and assessments, the justices of the peace may not only quash the old rates, but make new rates and assessments from which no appeal can be had; and it is enacted by the authority aforesaid, That upon all appeals from rates and assessments the justices of the peace (where they shall for the first time give relief) shall be hereby required to amend the same in such manner only, as shall be necessary for giving such relief, without altering such rates or assessments, with respect to other persons mentioned in the same; but if upon an appeal from the whole rate it shall be found necessary to quash or set aside the same; then and every such rate, the said justice shall and are hereby required to order and direct the churchwardens and overseers of the poor to make a new equal rate or assessment, and they are hereby required to make the same accordingly.

Stat. 7. And for the more effectual levying money aforesaid for the relief of the poor, it be enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the goods of any person alledged and refusing to pay, may be levied by warrant of distress not only in the place for which such assessment was made, but in any other place within the said county or precinct; and if sufficient distress cannot be found within the said county or precinct, on oath made thereof before some justice of any other county or precinct, (which oath shall be verified under the hand of such justice on the said warrant) such goods may be levied in such other county or precinct by virtue of such other warrant and certificate; and if any person shall find him or herself aggrieved by such distresses as aforesaid, shall and may be lawful for such person to appeal to the next general or quarter-feelions of the peace for the county or precinct where such assessment was made, and the justices there are hereby required to hear and finally determine the same.
Sect. 8. And to prevent all vexatious actions against overfeers of the poor, be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where any distresses shall be made for any sum or sums of money justly due for the relief of the poor, the distress itself shall not be deemed to be unlawful, nor the distress being thus made to be true, a treasurers, or overtreasurers, on account of any defect, or want of form in the warrant for the appointment of such overtreasurers, or in the rate or assessment, or in the warrant of distresses thereupon; nor shall the party or parties distraining be deemed a treasurers or overtreasurers * initia, on account of any irregularity which shall be afterwards done by the party or parties distraining; but the party or parties aggrieved by such irregularity, shall or may recover full satisfaction for the special damage, be, the or they shall have sustained thereby, and no more, in an action of trespass, or on the case, at the election of the plaintiff or plaintiff.

Sect. 9. Provided always, That where the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in such action, be, the or they, shall be paid his, her or their full costs of suit, and have all the like remedies for the same as in other cafes of costs.

Sect. 10. Provided nevertheless, That no plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover, by any action for any such irregularity as aforesaid, if tender of amends hath been made by the party or parties distraining, before such action brought.

Sect. 11. And in case any person or persons shall refuse to pay to such overtreasurers as aforesaid, any sum or sums of money due to them or they shall be legally rated or as aforesaid, shall and may be lawful to and for the succeeding overtreasurers, and they are hereby required to levy such arrears, and out of the money so levied to reimburse their predecessors all sums of money which they have expended for the use of the poor, and which are allowed to be due to them in their accounts as aforesaid.

Sect. 12. And whereas persons frequently remove out of parishes and places, without paying the rates aforesaid, and other persons do enter and occupy their houses or tenements part of the year, by reason whereof great sums are annually lost to such parishes and places; be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where any person or persons shall come into or occupy any house, land, tenement or hereditament or other premises, out of or from which any other person aforesaid shall be removed, or which at the time of making such rate was empty or unoccupied, that then every person removing from, and every person so coming into or occupying such a house, shall be liable to pay to such rate the proportion to the time that such person occupied the same respectably, in the same manner, and under the like penalty of distresses, as if such person so removing had not removed, or such person so coming in or occupying had been originally rated and aforesaid, and which proportion in case of dispute shall be ascertained by any two or more of his Majely's judges of the peace.

Sect. 13. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That true and just copies of all rates and aforesaid, hereafter to be made for the relief of the poor, be fairly wrote and entered in a book or books to be provided for that purpose by the churchwardens, and overseers of the poor of every parish, township or place, who shall take care that such copies be wrote and entered accordingly, within fourteen days after all appeals from such rates are determined, and shall attest the same by putting their names thereto; and all and every such book or books shall be carefully preserved by the churchwardens, and overseers of the poor for the time being, or one of them, in some public or other place in every such parish, township or place, whereunto all persons aforesaid, or liable to be aforesaid, may freely resort, and shall be delivered over from time to time to the new and succeeding churchwardens of the said parish, or place, or to such other persons as by the authority aforesaid, shall be appointed for the purpose of discharging the said duties and directions of this act, or any of them, when no penalty is before provided by this act, or shall aforesaid contrary thereto; every such churchwarden, overseer of the poor, or other officer so offending in the premises, shall for every such offence, on such thereof made within two years when committed, and before any two or more of his Majely's judges of the peace, be punished for the use of the poor of such parish, township or place, a sum not exceeding five pounds, or, if they be twenty twenty shillings, to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, by warrant from such churchwardens, which sum shall be paid to (name) the churchwarden or overseer of the poor of such parish, township or place, for the purpose aforesaid.

Sect. 15. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That overtreasurers of the poor within every township or place, where there are no churchwardens, shall perform and shall be bound to perform all the duties and powers and authorities concerning the relief of the poor, and other matters and things relating to the poor, as churchwardens and overseers of the poor may do, perform and execute by this act, or any former statute concerning the poor, and shall lose, forfeit and suffer all such fines and penalties for non-performance thereof, as churchwardens and overseers of the poor are liable to, by virtue of this or any former statute concerning the poor.

2. Of appointing overtreasurers; their duty; and of compelling them to account.

Churchwardens of every parish [See theflat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 1, in the preceding division of this title.—The] judicatures of peace, by the general words of this statute, have power to name overtreasurers in all parishes; and the court was of opinion, that it must extend as well to extraprochial places as to all parishes generally, and that no subsequent words shall controul the general words in the enacting part; and certainly all the poor aforesaid shall be confined to extend to such places as well as to other parishes, where they are within the same parish, and shall be subject to the control of the judicatures of peace.

Most of the forests in England are extraprochial, and so is Christ-church in Oxford, but they ought to maintain their own poor; therefore a peremptory mandamus was granted to the judicatures of peace to chuse overtreasurers in the town of Rufford, being an extraprochial place. 3 Mod. 39. Poph. 7 Geo. The King v. the inhabitants of Rufford. The town of this place might be a township or village. See Strat. Rep. 1003. 1071. 1143.

Four, three or two] Upon a motion to quash an indictment against B. for that he, with four others, was being appointed overtreasurers of the poor of such a parish, refused to take upon him that office, &c. It was objected, that the statute directs the nomination in but of four, and not of the aforesaid as much with the churchwardens. And per Parker Cb. J. That is very true, though in many places more are appointed than four; for the aforesaid four, three or two shall be nominated of the inhabitants, at the discretion of the justices (feil.) they may nominate four, three or two; in most parishes about London there are more than four, wherefore he said we need not determine upon this point; but the indictment was quashed for another fault. MS. Cofris. Trin. 11 Ann. B. R. Anon. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

But in Hill, term 3 Geo. 2. it was determined by the court of King's Bench, that no greater number than four can be appointed. See Barrow's Rep. 445—453.

Substantial holdoulers that] The appointment of overtreasurers must fill them substantial holdoulers. Strat. 1761.

It was moved for a mandamus to J. H. and J. T. justices of peace in the county of Dorset, ut. to nominate two substantial holdoulers to be overtreasurers of the poor of the parish of Charsfield in the county of Dorset upon upon this statute; and there was an affidavit, that at a meeting of the parish after Easter last, one John B. and Mary F. were elected overseers, and at a meeting of the justices they approved of Mr. B. and refused the woman, while the justices had voted to hold her, and the other overseers refusing to nominate any other, the justices approved the said B. only. Per Powell. A woman is not to be an overseer of the poor; and there can be no custom in a parish to put her in because of her being a housekeeper; because this is an officer created by act of parliament. Per Parker Ch. J. The position is to be by the justices, and it seems the overseers are to continue but one year. The parish here was obstinate in not having another instead of the woman, and the justices should have nominated one of the old ones, since they were so few; but (because the justices had done well in approving of the woman) he directed that they should apply to the justices to have another nominated, and if they refused, then to apply to the court for a mandamus the next term. MS. Cafes, Pash. 10 Ann. B. R. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

A citizen of London that lived in the country in the summer, was chose overseer of the poor of the parish; the court seemed to misconstrue such a choice of one that was resident there only for some part of the summer, and was actually an inhabitant of another parish in London. Cuth. 161. Mich. 2 W. 8. M. B. R. The King v. Moor. [This in Easter term, or within six month after Easter.] The court seemed to think an appointment of overseers on a Sunday, to be a good appointment; for it may be in Easter week, and this is the first day of the week. Fadly 4.

An appointment of overseers is good, tho' not made within one month after Easter. Stran. 1123.

And many other in England and Wales] See Bell. 42 S. 14 Car. 2. c. 12. sect. 21. in the preceding division of this title. In trespas a special verdict found this statute, and that the parishes of Kenilworth, in the county of Warwick (not being any of the counties named in this statute) is a large parish, having two townships, but it is not found that it is so large that parochial distribution cannot be made; and the question was, if the county of Warwick, not being named in the statute, shall be taken within the general words, (and divers other counties,) and Hopkins sergeant cited a case to be adjudged in C. B. two or three years ago, that the statute did not extend to other counties than those which are expressly named in this title. The court would see the said precedent before they gave judgment; by which adjournatur. 2 Lev. 142. Trin. 27 Car. 2. B. R. Stillingf. v. Norton. But afterwards in Mich. term it was adjudged, that this statute did not extend to any other counties, but only to those that are named expressly in the statute. Ibid. Prem. Rep. 401. p. 227. Trin. 1675. S. C. by name of Stillingf. v. Norton, where Hale Ch. J. said, by the words it seems to be intended for all counties in England, because the words are (or other counties) but Sergeant Hopkins cited the judgment in C. B. in case of Willes and Benner, between Chipping Campden and Broad Campden, Gloucestershire, where it was decided this statute extended to no counties but those named. Ibid. 442. Mich. 1675. S. C. The court gave judgment for the defendant, because though it was found to be a large parish, yet it was not found to be so big that by reason of the largeness thereof they could not reap the benefit of the act of 43 Eliz. according to the statute, and for that reason the court gave judgment, and for did not positively rule, that no other counties were within the act but those named; but Hale did now strongly incline that no other counties were within the act, and said the inconvenience would be very great; for by that means the poor boroughs would be charged with poor, and the will of the good inhabitants, and perhaps no poor, would be at no charge at all. But 2 Salk. 486. pl. 44. in marg. there is a note, That in the case of the inhabitants of Stokeland and Dolting, Hill 1 Ann. B. B. it was adjudged by Parker Ch. J. and the whole court, That by virtue of this act the justices may exercise the powers given by 43 Eliz. and this act in all extrarapochial places containing more houses than one, as to come under the denomination of a vil or township. And in the case of Hinam and Churcham parishes in Gloucestershire, Hill 1738. Lee Ch. J. cited the said case of Stokeland and Dolting, in which he said, it was held, that this statute extended by equity to all the parishes in England, and that it was so held upon great deliberation. 16 Vin. Abr. 421.

Every poor, needy, impotent and lame person] This statute relates only to the maintenance of poor and impotent persons, and not to bards, who are provided for by other statutes. Per Seit. 73. Hill. 5 Ann. B. R. in case of The parish of Budworth v. The township of Duns-ley. [Two or three overseers of the poor] The court held, that this clause plainly extends to towns and villages in extrarapochial places as well as within parishes; for the law makers had in view the inconvenience, that some towns and villages would have the benefit of 43 Eliz. This statute is of (towns, &c. in counties) and not (in parishes); and towns and villages in extrarapochial places are plainly within the words, though not directly within the view of the act; and though there be not officers appointed to this extrarapochial places, yet the justices ought to do it upon complaint. MS. Cafes, Hill 11 Ann. 16 Vin. Abr. 421.

Where the parish is not large and consisting of several townships, fo as the 43 Eliz. may be of benefit to them, the justices ought not to appoint particular overseers according to this statute. MS. Cafes, Trin. 11 Ann. B. R. The Queen v. The inhabitants of Doltig. 16 Vin. Abr. 421.

As to the duty of the overseers of the poor, see flat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 2. 6, 11. and flat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. sect. 11. 13. 14. in the preceding division of this title. Make and yield up to such justices of peace a true and perfect account. See flat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 2. in the preceding division of this title. — This statute, by stating this account, cannot be delegated to any other. MS. Cafes, Pash. 9 Ann. B. R. in case of The Queen v. Turner & al. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

Shall pay and deliver over] Mandamus to the justices, to grant a warrant for levying 30 l. 17s. 11d. being the balance of the last overseers of the poor's account in their hands. They return, that true it is there was such a balance, but that the vetty had ordered them to return it, and employ an attorney to sue for some charity money, and get it laid out for the benefit of the poor; that one Tunst was so employed, and the balance en-trusted in fees, and that the overseers had engaged to pay Tunst 1s. 6d. out of the fees they had received to grant the warrant: And per curiam, There must go a peremptory mandamus, for the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. says, the balance shall be paid over to the new overseers, under a penalty: And it is not in the power of the vetty to dispense with the statute. Stran. 952.

Neglect in the office. If an overseer does not provide for the poor, he is indiable; and if he relieves the poor when there is no necessity, it is a misdemeanor. MS. Cafes. Pash. 3 Ann. B. R. Tunst's case.

For every such default of absence or negligence 20 shillings] This penalty for not meeting in the church shall never be inflicted on the overseers of the poor of extrarapochial places, because they have no church to meet in. Per cur. & Maj. 40. Pash. 7 Geo. in case of The King v. The inhabitants of Rufford. If any of those officers be convicted of any of the penalties in this act; the other must levy it. MS. Cafes, Trin. 11 Ann. B. R. Anon. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

To commit every one of the said churchwardens and overseers] See flat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 4. in the preceding division of this title. — If any of them are adjudged, and the overseers refuse to pay the balance, they cannot be committed immediately, but a warrant must issue to disfrain them, and upon return thereof there may be a commitment. MS. Cafes, Pash. 9 Ann. B. R. The Queen v. Turner & al. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

6 Q. The
The justices cannot commit an offender of the poor for bringing in an account to which they object, but they ought to hear it, and to strike out what is amis in it, and balance the account. [Es. Cafer, at Down offic- ees, Lent 1779. Cuming Ch. J. Haldane's cafe. 16 Pr. 297.]

The defendant being an overseer, was committed by two justices of peace by a warrant, which recited, that he had appeared before them, and being demanded to give a just and true account of all such monies as he had received and paid, he had only produced an account in gross of all his payments, and refused to give a particular account, or produce his books, &c., and they believing this to be no account according to this statute, and the defendant refusing to give any other account, therefore they commit him to be detained till he shall make a true account. And upon a habeas corpus he was here discharged. Parfons and overseers had no authority to commit in this manner by this statute, for that an account was confirited to have been rendered, &c. Show. 39 Legb. 4 W. & M. B. R. The King v. Carrock.

An order made at the Sessions relating to accounts of overseers of the poor was moved to be quashed, because it did not appear the accounts had been before two justices guaron um, and they cannot come per saltum to the sessions; and Salt. 533. was cited. On the other side it was said, that it appeared there was an allowance, for the appeal is said to be against the defulements and allowance thereof, which the court will prefixe was very small, and being in general, is not like the cafe in Salt. Which was said to be by two Justices without guaron um. Sed per curiam. It does not follow, that this was an allowance by two Justices, for the parish might do it; and therefore for want of jurisdiction this order must be quashed. Stran. 593.

3. Of the poor rate, who, and what shall be liable there- to; and of taxing alien parishes in aid of it.

By taxation of every inhabitant] See stat. 42 Eref. c. 2. fett. 1. 3. & 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. fett. 12. in the first division of this title.—Affiliations for the poor ought to be made according to the visible eflate of the inhabitants there, both real and personal, and no inhabitant there is to be taxed to contribute to the relief of the poor in regard of any estate he hath elsewhere in any other town or place, but only in regard of the visible estate he hath in the town where he dwells, and not for any other land he hath in any other place or town; paid by Herton and Crowe J. if here been resolved by all the judges of England upon a reference made to them, and upon a conference by them had together. 2 Buff. 354. 9 Car. in Sir Anthony Earlby's cafe.

Rent is no flanding rule for making a poor rate; for circumstances may differ, and there ought to be a regard ed Saltum & facultate. Com. 475. Tzvch. 10 W. 3. B. R. The King v. Justices of peace of the precinct of Cath- erine church, Norwich.

The Sessions upon setting aside a rate may make a new one themselves, or order the churchwardens and overseers to make a new one, they having it in their discretion to make a new rate at fission, or remnant to the churchwardens, and overseers, if it be gzed on one. 2 Salt. 553. Mich. 10 W. 3. B. R. The parfih of St. Leonard Somercliffes cafe.

The churchwardens and overseers may make a rate of themselves; per cur. 2 Salt. 531. Hill. 2 Ann. B. R. in Teuney's cafe.

H. took part of a house in the parish of D., on the third of December; he was rated as an inhabitant, and was disrated for a quarter's rate the Christmas following; but the ditrefs was taken before Christmas on a general warrant made for the whole year; and in replevin it was ruled upon evidence by Holt Ch. J. 311. That if two several houses are inhabited by several families, who make and have but one common avenue or entrance for both; yet in respect of their original, both houses are rateable severally; for they were at first several houses; and if one family goes, one house is vacant; but if one ceninent be divided by a partition and inhabited by dif- ferent families, the owner in one, and a stranger in another, there are several currences severally rateable while they are thus severally inhabited, but if the stranger and his family, and the owner in his family comes one in the same family, That H. could not be rated for the whole quarter, for poor rates are to be assified monthly by the statute, and by this means a man cannot move in the middle of a quarter but he must be twice charged. 2 Salt. 532. Trin. 3 Ann. Tray v. Talbot.

When goods are rated, it ought be done according to the value of lands, and goods of the value of 100l. thence rated 5l. per annum, as lands are, and the person must be charged only in the place where the goods are at the time of the affillation; for if he has no goods where assified, if disfrained he may have an action of treafus, &c. Dolh. Jfot. 253. cap. 73.

The meaning of the statute 43 Eliz. and the occupiers of the land are to be assified, and not the leflor who receives the rents; the occupier of the land being by law only to pay the affiliation, unless it be special- ly provided for as to this payment between him and his leflor; per Hutton and Crowe J. who declared, that it had been fo resolved by all the judges of England. 2 Buff. 354. 9 Car. in Sir Anthony Earlby's cafe.

Parfons ought to contribute to the poor; per Holt Ch. J. who said it had been so agreed by all the judges of England as Servientes hon in the Parfon of Panegur's cause. 3 Keb. 252. Trin. 25 Cur. 2. B. R. The King v. Vorun.

A mandamus was prayed to the mayor of Chichester, to sign a tax made on the palace, &c. of the bishop of Chichester, being within the parfifs of Subhannav, and per cur. it was granted; because against this there was no objection in the statute, and all the precedendencies that live in the same close, which is a fourth part of the town, pay it. 3 Keb. 573. Hill. 37 Car. 2. B. R. The parfih of Subhannav v. The mayor of Chichester.

A parfon who lets his tithes to the parishioners may be taxed upon the poor rate; for the letting is but a- greement with the parishioners to retain it to their tithes, and the parfon here has a modulus for his tithes; though it was objected that the parishioners were occupiers, and for the parson not taxable. MS. cases, Tzvch. 7 Ann. The Queen v. Bartlet.

Thole ought only to be contributors who were living there the year before, and none else; per Penne J. Poor them was, who should be faid to be the case of Ths inhabits of Were v. Pettieu consisteu of Town.

A feft of lands demifed the fame to B., referring the yearly rent of 10l. A. convened with B. that he should quietly enjoy the land, and to indemnify him against all charges and taxes whatsoever to be imposed upon the said lands, except tithes. B. entered, and was pollicied, and the parson having a time to retain the tithes, and the parfon here has a modulus for his tithes; though it was objected that the parishioners were occupiers, and for the parson not taxable. MS. cases, Tzvch. 7 Ann. The Queen v. Bartlet.

The DoeChor agreed with several of the parishioners to take so much for his tithes, and made a lease to F. The DoeChor was rated for the tithes to the parish leivers, who appeal'd; and the matter being found special, the que- stion being in what manner of advantage is given to the inhabitants; for they enjoy the whole value for their tithes; otherwise it had been a contract for years. Part's Settlements 104. pl. 180. The Inhabitants of Lambeth v. Fairchurch, lews of Dr. Holfen.
The defendant being afflicted towards the poor rate for tithes as vicar, appeal to the felonies, where he is directly discharget. But by the court; as vicar he is chargeable by 43 Eliz. and the felonies hath only power to take, but not to discharge: And the order of felonies is quashed. Swam. 77.
Where the order agrees that the tenant shall retain the tithes, yet the rate for them must be upon the parson.

All things which are real and bring in a yearly revenue may be rated and taxed to the poor. Shaw's Parishes Law 16.

On a motion to confirm a tax laid by the justices of the on a toll of the corporation of W., for a rate to the poor, Hild. Hospital lands are chargeable to the poor as well as to the benefactors, for no man by appropriating his lands to an hospital, can discharge or exempt them from taxes to which they were subject before, and throw a greater burden upon his neighbours. On a motion to quash a poor rate made at the quarters of Marlborough, because it was affixed for trade, or let the corporation would not affix the toll of their market, or any other farm thereof, it was determined by the court of King's Bench in Michaelmas term 3 Geo. 3. that a lessee of lead mines, where no rent is reserved ther in a certain proportion of the ore to be raised, is not rateable to the poor, under the flat. 43 Eliz. 1.

Parishes of St. Peter's v. Parishioners of S. Hole's.

Sir James Mountaree attorney general moved to quash an order of two justices of the peace for the county of the city of Norwich made upon this statute; his exception was, that it does not appear that the parishes taxed are within the county of the city of Norwich, or that they are within the county of the city of Norwich; and two justices by the act have not power to tax the county but only the hundred, or the parishes within the hundred. To which it was answered, that if two justices cannot relieve in this case, there can be no relief given; for it is well known there are no hundreds within cities, and the city and the county of the city are the same, and the power given to the justices must arise upon a defect in the hundred, and where there is no hundred there can be no such power as the felonies is quashed by the order in this case. But per Penwel; This is not cofis amicius out of the statute; and tho' the two justices have no power, here being no hundred, yet the felonies have a jurisdiction, and may tax the county of the city in part or at large, to which the reft agreed, and (Holt absent) quashed the order made by the two justices in the order of court.

There are two ways by this statute to make one parish contributory to the poor of another parish, viz. either the justices may tax particular persons in aid to that parish which cannot relieve its own poor; or else it may affect the whole parish and thereby leave it to the churchwardens and overseers to levy the same on particular persons; per Holt, 2 Salk. 460. 9. Mandamus to the justices to make a rate for the support of the poor of the parish of St. Mary's, &c. which was opposed, because the parish officers ought to make the rate, and the justices are only to sign it; to which it was answer'd, that this motion was grounded on the clause of the statute, and thenceupon a mandamus was granted, directed to the justices; and as this is a matter of right, they might rule, and get the writ, if it was not given.

An order of felonies was returned upon flat. 43 Eliz. for raising the parishes adjacent, &c. for relief of a poor parish. Excepted against, that by the statute this ought to have been done by the two next justices, whereas this order was made at felonies. And by the solicitor general, If it be made by all the justices, &c. then it is by two, and they shall be suppofed to be at the general felonies. And per Wythens, You have not purfued the flat, and do hereby prevent the appeal. Adjourn; and it was afterwards at another day quashed for that reason. Comb. 25. Trin. 2 Jac. 2. B. R. The King v. A parish in Colebylfer being furchaged with poor, the justices made an order that two other parishes in Colebylfer should pay to the relief of the poor within this parish, viz. the one 5s. 4d. a year, and the other parishes should collect it, and the order being remov'd by certiorari, Allibone moved to quash it, because not pursuant to the direction of 43 Eliz. which says, others of other parishes, so that it ought to be affixed by the justices upon particular persons, and not generally, (and so it may be do) and it has been admitted it might be done this term before; and also a case remembered in Pemberton's time, when it was so ruled). But the court seemed to be of opinion, that it was well enough, and according to the right course; and that the justices are only to affix the quantum, and then the rate to be made by the overseers of the poor of the parish, and such was the opinion of the court, Comb. 259. Med. 2 Jac. 2. B. R. St. Rumleth's parishes case.

It was moved to quash an order made by two justices, that the inhabitants of L. G. should pay a yearly sum to Woodstock, if, because it was not paid quadranam, but that exception was disallowed. Why. For that it was only said, that Woodstock was taken, the charge being made upon the poor, but not that they were unable. Note; Upon an appeal the justices made an order at the felonies, wherein it was said they were oppressed, which implies inability. Comb. 24. Hild. 5. W. 6. M. B. R. The King v. Upon an order for contribution to the relief of a poor parish it was ruled, that the justices may either charge particular persons or the whole parish, and they to levy it; but here a sum in gross was laid for a whole year, when (it was objected) it was unreasonable; for their ability may change; nevertheless the order was confirmed. An order was made by the justices of the borough, for the parish of St. Peter's to pay to the officers of St. Mary's the sum of 20 a. weekly, until we the said justices shall fee fit to order to the contrary. It was objected, 18. That it does not appear that the parish of St. Mary's is over-burthened with poor, but over-ruled; for the order follows the words of the statute. 2dly, It is said, that they are within the town and borough, and it appears upon the order, that the parish of St. Mary's is within the borough, but not within the town and borough. But per cur. they are justices of both, 3dly. The order is, until we shall fee fit to order to the contrary, where the act never gave the justices such an authority, and it is in effect making a perpetual order; for if one of the justices or justices, or any other officers of the town, alter it then, the said justices shall fee fit to alter. And it was quashed per cur. for the last objection. Poor's Settlements 121. pl. 165. Pofib. 12 Geo. 1. The inhabitants of St. Peter's and St. Mary's in the borough of Marston.

Upon a dispute whether A. was a vill in the parish of B. or a parish of itself, to prove it a vill the evidences were, that there were but two churchwardens, two overseers of the poor, that marrying, baptizing, and all other parochial rites were done at B. and that the inhabitants of A. did contribute to the repair of the church at B. And to prove that A. was a parish of itself, the evidence was, that in the reign of Edward III. there was a publick chapel there, and divine service read in it at the time of making this statute, that A. had formerly distinct constables, and repaired their own highways in 1634, and then the difference between A. and B. was settled by a judge of assize, that a rate was made in A. in 1654. But this was held not sufficient to make A. a parish in reputation at the time of the statute, without all which was required, and therefore held to be a vill in the parish of B. 4 Mod. 158. Mitch. 4 W. & M. B. R. Rudd v. Eyster. Shaw's Parish Law 208. cites S. C. To make A. a reputed parish within the 43 Eliz. it must have a parochial chapel and chapel wardens, and sacraments, at the time the statute was made; and because A. had but one chapelry, whole office was to collect the rates taxed upon A. and pay them to B. they were held part of the parish of B. and not part of parishes within the 43 Eliz. and their having a distinct overseer, and maintaining their own poor, was not thought sufficient to make them a distinct parish. 2 Salk. 501. Mitch. 4 W. & M. B. R. Rudd v. Morton. This was the case of churchwardens and sacraments.

On shewing cause against qualifying two orders, &c. An original order of two justices, made for taxing, raised, and keeping the inhabitants of the tithing of Milland, in aid of the parish of St. Peter's, the 27th of April, in the county; and the order of justices confirming it; the question was, Whether it was sufficiently flated that both these places (viz. Milland and St. Peter's) lie within the same hundred: Which is a circumstance officially necessary to be acertained, in order to give the two justices any jurisdiction in the case. For, by 43 Eliz. c. 5, f. 3.
2. power is given to two-judges, in cafes where they receive a parish not able to maintain it's own poor, to say any other parish within the hundred where the parish (which is all the authority given to two-judges) is; then and then but and till the said hundred, and the parishes of St. Peter's, Cheshfield, both lie in the same liberty of the Soke, the said parish lies; it was then and then that all the parishes within the same hundred: For liberty and fake are words of vague, indeterminate meaning, not equivalent to be known legal term hundred, nor co-extensive with it; and perhaps the liberty may extend into several hundreds. However, it is plain that the two-judges have not flown that they have a qualification of the court in the act, and therefore have not any. In support of the objection were rivals the following cases, viz. Foley's Laws relating to the Poor 31. (or 42 in the 3d edition,) St. Benedict's parish v. St. Stephen's and St. Mary Magdalen's, in Norwich. Reports temp. Qu. Ann. 206. C. C. Flax, tit. Poar 416. C. with Foley 31. This court thought it held to tend to the fitness, in order to have the matter better explained, and more particularly stated. But they did not think themselves bound down by the particular word hundred, which is the term used in the act, so as to be confined to this single species of division of country. For if such division be called by any one word or phrase, the equivalent of that hundred, it must be equally within the intention of the act, and the court may adjudge according to such intention. And now, the case having been newly and particularly stated, Mr. Gould, who was for the orders, prayed the opinion of the court. And Mr. Norton, who was against them, candidly owning that the facts are now stated, he could not contend but that it does appear (substantially) to be a hundred, though the division was called by another name; the court discharged the rule, and affirmed the orders. A. Of the remedies for recovering rates; and of setting aside rates.

See flat. 43 Eliz. c. 2 feet. 4 13. 19. in the first division of this title.

Holt Ch. J. said, that a man could not be disfrayed by virtue of a general warrant made before the rate, but there ought to be a special warrant on purpose; and he said that a disfray could not be taken for a quarter's rate before the quarter was ended; but the jury said, the cuftom was otherwise. This Act. 52. Tit. 3 Annu. Tracy v. Talbot. 6 Mod. 214. 5. C. and says, that the plaintiff might disfray for a quarter's rate before the end of the quarter; but the jury said the custom and usage was to do that, and to avoid the mischief that would ensue, if the party should remove out of the parish before the quarter. To which Holt Ch. J. answered, if he remove into another parish in the same county, they might disfray by warrant from the justices there, as well as in the same parish; but if he removed out of the county, he agreed the remedy failed. So he gave way to the usage in that point.

It was said, that a warrant to disfray for a poor rate ought not to be granted before demand made; for the first ought to be a confirmation of the affidavit for the poor, and afterwards upon unfalso, &c. A new warrant is to be made for disfray, &c. and Holt said, that finally it was so, but the practice having been in the case of taxes to grant such a conditional warrant to disfray, without trouble or caus, Court. 342. Tit. 7 W. 3. B. R. in case of East. If the poor rates are not received, and the overseers lay out a sum of their own, they are remediless if they do not raise it before they are put out of their office. Jaff. Cafe Law 235. cited Black. 237, 238.

The churchwardens and overseers of the poor, by warrant from any two judges of the peace (quor. 1.) may levy the tax by disfray and sale of goods where any person refuses payment of the sum he is affixed; and if there be no disfray whereby the fame may be levied, he shall be committed to the common goal. There to remain till payment.

A manaduas was mov'd for, and a rule obtain'd for an alderman to shew cause why he refused to grant his tax for the relief of the poor; who at another day shewed that the churchwardens had made a tax warrant for four years, when no tax was levied, but only a quarterly tax, and thereupon a rule was made that he should grant his warrant to quarter. It was affirmed upon error in B. R. upon this statute, that th'o the statutes express by name only sale and disfray of goods, yet if the plaintiff voluntarily delivers any goods for what he is affixed to the poor, and after brings trefpas thereof against the overseers, this is within the statute; for these words sale and disfray, are put in the act only for examples; and the statute shall be construed largely, because it tends ad opus clarissimum; and the trefpas brought after such voluntary delivery of property, is in a vaxation which the statute extends to suppur. Yor. 176. Trin. 8. Fac. B. R. Okely v. Seiter, &c. B. brought trefpas against certain persons who pleaded Not guilty, and at the Nisi prius (as appeared by the certificate of the judge upon the back of the pietta) the defendants justified as overrears of the poor of the town of Alillam, and shewed this special matter in evidence by this statute; and after the jury was charg'd, and returned again, the plaintiff was non-suited. And now the court was moved to grant a writ of inquiry of damages, for the treble damages which they ought to recover against the plaintiff by the former cause, which was, that the damages shall be ass'd &c. Dod. said, This is to be intende that it shall be tried by writ of inquiry of damages in such cafes as it ought to be by the law, viz. upon discontinuance or demurrer for the words, as the cafe requires, imply as much; and by the law, when a jury ought to have found a thing, and do not find it, this shall not be supplied by a writ of inquiry of damages; and this was so ruled in habeas, quod fact commod. per cur, that such defect shall not be supplied by writ of inquiry of damages, because the party shall not be ouzed of his attain'd. But in the cafe at bar, the writ of inquiry of damages was granted per cur. inasmuch as this cause was non-suited, this court could not ass'd the damages; and damages were found accordingly. Rell. Rep. 272. Mich. 13 fac. B. R. Brampton v.---

As to setting aside rates, see flat. 43 Eliz. c. 2 feet. 6. in the first division of this title. Upon an appeal from a poor rate, the justices refused to hear the appeal, because it was not made at the next quarter-sessions. But per cur. The party grieved may appeal at any seffions; the justices may not have power to alter the rate at discretion, but they ought not to refuse to hear the appeal. MS. Caff. Mich. 8 Jun. B. R. The Queen v. The inhabitants of St. Giles.

T. P. and S. being overrears of the poor, got their account allowed by their justices. The parish appealed against it, and the seffions set aside this account, and then directed a re-examination of the matter to the fame two justices. This order being removed, it was object'd, that here was no appeal delegated to the justices, and therefore finally to determine the matter in question. Per Parker Ch. J. The overseers have four days time to pafs their accounts, and they may go before any two justices for the doing it; till the time is pase there is no compulsion used, but if this time is pase, the parish may go before any two justices, and when there have entered upon the examination, no other justice is afterwards to intermeddle; and when this matter comes to the seffions, they are to 6 R. take

There are four adjacent towns within the parish of Banbury, and there is an overseer over each town, and an overseer also over the borough, they all join in one account, and there is but one rate made for all the parish, but the overseers of each particular town collectively and pay the money, which is the usual custom. In one of the towns there is a tenant of lands in one of these towns, lives in the borough, and is affixed by the overseer of the borough for the lands within the town, and paid to the overseer of the borough; and the like is done in the other towns, so that the overseer of the borough had a surplusage for the poor within the town, and through his overseers, who are tenants of lands within the towns, lived in the borough, and is affixed by the overseer of the borough for the lands within the town, and paid to the overseer of the borough.

Although a poor's rate be really made at the feftions on an appeal, yet if it does not appear by the order itself, as by reciting cases, the same order shall be quashed, and the court refused to supply that defect in the order by affidavit. Camb. 133, 134. Trin. 1 W. & M. B. R. Ann.

The churchwardens and overseers, and some of the inhabitants of this parish made a poor's rate, which was confirmed by two juries, in which several were not taxed for their personal effects, (which was erroneous) but the whole lay on the real estate of the parish; on which several of the inhabitants appealed to the feftions, and they ordered that the said rate should be annulled, and a new one made; accordingly the churchwardens made a new rate both on the real and personal effects, which rate was confirmed by two juries. But in the new rate there was a great inequality, the real estate being rated in proportion ten times more than the personal; for which several of the inhabitants appealed again to the feftions, where another order was made to discharge the said rate. And now these two orders of feftions being removed by certiorari into B. R. it was moved to quash them; because the feftions did not regulate the rate made for his rate, and cannot set aside the whole rate. Sed per stat. ear. Sure the juries at feftions upon an appeal by particular persons grieved, may, if they see reason, set aside the whole rate. The juries have a large power, and in both theft cases, either on the first rate where the personal effects were not charged, or upon the second where they are unequally charged, it is impossible for them to give relief without setting aside the whole rate; which therefore they may legally do, being empowered by the act to take order herein according to their discretion; by virtue of which, as they may set aside the whole rate, so they may make a new rate themselves, or order the overseers, or, and if they desire to make a new one, as was done in this case; wherefore those two orders were confirmed. 12 Mod. 212. If the rate be illegal, the juries may refuse to sign it, but as to the sums or parties affected they have nothing to do with it, the remedy is by appeal; and though the aldermen of Dorchester refused to sign a rate, because of inequality; yet the court granted a mandamus, and after a recent but no temporary mandamus, and then an attachment, in order that the parties grieved might appeal, cited per ear. Two juries made an order for the overseers of the poor to pay 21, per week to Elizabeth Reddesh. It was objected That it is not said that she is poor and imponent; otherwise the statute gives them no such power. Per cur. The 43 Eliz. does not give them power, unlefe they are upon the poor rate; let them have cause. Poor's Settlements pl. 30. The Queen v. The inhabitants of Manchester.

In order to continue the weekly pay, it was ordered by R. C. and all the areares, till they find him a house; quashed, because the overseers have no power to find him a house; that must be done by the lord of the manor, or by the juries. Shaw's Parish Law 200.

An order of juries of peace, willing the churchwardens to pay a scrivener 5. due to him for drawing indentures for the sale of trades, was quashed, as being a thing out of their power; but the way had been to order a parish rate for levying fo much a week till a convenient sum were raised; and in that case as soon as money was raised, an action would lie for the scrivener against the churchwardens. 12 Mod. 417. 6. Of parents and children being obliged to maintain each other.

See Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 21. sex. 7. and 5 Geo. 1. c. 8. under the first division of this title.
An order of sequestration for the father to pay so much a week for maintenance of his daughter was quashed, because it was not set forth that she was unable to work, without which the justices have no jurisdiction. 10 Mod. 307. Per Croke. 1. B. R. The Queen v. Dun.

An order of the quarter-justices, upon complaint of the overseers, that Nicholas Tripp was left his wife, and that she was become poor and importunate, and become chargeable to the parish, and that Richard Tripp her father-in-law, was of sufficient ability, did (upon its being proved that Richard was of ability to relieve her) order him to pay the said poor woman for want of an adjudication that she was chargeable; and it was held, that an adjudication that the person is become chargeable, is as necessary in an order of the quarter-justices, as in an order of two justices. 35. Caies, Trin. 4 Gis. B. R. The King v. Tripp.

Upon complaint made to the quarter-justices, that his son Valentine Ruth, his wife and family were importunate and unable to maintain themselves, the court does order the said Emery Ruth to pay them 4s. per week. It was objected, that it does not appear that he was refiant, and lived in the county; that the charge is personal, and the justices had no cognizance over him, as he did not reside in the county. They were ordered to shew cause. Note. An affidavit was made that he lived in another county, but I think, not read. Poor's Settlements 99, pl. 134. cites The King v. Emery Ruth.

Order, reciting, that Mundan had a good fortune with his wife, and that she desired to be relieved therefore he is ordered to provide for her. And in maintenance of the order 1 Bult, and 2 Bult. 345. Style 283. were cited. Et per Pratt Ch. J. On consideration, we are all of opinion, that the son-in-law is not bound, either within the words or intent of the statute, which provides only for natural parents. By the law of nature a man was bound to take care of his own father and mother; but there being no temporal obligation to inform that law of nature, it was found necessary to establish it by act of parliament, and that can be extended no farther than the law of nature went before, and the law of nature doth not reach to this case in 1 Bult, it is plain the word was left out only by mistake, for the sense of the clause leads you to read it not obliged, and besides the judges were divided. The case indeed in 2 Bult, is an authority in point as far as it will go, but that is no judicial authority, only a case at a judge's chamber. The same was also laid obiter in the case of The Queen v. Ensor, Pag. 321, 7. B. R. 220, 8. B. R. but it was not concluded before the whole court till now. And therefore as it is in toto, we are of opinion the order must be quashed. Stann. 190.

Portion, Is that part or share of a person's estate, which was given or left to a child. 17. If a man makes a voluntary settlement for the portion of a daughter by his former wife, and then takes a second wife, and seizes the same land for her jointure, without notice of the previous settlement, he will devestate the daughter's wife, which the refuses; the daughter shall have the other lands till her portion is raised. 1 Ver. 219. Ep. Ach. 221.

If by marriage-lettiments lands are limited to the huh-band and wife for their lives, and afterwards to the first and other sons in tail; and if the husband dies without issue male, to A. for 500l. for daughters portions; the ther be issue male, which survives the father, and then dies without issue, a daughter shall have the portion. 1 Lev. 35.

A. If after the death of his wife makes a settlement for raising issue of each of his younger children, and afterwards dies by the children of the second wife shall have the same portions. 1 Ver. 335. 1

If land is charged with portions, the heir cannot give personal security for them in dischage of the land. 1 nor shall he be allowed to pay them, before the time limited by the settlement, viz. full age, or marriage. 1 Ver. 338.

Ver. 338.

If a man gives a portion to a daughter to be paid at the age of 21 years, and she marries, and dies before; it shall be paid to her husband, or her executor. 2 Ca. Ch. 94.

If A. by marriage-lettiments makes a provision for daughters of 1500l. a piece, to be paid at 18 or marriage, and if any of them die before, the survivor to take the whole; and afterwards fettes other lands for the payment thereof, at the age of 21 or marriage, and that there shall be no survivorship, this contruys the first deed. 2 Ch. R. 8.

A term is limited after the death of the father, upon trust for raising portions for his daughters, at the age of 18 or marriage; the term may be fold for that purpose in the life-time of the father. Sat. 159. 2 Ver. 355. 2 Ver. 459, 466, 656.

So, if the term, after the life of the father, be upon trust, that if the father die without issue male by his wife, having daughters, and the wife dies without a son; the term may be fold in the life-time of the father, for the portions of daughters, when they attain such an age, or marry. 3 Ver. 203. Per Copper. 1 Sal. 159. 2 Ver. 657. Rep. Ge. 2. 2, 22.

If the term is to raise portions for daughters, and the inheritance descends to the kife; Chancery will prevent the merger of the term. 2 Ver. 91, 208.

So, if one has a power to raise portions for children, and is paid charged upon land, but by the evidence of part, the residue is not sufficient; the land may be decreed to be sold. 2 Ver. 311.

The he adds, that for the raising them, the trustees shall take all the rents and profits; for that does not retain the general charge. 2 Ver. 311.

A be a term for raising portions for daughters, without paying, at what age or time; they shall be raised, with reasonable maintenance from the death of the father. 2 Ver. 460.

If the portion is to be raised as the father shall appoint, it shall be raised, ther the father dies without appointment, 2 Ver. 655.

But if portions for daughters at such an age, if the father dies without issue male, are to be raised for his daughters, if not otherwise provided for, and 30l. per

ann. in the interim; then the mother dies without a son, the term shall not be decreed to be sold for the daughters portions; for the other contingencies, if they are not otherwise provided for, it cannot happen during the life of the father. 1 Sal. 160. 2 Ver. 650, 657.

So the 30l. per ann. shall not be decreed to the daughter, or her husband; for the father shall not pay maintenance out of the profits of a term, not to commence till his death; and therefore it must be intended of maintenance, or else portions, or other deeds, to be charged before the age of 21, or marriage of his daughter. 1 Sal. 160.

If A. gives portions to his younger children, secured by a mortgage from B, and if the heir of A. does not pay them, that they shall be charged upon his land; B pays the portions, which are put out upon another security, approved of by a mafter in Chancery, with the consent of the guardian, and are afterwards left; the land of the heir shall not afterwards be charged. 1

Ver. 337.

If land is charged with 500l. for A. and the truftees raies the sum, and gives a judgment to A. for it, and then dies infolvent; the lands shall be dicharged. 2 Ver. 85.

If a term after the death of husband and wife, is for the raising of portions out of the profits after the commencement of the term, to be paid at the age of 21; neither the principal of the interest shall be raised, till the term commences in possession. 2 Ver. 761. 1 IV. 449.

If a term is to be paid by the perfonal estate, and if that is not sufficient, by the rents and profits of the real; it is necessary, the real estate should be fold to make it good. 2 Ver. 474.

So if a term commences after the death of the hubband, to raise portions, if no son, for daughters, provided, that the daughters survive their father; no portion shall be raised if the daughter dies in the life-time of her father, ther the married before her death. 1 Ver. 276.

So if a portion is payable, and before payment one child dies; it shall be decreed to his executor or administrator. 1 Ver. 767.

If a term is upon truf, that if the father dies without a son, to raise portions from the rents of the rents and profits, as soon as conveniently may be; they may raie it by sale. Per Parker, P. W. 417, 420.

Otherwise, if it was out of the annual rents and profits, or by leaves for lives or years. Per Morticefield, and another, P. W. 158, 144. 1 IV. 449, 450.

But if a younger child dies in the life-time of the father, before marriage, the portion shall not be raised. 1 Ver. 335.

If the land is not sufficient to raise portions for all, there shall be an abatement in proportion. 1 Ver. 335.

A portion secured by settlement, or articles for a settlement, shall not be raised as a debt out of the personal afts. 2 P. W. 437. For more learning on this subjeft, for 16 Vin. Act. tit. Portions.

Possession. (Poffeflion) Is two-fold, actual and in law: Actual possession is, when a man actually enters into lands and tenements to him defined. Poffeflion fratri, Signifies in the law, where a man hath a fon and a daughter by one woman or venter, and another man a daughter by another woman or another venturer. 12. Eliz. Exempts the female from being an heir to her brother, although the second son by the second venter is heir to his father: But if the eldest son dies without issue, the daughter shall have the land as heir to her brother, although the second son by the second venter is heir to his father: Because if the eldest son dies without issue, not having made an actual entry and sell, the younger brother by the second wife as heir to the father, shall enjoy the estate; and not the fitter. Inf. 11. 15. Lands are settled on a man, and the heirs of his body, and he hath issue a fon and a daughter by one woman, and a fon by another, and dieth; and then the eldest son dies before any entry made on the lands either by his own act, or by the poffeflion of another, the appellation of heir being claimed as heir of the body of the father, and not generally, as heir to his brother; yet if the elder brother enter, and by his own act hath gained possession; or if the lands were left for years, or in the hands of a guardian, there the poffeflion of the leftee or guardian doth veft the fife in the elder brother. But if the eldest son be dead, the fitter shall inherit as heir to her brother, for there is poffeflion fratri. 3. Rep. 42. There can be no poffeflion fratri of a dignity; in fuch cafe the younger brother is hares natus: The lord Grey being created a baron to him and his heirs, he had issue a fon and a daughter by one venter, and a fon by another; but in this case the eldest son being poffefled of the barony, and dying without issue, it was adjudged, that the younger brother, and not the fitter, should have it. Cro. Car. 437. See Defcent, Heir. Vol. II. No. 115.

Possession. Is two-fold, actual and in law: Actual possession is, when a man actually enters into lands and tenements to him defined. Possession in law is, when the lands or tenements or other things or property, are held in the living. And in law is that allowance or proportion which a vicar commonly has out of a reversion, or improperly, be it certain or uncertain. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 28.

Possession by grant for years is in the grantee, but by grant of one, two or three avoages the patrouage is not severed, but is ftil in the grantor; per Jone J. Arg. T. 19. Hilly v. Jac. C. Tenant at will, and he in reversion are in poffefion of a house, he is not poffeflor because he has not a poffeflion; but the poffeflion shall be adjudged to be in the tenant at will. Sid. 385. Mich. 20 Car. 2. B. R. Kinnoul v. Whitehead. If a highwayman come up to a carrier, and lead the horse out of one hundred into another, this is a robbery in the first hundred; for the carrier was robbed upon the first taking. But if the carrier had held the horse himself, then it should be adjudged to be in his own poffeflion, and no robbery till he came into the second hundred. And if a man has money, and the malefactor take him in one hundred, and carry him into another, and then rifle him, this is a robbery in the second hundred; but the money is always in poffeflion. Per 1st. cur. and adjudged accordingly. Goldib. 85. p. 11. Pofch. 30 Eliz. Anno.

So in the law of Canuttus, c. 56, Ei qui quis egas impossibilis, non est omnino fidei voluntarie faciat. Leg. Sax. Edw. fenerior, cap. 88.

Possibility, In our law is defined to be an uncertain thing, which may or may not happen. 2. Eliz. Abr. 336. And is either a remote or an actual possibility: if an estate is limited to one, after the death of another, this is a near possibility; but that one man shall be married to a woman, and then that the falf die, and he to be married to another; this is a remote or extraordinary possibility: And the law doth not regard a remote possibility that is never like to be. 15 Edw. 7. 10. Hard. 417. 2. Rep. 50.

court upon motion setting forth this matter, will order judgment to be paid off within four days after it shall be Poulter. In the seventh year of King James, after many arguments and long debates, it was by all the judges resolved, that such as were born in Scotland after he descent of the crown of England to King James, were not citizens of England: But it appears, that in such cases born before that descent, were aliens in regard of the time of their birth.

Poultrous. A word often mentioned in Bradton, Wincheste, Fleta, and other law writers, and it signifies the second fow. So in Brome, lib. 2. cap. 35. 3. It connotes the quinquennium of such poultrous prelatical recognizances.

Poulterer. A general post-office erected, 12 Car. 2. c. 35. 9 Ann. c. 10. Made perpetual and part of the general fund, 3 Geo. 1. c. 7.

Packets—boats not to carry merchandise, without leave from the commissioners of the cullums, 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 7.

Penny allowed for the delivery of penny post letters in the country, 4 Geo. 2. c. 33.

Penny-claies may be furnished by any person, 22 Geo. 2. c. 25.

Writs to pay postage as letters, 25 Geo. 2. c. 13. f. 7. Pattern inclosed to pay as a double letter, 26 Geo. 2. c. 13. f. 8.

Offences against the acts concerning the post-office, to be excepted out of the general pardon, 20 Geo. 2. c. 52. f. 28.

By stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 24. sect. 1. it is enacted, That from and after the 1st of May 1764, while the revenue of the office shall continue to be paid to the aggregate fund, no letters or packets shall be exempted from postage, or to be sent free, or on the contrary, without exceeding two ounces in weight, as shall be enacted during the session of parliament, or within forty days before or after fummors or prorogation, and be signed on the outside by a member of either house, and the whole if the superficition to be of such member's writing; the letters or packets, shall be directed to the member, and the letters or packets shall be sent free, and where he shall then be, or at the house, &c. of parliament: And in like manner, letters and packets sent from and to places in Ireland, during the session there, or within forty days before or after fummors or prorogation, signed and directed as afofoed: Also all letters and packets to the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners and Secretaries to the Treasury; Lord High Admiral, Commissioners and Secretaries to the Admiralty; Principal Secretaries of State, and their Under Secretaries; Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, or their Secretary; Secretary at War, or his deputy; Lieutenant General, or other Chief Governour or Governors of Ireland; or their Chief Secretary, or Secretary for the provinces of Ulster and Munster; their secretary residing in Great Britain, the under secretary and first clerk in the office in Ireland of the Chief Secretary, and the first clerk in the office of the secretary for Ulster and Munster; Secretary General, or other Governor or Governors of Ireland; or their Chief Secretary, or Secretary for the provinces of Ulster and Munster; farmer of the bye and cros road letters; surveyors of the Post-Office; and letters and packets sent from any of the said officers, signed by them on the outside, and the whole superficition of their writing; and letters and packets from the Treasury, Admiralty Office, Office of the Secretaries of State, Plantation Office, General Post-Office at London, Chief Offices at Edinburgh, Dublin and America, indorsed for the King's service, and sealed with the Seal of Office, or of the Principal Officer in the department.

Sect. 2. Commissioners of the Treasury and Admiralty, the Secretaries of State, Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, Secretary at War, Postmaster General and his deputies, empowered to authorize certain perons in their respective offices, of whom letters to be transmitted to the General Post-Office, London, to indorse the letters and packets upon the King's service, and seal the same, with the Seal of Office, &c. None to be so indorsed and sealed, but by direction of their superior officer, or which concerns the business of the office, on forfeiture of 5L. for the first offence, to be recovered and applied as by act of 9 Anne is directed; and for the second offence, the offender to be removed from his place.

Sect. 3. Persons appointed to make such indorements, not to exceed two in any office, Admiralty and War Office excepted; and in the Admiralty not to exceed eight in time of peace, and twelve in time of war.

Sect. 4. Where any privileged person, disabled from writing the whole superficition, shall authorize some person to sign his name upon and write the superficition, and give notice thereof under his hand and seal to the Postmaster General, letters and packets, so signed and subscripted, shall go free.

Sect. 5. Printed votes and proceedings in parliament, and News-papers, sent without covers, or in covers open at the sides, and signed on the outside by a member, or directed to a member, according to notice given by him to the Postmaster General or his deputy at Edinburgh or Dublin, are to go free.

Sect. 6. Clerks in the offices of the Secretaries of State and Post Office, being duly licensed, may continue to frank the votes, and proceedings in parliament, and News-papers, as heretofore; sending the same with covers, or in covers open at the sides.

Sect. 7. Postmaster General, and officers under him, may search any packet sent without a cover, or in a cover open at the sides, as if the same were sent free, or in the contrary manner, without any other or thing inclosed therein, or there shall be any writing, other than the superficition upon the printed paper, or cover, the whole of such packet is to be charged with the postage.

Sect. 8. And if any person shall, after the 18th of June 1762, continue to be writing or carrying a packet in the superficition of any letter or packet, to avoid the postage, he shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and to be transported for seven years.

Post-poned. (Post-pone) Set or put after another. 22 & 23 Car. 2. Subsidy act.

Postmasters, Secretaries, Inclorities.

Post-term. (Post-terminus) Is a return of a writ, not only after the day assigned for the return thereof, but after the term also, for which the Cylus Bravium takes the fee of twenty-pence:—Sometimes also it is taken for the fee itself. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Postulation. A postulation made upon the unanimous voting any person, being a dignity or office, of which he is not capable by the ordinary canons or statutes, without special dispensation. So a chapter postulated a bishop actually postulated of another fee. And the religious postulated a prelate to be taken from another convent, from which he could not pass by the ordinary laws of the society. By the old customs an election could be made by a majority of votes; but a postulation must have been sine nomine contradicente. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Pot. A head-peace for war, mentioned in flat. 13 Cor. 2. cap. 6.

Pots, what ships to be imported, 22 Cor. 2. c. 13. sect. 8. Not to be imported from the Netherlunds or Germany, 13 & 14 Cor. 2. c. 11. f. 23. See Plantations.

Pound, (Parce) Signifies a place of strength to keep cattle in that are driven, and put there for any trespass done, until they are releived or redeemed; and this is called a pound over, or open pound, and because it is built upon the lord's waste, the lord's pound. See Kitchin, Pour le droit terres à la tenue que tient en douleur, &c.

Was a writ whereby the King seised upon the land which the wife of his tenant that held in capite deceased, had for her dowry, if the married without his leave; thence he seized it, and the whole thereof was bound to be given to his coming thither. A close pound is the contrary, whither the owner cannot come for the purposes aforesaid, without offence; as some house, castle, forrester or fish like place. Cowell, edit. 1727. See Diffrets. Pounnage. Is a subsidy to the value of twelve-pence in the pound, granted to the King, of all manner of merchandise of every merchant, as well denizens as alien, either exported or imported; and of such subsidies see the statutes 1 & 2 Edw. 6, cap. 13. and 1 Jac. c. 33. 12 Car. 2, cap. 4. and 14 Car. 2, cap. 24.
Pounbreache, If a diffrets be taken and impounded, though without just cause, the owner cannot break the pound, and take away the diffrets; if he doth, the party disheartening may have his action, and retake the diffrets wherever he finds it: And for pound-breaches, Est. ac- tion of the omission thereof may be re- covered. 1 Inst. 261, 2 W. & M. c. 5. Also pound-breaches may be inquired of in the sheriff's turn; as they are common grievances, in contempt of the authority of the law. 2 Hark. P. C. G. 67.
Pound in money, (from the Saxon pound, i.e. pond) Consists of 240 pounds of 12 toises each, now, but then was equal in weight to almost five pence now, and afterwards to three-pence; and 240 of those pence weighted a pound, but 720 scarce weigh so much now, and this appears by the silver penny coined in the reign of King Ethelred. Pour faire præludium que nulli injetis timus 0 3151 505 305 3151, præteristi, &c. &c. Is a writ directed to the mayor, sheriff or bailiff, of a city or town, commanding them to proclaim that none cast filth into the ditches or places near adjoining, and if any is cast already, to remove it. This is founded upon the statute 12 R. 2. 15. F. N. B. fol. 176. Purpurp, (Proprari, proprarii, proprarii.) Is con- trary to pro indivis: For to make purpurp to divide and sever the lands that fall to parcellers, which before partition they hold jointly and pro indivis. Old Nat. Rev. fol. 11.
Purpurbreaches, from the French pour- purry, espousing an incelde) Is thus defined by Glan- tile, Joh. lib. cap. 11. Purpurpbreaches off propriis quando aliquid dominum regem injuriae occupat or ut in Dominis Regis, vel in suis publicis officiis vel in suis proprietatis transforent a recto cursu, vel quando aliquis in civi- tate tate Regiam placent aliquod asdicendo occupaverit & generaliter quilibet aliquod act ad noctumatum Regii tenen- mentum vel Regiam recidisse in civitatis. Crompton, in his jurispr. fol. 152. defines it thus; Purpurp is properly when a man taketh unto himself, or incrocheth any thing that he ought not, whether it be in any jurisdiction, land or franchise; and generally when any thing is done to the nuisance of the King's tenants. See Kitchin, fol. 11. Tastley, J. lib. legum, cap. 10. "The power of the crown, whether, &c. &c. the king, and when the crown, for the long continuance of wars, inasmuch as those who have lands near the crown lands, take or inclose part of it, and lay it to their proper use. Purpurp against the lord is when the tenant neg- lects to perform what he is bound to do for the chief lord, or any wife deprives him of his right. Cowell, edit. 1727.
Purpurp against a neighbour is of the same nature: "Tis mentioned in the Monadh. 1 tsn. pag. 643. and in Thorn, pag. 269. Et de purpurp in quam Bercarius abbas purpurpidenti super praediction Hielan.

So a power may be annexed to an eflate by another deed, executed at the same time, though it be not in the same conveyance by which the eflate is conveyed. 1 Vent. 279. So a man may give a power or authority by will, which is a naked authority, not annexed to an estate, to make leaves to A. for life, and afterwards that it shall be at his diffoltion to any of his children then living; he hath but an eflate for life, with a naked power to disolve, in the manner directed by the will. 1 Sal. 24. 3 Sal. 276. So in all cases a power coupled with interest may be limited to a former, and his affigns, to cut down trees. 2 Mod. 317. But a man cannot annex a power of revocation to a feuimento, or grant; for that will be void. Ca. L. 237. a. Ms. 610. So if a man feized in fee, covenant to fland feized to the use of himfelf for life, with power to make leaves, remainder to another in fee, the power is void. Ca. Ch. 161. Ms. 611. So, if a man expresseth the power only by implication, it is void: As it is held, that he shall not have power to alien, &c. otherwife than to make a jointure, and leaves for 21 years; it is a good power to make a jointure and leaves. 1 Lee. 148. Seventhly, By 13 Eliz. cap. 7. "If any one shall bring into the realm, &c. any agnus dei, crotties, pictures, beads, or such like superstitious things, pretended to be hallowed by the bishop of Rome, &c. and shall deliver or offer the same to any subject to be used in any wife; or if any one shall receive the same to such intent, and not deliver it forthwith, &c., he shall be fined for or execute any sentence, dispensation or faculty from the see of Rome; and 28 Hen. 8. cap. 16. (by which all bulks, briefs, &c., therefore obtained from Rome are made void) That who- shall use, allege, or plead the same in any court, un- less they were condemned thereto by or in the see of Rome, shall lie in the like penalty. Vide Reg. 54. In 1541.

By the 13 Eliz. cap. 2. Those who purchase any bulks, &c. from Rome, are guilty of high treason; but those ancient statutes continue full in force, and it is in the elec- tion of the courts, to relieve either against them, or 13 Ed. I. by the said statute of 13 Eliz. the sides, complainers, &c. retainers of such offenders, after the offence, to the intent to uphold the said usurped power, incur a pramunire. Davis 94.

Secondly, The derogating from the King's Common w courts, is liable to a high offence at Common pleases, and is made a pramunire by many ancient flan- tes for 27 Ed. 3. cap. 1. of provisors. If any sub- ject does not appear in the realm, in which the cognizance pertains to the King's court, or of things where- by judgments be given in the King's courts, or fail in any other court to defeat or impede the judgments given in the King's courts, he shall be warned to appear, &c. in open perdon, at a day containing the space of two months, at which if he appear not, he and his procur- ees, shall be put out of the King's protection, his lands &c. chattels forfeited, his body imprisoned, and renom- nished at the King's will, &c. 2 Ed. 1. cap. 6. 25 Eliz. cap. 2. both those who shall par- e, or cause to be purposed in the court of Rome, or else- where, any procissils, or instrumemts or other things what- ever which touch the King, against him, his crown and gal- ory or his realm, and also those who shall bring, re- late, or execute them, and their authors, &c. Shall be put out of the King's protection.

In the confabulation of these statutes it has been holden, that at certain commissaries of fewers, for summoning some one thern who had got a judgment at law, and impris- oning him till he would release it, were guilty of a pramunire. 2 B. F. 219. 3 infra. 125. 4 Cor. Jac. 336.

And by the 27 Ed. 3. statute, if any person in any county or in any court, within the realm, for matters which upon the face of the law itself appear to belong only to the cognizance of the ecclesiastical courts, are said to be within 16 Rich. 2. by force of the words, or "elsewhere." 1 Hawk. P. C. 51.

And it hath been formerly holden, that even suits in a matter of divorce, if not straining beyond the con- nection of the suitants, and not being within the power of the courts, are not within the definition of these statutes, especially if they end to controvert the very point determined at law, or to relieve in a matter relievable at law. 4 Ex. Acr. 46.

Thirdly, Appeals to Rome are made pramunire by Hen. 8. cap. 12. and 25 Hen. 8. cap. 19. by which it is enacted, That such appeals as formerly were made to Rome, shall be made henceforth to Chancery.

Fourthly, The exercising the jurisdiction of a suffra- gan without the appointment of the bishop of the diocese, is made a pramunire by 26 Hen. 8. cap. 14. which sets forth at large how suffragans are to be nominated, &c.

Fifthly, By 25 Hen. 8. cap. 20. if a dean and chapter refuse to elect one named in the King's letter for a bi- shoprick, and to confirm such election to the King within twenty days after the licence shall come to his hands, or if any archbishop or bishop after such election (or not having made it for himself, or his vicars) refuse to confirm and consecrate within twenty days the person signified to him by the King's letters patent, they incur a pramunire.

Sixthly, Maintaining the pope's power is made a pramunire by 5 Eliz. cap. 1.
It has been resolved, that a statute, by appointing that an offender shall incur the penalty and danger mentioned in the 25th Reg. 2. 5. 5. does not confer the prejudice for the offence to the particular process thereby given. 1 Vent. 173.

It is held, that the statute of praemunire, which gives a general forfeiture of all the lands and tenements of the offender, extends not to lands in tail, Co. Lit. 130.

It has been held, that a person for the benefit of such an imprisonment, trepass, or any other offences and contempt, will pardon a praemunire. Cro. J. C. 336. 2 Bultf. 299.

The defendant in a praemunire suit regularly appears in person, whether he be a peer or commoner, unless he is dispensed with by writ or grant for that purpose; but in the case of Sir Anthony Ashley, he was allowed to appear by praemunire or attorney; but it has been thought that there was some clause to this effect in the pardon. 3 Inst. 125. 1 Rel. Rep. 190. 2 Bultf. 290. 2 Hawk. P. C. 273.

Upon an indictment of a praemunire, a peer of the realm shall not be tried by his peers. 12 C. 92. Lord Faul's case.

Upon an information on the statute 6 Geo. 1. c. 18, for setting up a bubble called the North Sea, it was determined, that the court was not obliged by that act to give the whole judgment, as in case of a praemunire, against the defendant, but only forth parts of it as in the other cases, for which he could accordingly under a fine of 5 l. be set on the party convicted, and judgment that he should remain in prison during the King's pleasure. 2 Lord Raym. 1361. The King v. Corwed.

It is sometimes used for an head or chief officer of the King, in a town, manor or village, or a see. See Recur. Animula & res invente cursu ipsi (praeposito) & facerades du- cenda erant. L. 1. Edw. Confessor. cap. 23. This praepositus villae in our old records, does not answer to our present confine, or headborough of a town; but was no more than the revenue, or bailiff of the lord of the manor, sometimes called servius villa. By the laws of Henry the Fifth, the lord answered for the town where he lived, of his majesty; where he was not, his deputy, orfearchal, if he were a baron: But if neither of them could be present, then praepositus & quator de unaqueque villa, i.e. the revenue and four of the most substantial inhabitants were summoned in. See Dr. Brady's Glossary to Introduction to English History, pag. 97.

Preamble, (Preamum), takes name from the preposition pre, before, and ambule, to walk; as if we would, say to walk before.) The beginning of an act is called The preamble, which is a key to open the intent of the makers of the act, and the mischief which they would remedy by the same. The act is considered at Westminster, cap. 7, which gives an attain the: The preamble is thus; Forasmuch as certain people doubt very little to give false verities, or oaths, which they ought not to do, whereby many people are disheartened, and lose their right. Pardons, (Pardenda) is the portion which every member, or can of a cathedral church receive in the common fund of all the revenues of the church, and is properly used for that share which every canons ordi- nary receiver yearly out of the common flock of the church; and prabenda is a severable benefice, rising from some temporal land, or church appropriated, towards the maintenance of a clerk, or member of a collegiate church, and is commonly termed in their act, to further the profit growth. And these prabenda are either fixed or with dignity, Simple prabenda are those that have no more but the revenue towards their maintenance: Pre- bendas with dignity are such as have jurisdiction annexed to them according to the divers orders in every several church, and are termed in their acts (De Prabendis & Dignitatibus). Prabenda, strictly taken, is the maintenance which daily præbatur to another; but now it signifies the rents and profits belonging to the church, divided into those portions called prabenda, and it differs from canonicus, which is a right obtained in the church, by being received into the cathedral or college; Et per officiumfem inchoat in charo & licentia in capite. But prabenda is a right of receiving the profits for the duty performed in the church, sufficient for the support of the person in that divine office where he resides; and it proceeds from canonica as a daughter from her mother. Con- pas prabenda is that which is received by a prabendar, in which he is for his own maintenance. Which are always to have his duty maintained. Prabenda and prabenda were also in old deeds used for provints, provand or provener. Præ- equo pro unam bofcl avunarnum pr pro prabenda capienda. Courcher Book in Dutchy-office, tom. 1. fol. 45. The Golden prebendary of Hereford, otherwise called præbendarii episcopos, is one of the twenty-eight minor prebendaries there who has ex officio the first canon's place that rails, was anciently confessorius of the cathedral church, and to the bishop, and had the altrages; whereby, in return of the gold, and other rich offerings formerly made there, he had the name of Golden præbenda.

A counsellor ought not to be heard to speak against common precedents. 1 Stot. 124. cites 13 H. 7. 23.
Precept, (Præceptum) Is diversely taken, in law, as sometimes for a commandment, in writing, sent out by a justice of peace, or other like officer, for the bringing of a peron or records before him; of which there are divers examples in the table of the Regis, judicial. And in this sense it seems to be borrowed from the cœlum of Lamberti, and the several precedents and devices of mortality,Hotom, in verb. Libri, ii, l. 3. Commentar., in libris foedus. In prefentiat. Sometimes it is taken for the provocation, whereby one man incites another to commit a felony, as theft, murder, &c. Staw. Pl. Cor. fol. 105. Bracton, lib. iii, tract. 2, lib. i, c. 9. Or, in a strict sense, præceptum; præceptum being the intimation used, before-hand, for the subtance in the fact, as to help to bind the party murdered or robbed; confition, advice either before, or in the fact. The Civilians use mandatum in this case.

Pretious stones, May be imported or exported duty free, 6 Gen. 2, c. 7.

Precontract, (Pre-empnis,) Was a privilege allowed the King’s purveyor, to have the first buying of corn, and other provisions, before others, for the King’s house, which is taken off by a statute, made 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

The altering settled rules concerning property, is the oft dangerous way of removing land-marcks; see Par. Ch. J. Warne’s Rep. 399. Hil. 1717. in the case of Goodworth v. Wright. Where things are settled and rendered certain, it will not be material, how, as long as they are so, and that people know how to act; see Ld. Ch. Warne’s Rep. 452. Trin. 1718, in the case of Butler v. Duncombe. Lord C. Tollett said, He thought much better to flock the known general rules, than to follow any one particular, which might be found on reasons unknown to us. Such a proceeding would confound all property. And then citing the case of Lady Langbrough v. Wright, as of the strongest authority to the case in point, is Lordlipid said, that though it had not been in the case of Lords, he should have thought himself bound by the general and accepted rules of law, in Caes. in. Ed. Tal. tost. time 26, 27.

It is dangerous to alter old established forms. Per A. Tollett. Cafer in Caer. in. Ed. Tallett’s time 196. Pofh. 1736, in the case of Ne Exeat Rega to Scotland since the union. Hunter v. Macray, See 16 Fin. Ad. 113. 12 Ed. 1, cap. 27.

gift is void, because the habendum can only limit the duration of the eftate, but no man can by virtue thereof hold the land given to him. In Co. Lit. 7. a. Cres. Eliz. 903. 2 Rol. Abr. 66, 67.

If lands be given to a husband, habendum to him and his wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, the wife takes nothing, because she was not mentioned in the premises; and therefore shall take nothing of that which was before given to her husbund. 2 Rol. Abr. 67.

But there are these four exceptions from this rule: 1. That if lands be given in frank-marriage, the woman, who is the caufe of the gift may take by the habendum, though she be not named in the premises; as if lands be given to J. S. habendum marit Higgins uma cum the woman who is daughter of the dons; this is a good eftate-tail in the wife; for these customary grants, which are made in pursuance of a former surrender, are construed according to the custom of the ancient socieies, as well as it believes that, the custom of the manor is the rule for the expiation of such fort of grants, and in many manors such fort of form is usual. Poph. 125, 126. Brook's eftate. Cres. Jac. 434. 2 Rol. Abr. 67. Cres. Eliz. 323. Deavon and Hopkins.

3. That a man not named in the premises may take an eftate in remainder by limitation in the habendum. 2 Rol. Abr. 68. Hob. 313. Cres. Jac. 504.

4. In wills; for if a man devises lands to J. S. habendum to him and his wife, this is a good devise to the wife; because in confuption of wills, the intention of the devor is chiefly regarded; and wherever that discover itself it shall take place, though it be not expreft in those legal forms that are required in conveyances executed in a man's life-time. Plew. 158, 414. 2 Rol. Abr. 68.

Prendre, is the power or right of taking a thing before it is offered; from the French prendre, i. e. occi- pere: It lies in render, but not in prendre. Co. Rep. 1 par. Sir John Peter's eale.

Prendre de baton, Signifies literally to take a huf- band; but it is used as an exception to divide a wife from pursuing an appeal of murder on account of the husband of her former husband. Staunf. Cor. lib. 3. cap. 59.

Prepenfum, (Prepenfus) Fore-thought; as malice prepens, malitia praegratitio, when a man is flain upon a fudden quarrel; yet if there were malice prepens formerly between them, it makes it murder; or, as it is called, fupine murder. 1 Hen. 7. c. 7. prepens murder. See Murder. 3 Inft. fol. 51.

Pregrogative, (from pra, ante, and rogare, to ask or demand) is a word of large extent, including all the rights and privileges which by law the King hath, as head and chief of the Commonwealth, and as intruded with the execution of the laws. 2 Rol. Abr. 149. See Stamp, Prærog. cap. 1 Co. Lit. 90.

The nature of our constitution is that of a limited monarchy, in which the legislative power is lodged in the King, Lords and Commons; but the King is intrusted with the executive part, and from whom all justice is falfed, and hence he is filled the head of the Commonwealth, supreme protector, the lawgiver, but still it is to make the law of the land the rule of his government; that being the measure as well of his power, as of the subject's obedience. For as the law afferts, maintains and provides for the safety of the King's royal person, crown and dignity, and all his just rights, revenues, powers and prerogatives; so it likewise declares and afferts the rights and liberties of the subject. 11 Id. 13 Co. Lit. 19, 75. 4 Co. 124. 4 Bac. Abr. 149.

Hence we may without peradventure rule a rule, that all prerogatives must be for the advantage and good of the people, otherwise they ought not to be allowed by the law. Mow. 672. Shaw. P. C. 75. 4 Bac. Abr. 149.

The rights and prerogatives of the crown are in most things as ancient as the law itself; for though the King in private, by what is called the nature of prerogativa Regis, seems to be invested with an exclusive power, yet for the most part it is but a form or collection of certain prerogatives that were known law long before: As that the King's wardship of lands held in capitis, did attract the wardship of land held of others; that the grant of a manor did not pass an advowson appentant, unless named; that the King hath a right to ефетіш, wrecks, royal fifies and many others which are appertinent to the ancient prerogatives of the crown. Bentl. 117. 2 Inft. 263. 496. To Co. 64. 4 Bac. Abr. 149.

And herein we must take notice, that the rules which make the law for those that govern private inheritances, except only as to the rule of fullest patronage, and which do not hold in the deficit of the crown or its possessions: Neither is half blood so imprisoned in such case; for the brother of the half blood shall be preferred to the fifter, in the enjoyment of the crown as the most capable of the two, by the advantages an prerogative of his fex. Co. Lit. 15. b.

Therefore, if the King hath issue a fone and a daughter by one venter, and a son by another venter, and pat- clas lands and dies, and the eldest fone enters, and do without issue, the daughter shall not inherit those lands nor any other fee-fimple lands of the crown, but if younger brother shall have them together with the crown Co. Also it is held, That every King for the time being is the actual possiffion of the crown, is a King within the intension of the abovementioned statute; for there is a munificency that the realm fhould have a King, by whom, as in whole name, the laws are to be administered; the King in possession, being the only person who either doth or can administer the laws. Those laws must be the only person who hath a right to that obedience which is due to him who administers those laws; and since by virtue there he secures to us our lives, liberties and properties; and other advantages of government, he may jufly claim retu

So, if a river, so far as there is a flux of the sea, leaves its channel, it belongs to the King; for the English sea and channels belong to the King; and he hath a property in the soil, having never distributed them out to subjects. 2 Roll. Abr. 170.

But if a river, in which there is no tide, should leave its bed, it belongs to the owners on both sides; for they have in that case the property of the soil; this being no original part or appendix to the sea, but distributed out as other lands. 2 Roll. Abr. 170.

If land be drowned, and so continue for divers years; if it be after his death, other lands of the subject, he can have no recompence, unless he should be intitled to what he regains from the sea. 8 Med. 107.

2. Of the King's prerogative in escheats; in seas and navigable rivers; in swans and fish; in beacons and lighthouses; in wrecks; in coins and mines; in dower goods; and in masts, ships and treasure trove.

An escheat may be either per defetum fanguinis, or per delictum tenentis; but it is said, That in case of an attainer of felony, the escheat to the lord is pro defetum tenentis; and the not confecrating the consequence of the corruption of the blood; but in case of treason, the lands come to the crown as an immediate forfeiture, and not as an escheat. Co. Lit. 13, 92. Grot. 211.

If the King's tenant dies without heir, the lands shall escheate and revert again to the crown; but the lands holden of any other lord shall, for want of heirs of the body, be granted to the King. 2 Inst. 36. Rit. Fl. 104. 2 Bell. Rep. 251. 4 Inst. 224.

If lands be held of the King as of an honour come to him by a common escheat, as the tenants dying without heir, or committing felony, these lands are part of the honour; otherwise if forfeited for treason, for then it comes to the King by reason of his perfon and crown; and if he grants them over, Q.E., the patentee shall hold of the King in chief. 2 Inst. 64.

It was found by special verdict, That the prior of Merton was feized of a house in Southwalk, held of the archbishop of Canterbury, as of his borough of Southwalk; and 30 Edw. surrendere to the King H. 8. who granted the said house to one George, a London, Middlesex and Essex to J.S. and his heirs, to hold in lie of him in libre burgagens, by fealty, for all services and demands, and not in capite; and afterwards Q. Mar. granted the manor and borough of Southwalk to the mayor and commonalty of London; and the tenant of the said mef- diage died without issue; and the question was, whether Q. E., or the patentees of the borough should have the escheat; and adjudged for the Queen; for the first pat- tency of the mefliage held it of the Queen in socage in capite, as of a feignory in gros; and the words in libre burgagens are decently void; for the land out of the borough cannot be held in libre burgagens; and there shall not be several tenures for one time or tenure was reftored by the King for all; and therefore of necessity it shall be a tenure in socage of the King. Cr. Eliz. 120. May v. Street.

It is universally agreed, That the King hath the sovereign dominion in all seas and great rivers; which is plain from Selden's account of the ancient Saxons who reigned over the parties in all geographical affairs; and therefore the territories of the English seas and rivers always belonged in the King. Seld. Mar. Cl. 254, 26. 1 Roll. Abr. 168, 169. 5 Coh. 106. 1 Coh. 141.

And as the King hath a prerogative in the seas, so hath he likewise a right to the fishery and to the tides; so that if a river as far as there is a flux of the sea leaves its channel, it belongs to the King. Dyer 326. 2 Roll. Abr. 170.

It hath been settled, That all judicial acts done by any the Sixth, while he was King, and also all acts of felony and charters of denization granted by him, were valid; but that a pardon made by Ed. 4. before he was actually King, was void even after he came to the crown. Hawk. 56, and the authorities there cited.

The rightful heir of the crown, during such time as the usurper is in plenary possession of it, and no possession thereof in the heir, is not a King within this act, as was the case of the house of Tudor, during the plenary possession of the crown in Hen. 4. Hen. 5. Hen. 6. But if the King retains once the possession of the crown, as King, though an usurper had gotten the possession thereat, yet the other continues his title, and claim thereat, and afterwards re-enters the full possession thereof; a compounding the death of the rightful heir, during that interval, is compounding of the King's death within this act; as it continued a King full and pleni possession of his kingdom; which was the case of Ed. 4. in that small interval wherein Hen. 6. re-obtained the crown; and the act of Ed. 5. notwithstanding the usurpation of his uncle Rich. 3. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 104.

It was resolved by the judges, in the case of Sir H. and Ann. That King 2, was King de facto as well as de jure, and that last's death, and that therefore all those who acted against him kept out of possession, in ob- currence to the powers then in being, were traitors. Keding 4, 15. 1 Kebr. 315. That no person was in possession of my sovereign power known to our laws. 1 Hawk. P. C. 6.

By the 1. M. 2. 3. cap. 1. sect. 3. "The kinging office of this realm, and all prerogative, royal power, authori- ties, and jurisdiction concern- ing, annexed, being invested neither male nor female, are as absolutely invested in the one as the other."

By W. & M. M. 2. c. 2. sect. 7. "Every person that shall hold the church of a city, or shall profess the popish religion; shall marry a papist, shall be incapable to inherit or en- joy the crown of this realm, and Ireland; and in such case the people shall be abolished of their allegiance, and no crown shall descend to such persons, being protestants, as should have inherited the same, in case the person so deceased was dead."

And by sect. 10. "Every king and Queen, who shall ascend in the imperial crown of this kingdom, shall on the first day of the meeting of the first parliament, next after his or her coming to the crown, sitting in the house of the peers, in the presence of the lords, and that he partitioned it out in large duchies to the great men who had deferved well of him in the wars, and were able to advise him in time of peace. Hence it is said, That the King hath the direct dominion; and that all lands are held mediately or immediately from the crown. Co. Lit. 1. Dyer 154. 1 Bend. 3d. Sed. More Clauf."

Hence it is, That if the seas leave any arch by a sudden falling off of the water, such derelict lands belong to the King; but if a man's lands lying to the sea are increased declared the King's court; and its jurisdiction derived from him who protects his subjects from pirates, and provides for the security of trade and navigation. 4 Inf. 142. Milly 66.

From the King's dominion over the sea it was held, that the King, as protector and guardian of the seas, might before any statute made for commotions of seamen, provide against inundations by lands, banks, &c., and that he had a prerogative therein as well as in defending his subjects from pirates, &c. 10 Co. 141. Cafe of ile of E.35.

It is notwithstanding the King's prerogative in seas and navigable rivers, yet it hath always been held, that a subject may fish in the sea; which being a matter of common right, and the means of livelihood, and for the good of the commonwealth, cannot be restrained by grant or prescription. 8 Ed. 4. 18, 19. Brs. Cufirom, 4th Pl. Bar. 4 Mod. 105, 106. 1 Salt. 657.

Alfo it is held, that every subject of common right may fish with lawful nets, &c., in a navigable river as well as in the sea; and the King's grant cannot bar them thereof; but the crown only has a right to royal fish, and that the King only may grant. 6 Mod. 74. 1 War. v. Matthew. 4 Salt. 357. S. C. & P. for Hot Ch. J. on demand of Salmon fisharium in the river E.; by grant from the King.

The King, as a perpetual sign and acknowledgment of his dominion of the seas, hath several creatures reffered to him under the denomination of royal creatures, as fea-vans,feareans and whales; all which are natives of seas and rivers. 10 Co. 145. 6

It is clearly agreed, that the King only has a prerogative in beaches and light-houses; and that he may erect any fuch, and in fuch places as will be most convenient for the safety and preervation of fhips, mariners and navigation; alas it seems to be the better opinion, that this being for the publick utility, and one of the prerogatives that he is entitled with for the safety of the whole realm, he may erect fuch beacon, &c., as well in the fog or ground of a subject as in that of the crown; and that he may do this without the subjects content. 4 Inf. 148. 12 Co. 13. Carter 90. 2 Inf. 204.

Alfo it is clear, that the subject hath not any power to erect any fuch beacon, &c., without the King's licence and authority for that purpole. See the authorities Supra and Carter 90.

But by the 8 Eliz. it is enrolled, That the master, wardens, and affillants of the Trinity house of Ripoff Street, fhall and may law fully from time to time at their own charge and pleaure, and at their cofts, make, erect, and fet up fuch and so many beacons, marks and figues for the fuch in the fsea shores and uplands near the fsea coasts, or forlands of the fsea only, for fee-marks, as to them faille feem meet; whereby the dangers may be avoided, and the fhips the better come to their ports; and all fuch beacons, marks and figues fo by them to be erected, fhall be continued, renewed and maintained from time to time at the costs and charges of the faid master, wardens and affillants.

By the common law the King hath an undoubted right to freds; and his prerogative herein is founded on the dominion he hath over the fsea; and being fovereign thereof and protector of fhips and mariners, he is intitulated to the delict goods of the merchant; which is the more common, as it is a means of preventing the barbarous cuftom of defrauing persons who in fhipwrecks approach the shore, by removing the temptations to inhumanity. Gr. Tra. Bell. 117, 133, 141. 2 Inf. 167. Milly 127.

It is clearly agreed, that by the common law the King hath a prerogative in, and is intituled to, all royal mines of gold and silver and treasures of gold and filver hid in the earth; and that he is intituled with the coinage and making money current; and that he alone can bring the mines and treasures of any conquered country into use, by coining them out into his money; and this prerogative is lodged in the King as he administers justice to all; and therefore the power and regulation of that which is the common standard and measure of all bartering and commerce is committed to his care. Dau. 19. 2 Rel. Atr. 166. 5 Co. 114. 1 Co. 146.

This prerogative is given to the King as a necessary conftquence of the power of war and peace; for there can be no wars made without the experience and conftumption of ftreame. Plow. 315.

Besides it was thought, that if any other persons had power of mines of gold and filver, they might by their own fucces too formidable, and reft the authority from the King which was deposited in his hands only. Plow 316.

So if a perfon dies intelette, and without kindred, his goods and chattels belong to the King; and herein the usual course is faid to be for a perfon to procure the King's letters patents, and then the ordinary admits the patente to administration. 1 Salt. 37.

But at the common law, the owner purfuing the felon and the goods, the owner may retain them; and upon an appeal of felony, the owner is entitled to a writ of rilletution; and as a farther encouragement for the procufion of felons, by the 21 H. 8 c. 11. it is provided, that if the party comes in as evi dence on the indictment, and attaint the felon, he fhall have a writ of rilletution awarded by the judge of all 4 Bar. 3. Of the King's prerogative over the perffns of his faltjeffers, in restraining them from going abroad, and commanding them to return home.

All perffns born in any part of the King's dominion and within his protection are his subjects; and anchor born in Ireland, Scotland, Wales, the King's plantation or on the English sea; who by their birth owe such an ineparable allegiance to the King, that they cannot be in any act of their removce or transfer their subjects. 4 Co. 1, 2. P. C. 35.

If the king of England makes a new conqueft of any country, the perffns there born are his subjects; for by the lives of the people conquered he gains a right and property in fuch people, and may impose on them what law he pleafes. Dyer 224. Parkinson. 281.

But unitl fuch laws given by the conquering prince the laws and cuftoms of the conquered country fhall be notionally confornt to the laws and cuftoms of the country where they were contrary to our relative, or access any thing that is mutu in fu, or a fient; for in all fuch cases the laws of the conquered country fhall prevail. 2 P. Inf. 75, 76.
There may be a new and uninhabited country found out y English subjects, as the law is the birth-right of every object, so wherever they go they carry their laws with them, and therefore such new found country is to be governed by the laws of England; though after such conquests, acts of parliament made in England without naming the foreign plants, will at first obtain. 2 P. Will. 75. 2 SaLT. 411. like

But the Common law every subject may go out of the kingdom for merchandise or travel, or other cause, as long as he abides by the acts of parliament: this appears from the statute 5 & 6. cap. 2. made to restrain erors palling out of the realm, but excepts lords, great men, and notable merchants; as also by the statute 26 & 27. cap. 10. which gave power to the King during his life to restrain persons from trading to some certain places as which he had been vain and idle, if the King by his prerogative might have done it. F. N. B. 5. Dyer 165. 266. 2 Harl. Rep. 12. 3 Med. 131. 442.

But notwithstanding this general freedom and liberty allowed by the Common law, it appears plainly that the King, by his prerogative, and without any help of an act of parliament, may prohibit his subjects from going out of the realm; but this must be by some express prohibition; as by laying on embargoes, which can be only one in time of danger, or by writ of Ne exeat Regnum, which, from the words Quamplurima robis & coram munera habes, it appears it is an absolute writ, but is never granted universally, but to restrain a particular person, upon oath made that he intends to go out of the realm; indeed Fitcherburys says, the King may restrain his subjects by proclamation: he alleges as a reason for it, that the King may not now where to find his subjects, fo as to direct a writ to 12. Co. 33. 11. Co. 92. 1 Fiz. N. B. 89. 2 Inst. 4.

As the King may restrain any of his subjects from going abroad, in like manner it is clearly agreed, that he may command them to return home; and that the disponing a pryve fee for this purpose is the highest contempt, and the most absolute writ, but is never granted universally, but to restrain a particular person, upon oath made that he intends to go out of the realm; indeed Fitcherburys says, the King may restrain his subjects by proclamation: he alleges as a reason for it, that the King may not now where to find his subjects, so as to direct a writ to 12. Dyer 128. 175.

So in the case of one Bartue who married the Dutchess of Suffolk, they obtained a licence from Q. Mary to go out of the realm, under pretence of recovering some debts they were intituled as executors to the Duke; when in reality it was on account of the religion afflicted by Q. Mary, and living with other fugitives for the protection of the Palgrave of the King in Germany, who was an eminent Calvinist, were sent to by private fee; but the messenger in endeavouring to serve them with his letters, being obstructed, beat and abused by their servants and attendants, a certificate was made of this, and their lands and tenements seised. Sir Francis Englefield's cafe. See also 7 Co. 18. Poph. 18. 4 Lev. 135.

So in the case of Sir Robert dellafield, who intending to travel, obtained a licence from King James I. to go to Venice; but before his departure he by indenture intolled for valuable consideration, as was expressed in the deed (but none paid) conveyed the manor of Killingworth with other lands to the Earl of Nottingham and others in fee, with a pretence that upon tender of an angel of gold all should be voided; and with a covenant on the part of the bargainers that they should make all such eftates as the said Sir Robert should appoint; the bargainers were not parties to the deed, nor had they notice of it till sometime after; but afterwards they made a lease to Sir Robert Lea, to the great prejudice of the new possessors of part of the premises for ten years, if their eftate continued so long unrevoked. The King hearing that Sir Robert had been guilty of some bad practices beyond sea, in the fifth year of his reign sent his Privy feal to him, which he not obeying, the great question in this case was, Whether those lands thus conveyed were forfeited, and adjudged that they were, the conveyance being fraudulent as to the King. Lane 42. &c. The King v. Earl of Nottingham, Puch. 7 fasc. 1. in peace.

In these cases it hath been held, that the King hath only an interest in the offender's lands till he return; and that his reftorung to them to him is not a matter of grace mut at right of. Lane 48. Per Tanfield Ch. Baron.

4. Of the King's prerogative in relation to Civil and Ecclesiastical jurisdiction; in creating officers, and in making war and peace.

All jurisdiction exercised in these kingdoms that are in obedience to our King, is derived from the crown; and the laws, whether of a temporal, ecclesiastical or military nature, are called his laws; and it is his prerogative to take care of the due execution of them. Hence all judges must derive their authority from the crown, and they have no power to change or alter the laws which have been received and established in these kingdoms, and are the birthright of every subject; for it is by those very laws that he is to govern; and as they prescribe the extent and bounds of his power, in like manner do they declare and ascertain the rights and liberties of the people, and the already due of innovation or change, but by act of parliament. 1 Inst. 164. 2 Inst. 54. 478. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 131. 282. Vain. 418. 2 SaLT. 51c.

From the inherent right infeparable from the King to distribute justice among his subjects, it hath been held, that an appeal from the Ista of Man lies to the King in council, without any reference either to the Ista of Man or any such right; and it was said, that though there had been exclusive words, that yet the grant must have been confined to be void upon the King's being deceased, rather than the subject should be deprived of a right infeparable to him as a subject, of applying to the crown for justice. 1 P. Will. 349. 2 Ch. Cor. 2. 17.

The supremacy of the crown of England in matters ecclesiastical, is a most unquestionable right, which, as my Lord Hare says, may be proved by records of undoubted truth and authority; and though, as he says, the pope made great usurpations and encroachments on this right, yet there were others that did contain to the same; and those encroachments are now pored off by the statutes 25 Hen. 8. cap. 19. 20. 21. and 26 Hen. 8. cap. 1.

So that the King of England doth not recognize any foreign authority superior or equal to him in this kingdom, neither do the laws of the emperor or pope of Rome, as such, bind in the kingdom of England; but all the
The King, as the fountain of justice hath an undoubted prerogative in creating officers, and all officers are said to derive their authority mediate or immediately from him; those who derive their authority from him are called the officers of the crown, and are created by letters patent; such as the great officers of state, judges, &c. and there needs no greater or stronger evidence of a right in the crown herein, than that the King hath created all such officers time immemorial.

The power of making war or peace is inter jura humain imperii, and in England is lodged fully in the King; though by my Lord Hale says, it ever was hitherto left to the crown, and for the better marking of all bills, informations and letters memorials in the council of York, was unreasonable and void. I jen. 231. Munf. v. Esfer.

The power of making war or peace is inter jura humain imperii, and in England is lodged fully in the King; though by my Lord Hale says, it ever was hitherto left to the crown, and for the better marking of all bills, informations and letters memorials in the council of York, was unreasonable and void. I jen. 231. Munf. v. Esfer.

A general war, according to my Lord Hale, is of two kinds, 1. Bellum folenamit denunciam. 2. Bellum non folenamit denunciam. The first is, When war is solemnly declared or proclaimed by our King against another prince or state, which is the most formal formality of a war now in use. 2dly, When a nation slips suddenly into a war without any formality, which happens by granting of letters of marque, by a foreign prince invading our coasts, or setting upon the King’s navy at sea; and hereupon a real, though not a formal war may and must do, and therefore to prove a nation to be at enmity with England, or to prove a perfon to be an alien enemy, there is no necessity of shewing any war proclaimed; but it may be averred, and so put upon the trial of the country, whether there was a war or not. 1 Hal. Hisf. P. C. 163.

5. Of the King’s prerogative in relation to his debts.

By stat. 9 H. 3. c. 8. The King nor his bailiffs shall levy any debts upon lands or rents so long as the debtor hath goods and chattels to satisfy, neither shall the pledges be detained so long as the principal is sufficient; but if he fail, then shall the pledges answer the debt; howbeit they shall have the debtor’s lands and rents until they be satisfied, unless he can acquit himself against the pledges.

Goods and chattels. By order of the Common law, the King for his debt had execution of the body, lands and goods of his debtor; this is an act of grace, and renews the power that the King before had. 2 Inf. 19. Pledge is disfavored. It was resoluted by the court, that this act be null and void, nor may the King extend to sureties in a bond or recognition, if they may be so called, being bound themselves equally with the principal, as sureties to perform covenants and agreements are in like manner; but to pledges and manuacks only, who by express words are not refundable, unless by special principles become involvent, and so are conditional debts. But if the act has always been conformed, and the words themselves imply as much Hord. 378. Mich. 16 Carn. 2. Attorney General v. Reyb. By stat. 9 Hen. 3. c. 18. The King’s debtors dying, the King shall be served before the executor.

2. By this statute, the King by his prerogative shall be preferred in satisfaction of his debt by the executors before any other. And if the executors have sufficient to pay the King’s debt, the heir nor any purchaser of his lands shall not be charged. 2 Inf. 32.

Stat. Wiften. 1. Ed. 1. c. 19. enacteth. That the sheriff having received the King’s debt, upon his next account to render to him as we are made of law, but not so much to the debtor, and to make fine at the King’s will. And the sheriff and his heirs shall answer all monies that they whom he employed did receive, and if any other that is answerable to the exchequer by his own hands do so, he shall render thirds so much to the plaintiff, and make fine as before. And upon payment of the King’s debt, the sheriff shall give a talley to the debtor, and the process for levying the same shall be followed him upon demand without fee, or pain to be grievously punished.

The King’s debt. Under this word debt all things due to the King are comprehended, and not only debt of the proper feme, but duties on things due, as fines, amercements and other duties to the King received or levied by the sheriff; for debt in its large sense signifies whatsoever a man doth owe; and debera de causa debent habere, debitori enim debeat quod habet, capi creditoris, maxime in calami domini regis. 2 Inf. 198. With whatever taken. This is to be understood, quod restitutionem, but not quod paenam that is for the civil but not for the criminal part; for is a maxim in law, pendes ex deleto defuncti hares tenes non debent; and again in restitutionem non in paenam hares succedit. 2 Inf. 198.

Stat. 15 Ed. 3. cap. 12. enacts. That beasts of the plough shall not be disfavored for the King’s debts so long as others may be found, upon such pain as is elsewhere ordained by statute (viz. by the statute De distillation fiscarior, 51 H. 3.) And the great distresses shall not be taken for his debts, nor driven too far; and if the debtor can find convenient surety, the distress shall in the mean time be released; and he that does otherwise shall be grievously punished.

This is an act of grace, and upon this act there lies writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to receive surety according to this act, which if he refuses, an at tachment lies against him, or the party offering surety according to this act, if he be refused, may have a attachment made against him. 2 Stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. cap. 19. enacts a common pet for to sue a debtor of his (who is likewise a debtor to the King) to judgment, but he cannot proceed to execution, unless the plaintiff gives security to pay the King’s debt first, and then he may take execution for his own debt.

For otherwise, if without giving such security, the party takes forth execution upon his judgment, and levies the money, the same money may be seized up on to satisfy the King’s debt: per Dideresq. J. Cdb. 290. cites 45 Ed. 3. Decies taisium 12.

Stat. 33 Ed. 8. cap. 39. sect. 2. enacts. That all obstructions and obstructions concerning the King and his heir made to his or her use, shall be made to his Highness and to his heirs, Kings, in his or her name or names, by those words, domina regi, and to no other person in his use, and to be paid to his Highness, by those words, foldomum domino regi heredi, et secutoribus suis, with other words used in common obligations, which obliges mentioned in the Act, from hence as charged and charged to and for the payment of the same debt, and of every part thereof.

But if, after the death of either or both of such heirs, or the death of their children, or of any their issue, or if there shall be no issue of such heirs, or if the said debts, and all debts of a like nature, remain unpaid forever, such debts shall be forever liable to the King, his or her heirs, in his or her name, or names,
by those words, domina regi, for the payment of the said
debts, and all such debts of a like
nature, as aforesaid.

And if any suit be brought against such debtor, or any other who shall be his heirs, in his or her name, or names,
by those words, domina regi, for the payment of the said
debts, and all such
debts of a like
nature, then and in that case, such debtor, or such other person, shall be liable to be sued in the name of the said deceased, or shall be liable to the same as if the said deceased had been living, in all cases and matters;
and shall be liable to be sued for such debts in the name of the said deceased,
in all cases and matters;
and shall be liable to be sued for
such debts in the name of the said deceased,
in all cases and matters;
and shall be liable to be sued for
such debts in the name of the said deceased,
in all cases and matters;
and shall be liable to be sued for
such debts in the name of the said deceased,
in all cases and matters;
The issue in tail (the land being in his hands) is liable in either of the said four cases, but not the bona fide issue for the words of the statute do not extend to this alienation; the Common law did not help the King in these cases; the statute helps the King in the said case against the issue in tail. Jenkel. 226. pl. 59.

The issue in tail shall not be charged by this statute for the reason of recency of the tenant in tail by proclamation, by the statute 25 Eliz. but otherwise it had been if he had been convicted by the 3 Edw. 1 Rel. Rep. 94. Mich. 22 Jac. B. in case of The King v. Doctor Pyler, cites as reolved Mich. 39 & 40 Eliz. of the such case. By the express purview of this act, the land shall be freely extended as long as it is in the possession or seisin of the heir in tail for this act says, That in every such case the land shall be charged. And in as much as the land against the issue in tail was not extendable before this act, the King has benefit to extend it in the possession of the heir in tail, which he could not do before; but the King cannot extend the lands of the alience; for the statute does not extend to this, and the makers of the act have reason to favour the purchasers, farmers, &c. of the heir in tail, more than the heir himself; for they are strangers to the debts of the tenant in tail, and they came to the land bona fide, and upon good consideration. 7 Rep. 21. b. &c. 41 Eliz. in Secord Lord Anderson's case.

The same manner

If the goods and chattels of the King's debtors be sufficient, and so can be made appear to the sheriff, whereupon he may levy the King's debt, then ought not the sheriff to extend the lands and tenements of the debtor or of his heirs, or of any purchaser or tenant.

2 Inf. 19. 2d. c. 2d. 41.

Sect. 28. The King shall not be excluded to demand his debts against any of his subjects, as heir to any person indebted to his Highness or to his wife, albeit this word heir be not comprised in such recognition or specialty, or that such persons shall say, that they have not any redemptions to them defended, but only such as be intailed or given to them by the ancestors. By this clause the intent of the makers of the act appears, that the heir in tail shall be only charged with the debt of the King; but lands in fee-simple were extensible under the Common law in whatsoever hands they came, and therefore this act does not extend to them only.

41. Declarat. non sunt jurati but as to the estates in tail, it was introductum noui juris against the issue in tail. Resolved, 7 Rep. 21. b. &c. 41 Eliz. in sect. in Lord Anderson's case.

One P. was indebted to the Queen, and one W. was bound to P. in 100l. in which obligation W. did not mention his heirs; P. affaged the obligation in which W. was bound to him, to the Queen; and upon this process was made against the heir of W. And it was held by the court, that inasmuch as W. did not oblige himself and his heirs, that the heir by the death of the father was discharged; and if the assignment had been made in the life-time of the father, then the father had died, the heir should be discharged, but the son may be charged as executor or administrator, &c. Sav. 2. Poch. 22 Eliz. Warren's case.

Sect. 29. Provided, That the King may at his liberty demand the debts of any executors or administrators of any person indebted, if the executors, &c. have affected to mention his heirs; P. affaged the obligation in which W. was bound to him, to the Queen; and upon this process was made against those who were tertiaries of the said J. S. tempore confessionibus scripto prædito made to the said Sir Richard. Per Monmouth Ch. B. The tertiaries are not chargeable in this case, but the heirs and executors. Per Shute second Baron. If an obligation be made to the King, it shall be of the same nature as a statute flippe to all intents, by this statute; but obligations made to other persons to the use of the King, shall be executed against the obligor, his heirs, executors or administrators, and not against other persons, but if J. N. be bound to J. S. and J. S. aligns this to Sir Richard Cavendish, and he over to the King, no procces shall be made thereupon, which the court and all the clerks agreed. And it was held, that the obligation being to the King, by the Common law, makes sefcoffment of lands, such sefcoffes shall be charged otherwise it is of purchasers before the obligation made in case of the King. Sav. 12. pl. 33. Poch. 22 Eliz. Annu. Sect. 30. If the said hereditaments shall be evicted out of the possession of such persons by jufit title without fraud, the said hereditaments shall be chargeable as is above said; then all such hereditaments shall be acquired of the same debts.

B. was indebted to the Queen, for the payment of which debt certain lands, which were the lands of the said B. at the time of the said debt, were purchased by the King, and one C. was tenant in tail to the said B. who exhibited his bill in the Exchequer-chamber, praying that the equity of the case might there be examined, before any answer made W. pay the debt, and then demanded judgment if the court would hold further plea, inasmuch as the cause of the privilege was determined, which is the debt due to the Queen. And it was held by the court, that upon this reason the court ought to dismiss the cause, and so it was done. *Sav. 15. pl. 39. Poch. 22 Eliz. Sir Thomas Rogland v. Withchild.

Sect. 31. If any person of whom any such debt shall be demanded, flew in any of the said courts sufficient matter in law, reason or good confidence, why such person charged with the debt ought to be acquitted; and such matter so shewed be sufficiently proved, the said courts shall have power to allow the proof and acquit all persons so implicated; any thing in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sufficient matter in law This proof does not give benefit only to him who has matter in good confidence, but also to him who has good, perfect and sufficient cause, and matter in law, reason (and then comes) good confidence; and without question the first words, viz. cause, and matter in law shall extend to all the debts of the King, and proceeds thereupon, as well as Common law as upon this act. And the conclusion of the said branch does not make against it. For the cause therefore that he should plead matter in law or good confidence, and that nothing contained in the said act should be an impediment thereto. Resolved per cur. 7 Rep. 19. b. Mich. 39 & 40 Eliz. in Sir Thomas Cecils case.

Seire factis illius against Sir W. H. as heir to M. H. In this case the court put the case against Sir Edward VI. by the said M. H. the sheriff returned fire fac and upon his default judgment was given. And because in truth he never was fummoned, and had good matter, if he had had notice thereof, to plead in discharge of the recognizance acknowledged, all which he shewed in a bill in English in the Exchequer-chamber; upon which, upon conference had by Monmouth and the other Barons, with the two Ch. J. he was discharged of the said recognizance. 7 Rep. 20. a. in Sir Thomas Cecils case. As 3 Rep. Trin. 37 Eliz. Sir William Herbert's case.

In a vice longum in good confidence A. obtained of the King a Priy seal, whereby the forfeiture of certain recognizances for appearing at the felonies, amounting in the whole to 800l. was granted to her. And it was now made a question, Whether the court might compound thole for feiturey virtue of their Privy seal which was granted before the Priy seal and grant to A.? And it was doubted whether the said Priy seal did not take away and revoke the power given to the court in this particular? But it was held clearly per cur. That the court might upon good matter in equity discharge thos debts by virtue of this statute. And the case in question feem'd a hard case to the court, because the party him- self was in the court, and there was no objection to the party so hearing the very day before they ought to have appeared, that they were disabled thereby to appear. Hard. 334. Mich. 15 Car. 2. in facis. Maior's case.

W. put 100l. out of interest to a defendant, and took bond in the name of one F. who became fide de fe, and now the plaintiff was relieved against the King.
Cing upon this trnth, in equity upon this statute. Sed Quere. Whether this statute extends to any equity against the King, otherwise than in case of plea by way of lifescharge? But it was likewise decreed in that case, that he plaintiff should be freed harmless from all others.

facts incurred against T. the father, and T. the son, or the mean profits of certain lands held by them from his Majesty, for which land judgment was given in his favour, and he was indemified by inquisition, which returned that the said meane profits came to 1000l. upon which inquisition this seire facts incurred; whereupon the sheriff returned that T. the father was dead; and T. the son now appeared, and pleaded that he took the profits but as a servant to his father, and by his command.

Indemnification for this fault was not allowed by the court, and also the judgment for the said lands was given against his father and him for default of sufficient pleading, and not for the truth of the fact; and he threw out this statute, which he pretended aided him for his equity.
Whereupon the King demurred. 1stly. That equity ought to be sufficiently proved, and here is nothing but the allegation of the party, and the demurrer of Mr. Attorney for the King; and if the matter be in law an admittance of the allegation, and not a sufficient proof within the statute, it is to be advised upon; and for that point the court of Chancery may not have execution of the same. 2dly. That this court has execution of the same.

Prerogative court, (Curia praeparatoria Diocesii Cantuariensis,) Is the court wherein all wills are proved, and all administrations taken that belong to the Archbishop by his prerogative; that is, in cause where the defended had goods of any considerable value out of the diocese wherein he died; and that value is ordinarily £ 1, except it be otherwise by composition between the said Archbishop, and some other Bishop, as in the diocese of London it is ten pounds: And if any contention grow between two or more, touching any such will or administration, the cause is properly debated and decided in this court. The Judge whereof is termed Judex curiae Praeparatoria Cantuariensis, the Judge of the Principal and accipar. The principal is the person who actually commits any crime; and the accipar is he who is assisting him in the doing thereof. 2 Litt. Abt. 355.

It seems to have been always an uncontroverted maxim, That there can be no accessories in high treason, or trefpa; also it seems to have been always agreed, That whatever will make a man an accipar before in felony, will make him a principal in high treason and tref-pa; as battery, riot, rout, forcible entry, and even in forgery.

foryery and petit larceny. And therefore, wherever a man commands another to commit a trespass, who afterwards commits it in pursuance of such command, he seems by necessary consequence to be guilty of it, if he holds his command to be from hence it follows. That being in judgment of law a principal offender, he may be tried and found guilty, before any trial of the person who actually did the fact. 2 H. 4. P. C. 310.

It seems agreed, that whoever agrees to a trespass on lands or goods of another, whereby becomes a principal offender. But that no one can become a principal in trespasses on the person of a man by any such agreement: Allo it seems agreed, that no one shall be adjudged a principal in any common trespass, or inferior crime of the like nature, for barely receiving, comforting and concealing the offender, though he know him to have been guilty, and that there is a warrant out against him, which by reason of such concealment cannot be executed. And if he cannot be punished as a principal, it is certain that he cannot be punished as an accessory; because in such omissions, all who are punished as partakers of the guilt of him who did the fact, must be punished as principals in that crime. Yet if a man knowing that there is a warrant against such offender, advise and persuade him to absent himself, perhaps he may be indihtable for a contempt of the law in hindering the due course of justice. 2 Haw. Prior. Pleas. See Books.

Plaints, Property of engraved prints secured. 8 Geo. 2. c. 13.

Prior, Was he who was first in dignity next to the abbot. Camden, edit. 1727.

Prioriit, (Prioriat.) Signifies an antiquity of tenure, in comparison of another not so ancient, as to hold by prioriity to the benefit of a lord more anciently than of another. Old Nat. Br. fol. 94. So, to hold by prioriity, is used in Stannul. Prior. cap. 2. fol. 11. And Crompton in his Jur. fel. 117, utters this word in the same signification. The lord of the priority shall have the custody of the body, Ce. and fel. 150. If the tenant hold by priority of one, and by posteriority of another, &c. To which effect, see also F. N. B. fol. 142.

Priorities of debts and fines. A prioriit depending may be pleaded in abatement of a subfquent action or prosecution. A prior mortgage ought to be first paid off, and debts first due should be first satisfied; for as the tenant himself advances his money before his debtor is incumbered, it is but reasonable he should be paid his debt before the discharge of the subfsequent in-cumbrances: But debts first due must likewise be first prosecuted; otherwise in some cases priority will not be allowed. Comp. Attorn. 120. There is no priority of time in judgments; for the judgment first executed shall be first paid.

It seems agreed, that wherever any suit on a penal statute may be said to be actually depending, it may be pleaded in abatement of a subfquent prosecution, being expressly averred to be for the same offence. Neither will it be an exception to such a plea, that the offence in the subfsequent prosecution is laid on a day different from that in the former. Neither doth a mistake in such a plea of the very day, wherein the fact pleaded as prior was commenced, seem to be material on the issue of mutual record, if it appear in truth to have been commenced before the other, and for the same matter. And if two informations be exhibited on the very same day, it seems that they may mutually abate one another, because there is no prioriy to attach the right of the suit in one informer more than in the other. Allo it seems, that an information or bill the same day that they are filed, may be so far paid that there may be maintained to be paid up on them, that they may be pleaded in abatement of any other suit on the same factuate. And from the same reason it seems also, that a writ of debt may be so pleaded after it is returned; because then it seems to be agreed, that it may be properly paid to be depending; and whether it may not also be so pleaded before it is returned, it seems questionable; because, according to some opinions a writ may be said to be depending as soon as purchased. 2 Car. 1. c. 75.

Pillage, of wities, (mentioned in flax. 1 Hen. 8. cap. 5) Is a word almost out of use, being now called bulter- age (because the King's chief butler receives it). It is a tumult whereby the prince challenge out of every bark laden with wine, containing less than forty tun, two tun only being therefore, the other behind the ship, at his own price, which twenty fhillings a tun yet this varies according to the custom of the place: For at Bofon, every bark laden with ten tuns of wine or above, pays priage. Privilege. (Privilege.) Is defined by Cicero in his nation pro domo fac., to be prava privata omnium. It is, says another, the king's case, whereby a private corporation is exempted from the rigour of the common law. It is sometimes used in the Common law for a place that hath some special immunity. Kiteibin, fol. 118. Privilege is either personal or real: A personal privilege is that which is granted to a one person, either against the world or against the court of the Common law. An example, A member of parliament may not be arrested, nor any of his servants, during the fitting of the parliament; nor for a certain time before and after. A privilege real is that which is granted to a place, as to the universities, that none of either sex, excepted in the case of the Common law, may make within their own premises, or professed in other courts: And one belonging to the court of Chancery cannot be fed in any other court, certain cases excepted; and VoL II. the Exchequer, which seemed that he was an officer, and so an accountant to the King, the privilege was allowed.

By 40. Wall. v. Wrench.

If one holds or has been, or is a barrister, or other person, he shall not have the privilege of the Exchequer for that cause; but if the King grants titles, and thereupon referes a rent for ducies, and a tenure of him, there he shall have privilege. 2 Lev. 21. Lightfoot v. Butler.

On a lawsuit being filed out against the commissioners of the Treasury, and the judges of the Exchequer came into the privilege of B. R., and brought into court the red book of the Exchequer, which is deemed a record in that court; and thereby it appeared, that the Treasurer had privilege of being sued only in that court; and the patent being produced in court which constituted the defendants, G., and granted them the office of Treasurer of England, he was not entitled to exhibit such a writ, and in the court of King's Bench, it was held, that the law judges thereby, and in such a court, with the writ privilege; the court grounding themselves on the record before them. 2 Show. 299. Larpent v. Sir Edward Duering & al.

It had been held, that the Treasurer of the navy is to ipso an accountant; and that an accountant's privilege will hold against a special privilege in another court, as officer of the court or otherwise; though it be not alleged, that such an accountant is entitled upon his account; for that every accountant may be attacked by the court to make up his account, and must attend for that purpose ad die in diem. Hard. 316. Ser. Moor 753.

2 Inh. 23. 551/2.

It had been held, that in B. R. against J. S. he pleaded to the jurisdic tion, That none of the privy chamber ought to be sued in any other court, without the special licence of the Lord chamberlain of the household, and that he was one of the privy chamber; on demurrer to this plea, the court overruled it with great refutement, and awarded a Reverses under. Show. 34. 1 Keh. 137. Barrington v. Venables.

It was agreed in Serjeant Segr's cafe, That the privilege of the court of C. B. which Serjeants claimed, extended only to inferior courts, not to the courts in Westminster-Hall; and that he may be sued in any of those, because he is not confined to that court alone, but may prosecute in any other court; but it is otherwise as to attorneys or philosopher, who cannot prosecute in their own name in any other court but such as they repective vely belong to; and that therefore a Serjeant at law is to be sued by original, and not by bill of privilege. 2 Lev. 129. 3 Keh. 42.

_Moor 296. S. C. 1 Keh. 137. 3 Inh. 7.

As barrister, attorney, or other privileged person, the whole attendance is necessary in Westminster-Hall, particularly to the offering of a affidavit; and that in order to the writ privilege was granted on mo tion; the court having agreed, That he had no more privilege than an attorney's clerk. 2 Show. 287. Ward v. Lawrence.

A Serjeant at law, barrister, attorney or other privileged person, whose attendance is necessary in Westminster-Hall, has the privilege will not insist in his own behalf, but the King's cause, in Westminster-Hall, through the chief of action accrued in another county; and the court on the usual affidavit will not change the venue. Stil. 450. Moor 64. 2 Show. 242.

But it hath been held, That if a privileged person be sued, and the action brought against him in the right court, and thereon the plaintiff will not insist in the true court, Jo. M. in Middlesex. Courth. 126. 1 Show. 148. Biff v. Har court.

If an attorney lays his action in London, the court will change the venue on the usual affidavit; for by not laying it in Middlesex, he seems regardless of his privilege, and in so be considered as a pervert at large. 2 Vent. 47.

Salk. 688.

On a motion to disdarge a rule which had been ob tained for changing the venue, it appeared. That the plaintiff was a barrister and master in Chancery; and the court held that he had a privilege, by reason of his at tendance, to lay his action in Middlesex, and therefore discharged the rule. 2 Lord Raym. 1556. Fiss. 40. &C.

Burrough v. Wills.

Of the privilege of peers and members of parliament.

All peers, without any distinction as to degree or rank, are intitled to privilege; for they are equally obliged to attend the service of the publick, and are always supposed amenable, and to have sufficient property to answer in future, to the actions that might be brought against them, and on their grounds are not to be arraigned or molested in their per sons. This privilege extended formerly to abbots, as it does to bishops, members of the convocation, and mem bers of the house of commons at this day. 4 Inh. 24.

The privilege of parliament according to the law of parliament is of a very extensive nature; but all that is here intended to be treated of is only the taking notice of actions that fall upon them, so that they may be re ferred to be found in the books of law; not to determine concerning this privilege as settled by the rules and orders of each house, of which they themselves are the sole judges, though the King's courts incidently take notice thereof, and are bound to determine in matters of privilege when so directed by act of parliament. Lord Coke lays of this law, ob another quaternity, c, a multi gnorurate, a puicti cognitii. 4 Inh. 15. 12 Co. 69. 4 Inh.

Cair. 181. 604. 2 Lord Raym. 1111. See 2 Med. 66.

This privilege extends only to the peers of Great Brit ain; so that a nobleman of any other country, or a lord of Ireland, hath not any other privileges in this kingdom than a common person; also the son and heir apparent of a nobleman is not entitled to the privilege of being tried by his peers, which is confined to such persons as is a lord of parliament at the time; but it seems that an infant peer is privileged from arrests, his person being held sacred.

_Cor. 23. 50. 393.

The courts of Scotland had no privilege in this kingdom before the union, but now by the 230 article of the uni on, the sixteen elected peers shall have all the privileges of the peers of parliament of Great Britain; also all the rest of the peers of Scotland shall have all the privileges of the peerage of England, except such as that of sitting and voting in parliament.

Q. Cor. 17. 1 P. Will 583.

A perciefs by birth is intitled to privilege; so of a perciefs by marriage, and that as well during the coverture as after; but as a perciefs by marriage is said to lose her dignity by marrying a commoner, if after such mar riage she is intitled to any privilege. 2 Inh. 50. Stil.

Dyer 759.

It was held by my Lord. Ch. J. Holt, in the case of the Lord Banbury, that where a person is called by writ to the house of Peers, he is no peer 'till he sits in parlia ment, the writ giving him no nobility or honour; but that it was the sitting in the house of Lords, and associ ating himself with them that enabled his blood; and that therefore, if the King or he dies before a parliament meets, the writ is determined, and the party remains a commoner; but he held otherwise in a creation by letters patents, by which the party is immediately noble without any other seal or ceremony; and though the par ties duties remain to him and his posterity, according to the limitations in the patent. 4 B. E. Abr. 229.

A member of parliament shall have privilege of parliament, not only for his servants, but for his horses, &c. or other goods indefinitely. 4 Inh. 24.

J. S.
J. S. brought debt for rent against H., who pleaded that he was tenant and servant to Lord Mo-- and prayed in writ of privilege might be allowed him; the plaintiff answered; it was argued, that the matter of the plea was against the Common law, but not against the privilege; and the court held that the privilege did not extend generally to prevent the privilege of parliament; every court hath its privilege; I conceive the writ of privilege belongs to a parliament man, so far as to protect his lands and estate; and you have admitted it is privilege by your demurrer. Steil 129, Smith v. Hals. of Latch 150. and the C. S. Cit. 150, 223. 2 Jan. 1555. The lord chancellor, on a writ of fi--ge, alleging that he was obliged to attend the house of lords; but it appearing that he was fined upon an eject, and the court considering the great inconvenience which could ensue, and being of opinion that it was in their discretion whether they would grant such writ or no, upon an application he might plead it if he would, but they would not award such a writ, or if his privilege was strangled, he might complain to the house of Lords. Var. 154.

In debt, the defendant pleads he was a servant to a member of parliament, and also capi.f for arresti non pendit; this plea was overruled, and he was obliged to stay proess to quod magnatum, &c. and curum familt- ret capi for arresti was denied; for nullum habitation plebii privilege non debet impediuntur; idem refpic.tans. Pro. 105.

Defendant also a general implication pleaded, that he had given his consent to a peer, the Earl of Paradise; and to North Ch. J. it is not receivable, for it is not privilege to the matter and not the servant; but the defendant is of right to sue his writ of privilege, for perhaps his master will not protect him; and if he will not, he is then left an answer; like to the case of a counsellor, where it is privilege of privilege, but is not reflected to the secrets of his client but if the client be willing the court will compel the counsel to discover what he knows; which Serjeant Maynard laid was his father's before the Lord Chief, in the court of wards. North it, as it was a matter of great consequence, he would have with Lord Chancellor and the rest of the judges, and he used to be done in such cases; afterwards it was handed over, and North said it was moved in the house Lords, and that they had left it to the judges; and therefore the plea was rejected. Pafab. 30 Car. 2. p. 2. in B. Law v. Writelsby.

By an order of the 24th of January 1566, in the court of wards, the libel was revived, That no common attor- ney or solicitor, though employed by any peer, should have the privilege of this house.

By an order of the 24th of May 1724, this privilege as referred to menial servants, and others necessarily employed about the affairs of peers, was revived.

An attorney was taken in execution upon a 24. fa. the plaintiff, State, judgment, and great was con- torted of the Lord Say and Seal, the sheriff discharged his act as steward to his lordship; a rule was obtained at the fide-bar for the return of the writ; and now on motion in court to discharge this rule, it was urged in beh-alf of the sheriff, that this privilege belonged only to peers, and not to the party, and was not rebuttable by the proceeds; and that therefore the court ought not to sift upon a return, as the sheriff could not justify the detention of the defendant, but under peril of the house peers; but on consideration of the above-mentioned laws, and on considering the nature of this case, that the plaintiff had an important office in the privy council to a return of his writ; that without such return the plaintiff might be debarred from any further execution; but inculpably from the great inconvenience that might arise allowances of attorneys, who are officers to the courts in which they respectively practice, and therefore amenable to those courts, this kind of privilege; the court gave the plaintiff liberty to proceed against the sheriff, but gave him time till next term to make his return. Mich. 10. Gre. 2. in B. R. Wickham v. Hobart. 4 B. 4. Dec. 230.

In all civil causes this privilege is regularly to be allowed; so that a peer of the realm, or a member of the house of Commons, is not to be arrested or molested in his person or estate. Bre. Exigent.

But privilege of parliament doth not extend to high treason, felony, breach of the peace, or for party of the peace. 4 H. 25. Privy Council of Parliament Writs. And therefore not an infraction for treason or felony to trespass vi et armis, affaill or riot, proceed of outlawry shall issue against a peer of the realm; for the suit is for the King, and the offence is a contempt against him; but in civil actions between party and party, regularly a capias or exias does not issue against a lord of parliament. 2 Hel. H. P. 3. C. 2.

If a peer of parliament be convicted of a diffidvin with force, a capias pro fine and exias shall issue; for the fine is given by statute, in which no person is exempted. Gre. Eliz. 170. Lord Stafford v. Thynke. See Dyce 514.

So in debt upon an obligation against the Earl of Lin- coln, who pleaded non est factum, though it was argued against him, the judgment was idio capitator; which on a writ of error brought by him was objected to, that in a capias does not lie against a peer of the realm; sed non allevium; for by this plea found against him, a fine is due to the King, against whom none shall have any privilege. Gre. Eliz. 170.

An information was exhibited in B. R. against the Earl of Devonshire, for striking in the King's palace, which being in time of parliament, he insisted on his privilege of a peer, and refused to plead in chief, but put in his plea of privilege, to which there was a demurrer, and the plea overruled, and he was fined 3000l. Cond. 49. The King v. Earl of Devonshire.

In the case of the seven bishops it was infifted, that peers of the realm could not be committed in the first in- stance, for a misdemeanor before judgment; and that no precedent could be allowed where a peer had been brought in by a capias, which is the first process for a bare mide- member; and they put in a plea in writing of their be- longing peers, &c. but the plea was rejected. 3 Mod. 215.

Alfo peers of the realm are punishable by attachment for contempt in many instances; as for refusing a per- son arrested by due course of law; for proceeding in a exias against the King's writ of prohibition; for dis- charging other men's causes, or that the King's prerogative, or the liberty of the subject are nearly concerned; and for other contempts which are of an enormous nature. 2 Hazk. P. C. 152.

If a peer be returned on a jury, on his bringing a writ of privilege he may be discharged; also it forms the bet- ter opinion, that without such writ he may either chal- lenge himself, or be challenged by the party. Dyer 314. Mait 1679. 9 Co. 49. C. Litt. 157. 1 Jan. 1553.

Also in the case of Sir Edward Banton, who being returned on a jury, the court would not force him to be sworn against his will, he being a parliament man, and the parliament then sitting. Pach. 37 Car. 2. in B. 2.

A day of grace shall not be given against a lord of par- liament; for he is presumed to be attendant on the ser- vice of the public. 9 Co. 49. a.

So if a peer be made stedward of a bar court, or ran- ger of a forest, he may from the dignity of his person, and the presumption that he is engaged in the more weighty affairs of the Commonwealth, exercise the offices by deputy; though there are no words for this pur- pose in his creation. 9 Co. 49. a.

So if a licence be granted to a peer to hunt in a chase or forest, he may take such a number of attendants with him as are for the chase or forest. 9 Co. 49. 3.

A peer or lord of parliament cannot be an approver for it is against Magna Charta for him to pray a coroner. 3 H. 25. 129.

If a peer of the realm bring an appeal, the defendant shall not be admitted to wage battle, by reason of the dignity of his person. 2 Hazk. P. C. 427.
In Trench the following privileges are laid down as belonging to peers: 1. They are intitled to a letter mis-five. 2. They have a knight to try an issue which concerns them. 3. They are not to be arrested for debt, trespass or any personal action. 4. They are exempted from forcible process. 5. To have no day of grace against them. 6. Upon the trial of a peer for treason or felony, they try him upon their honour only, and not upon oath. 7. When they pass through any of the King's forts to attend upon the King, upon blowing a horn they may have a buck or doe, as the feast of the year. 8. They have power in the King's court to revise judgments given in the King's Bench. 9. They have the benefit of clergy, tho' they cannot read. 10.
They are not liable to find carriages for the King when he removes from one place to another. Jenck 127.

In the case of Colonel Pit, the parliament was prorogued the 16th of April 1734, dissolved the 17th, and the new writs bore the 18th following, and the defendant Pit, who was a member of that parliament, was arrested on the 20th; one of the questions in this case was, Whether the arrest was within the time of privilege? And it was determined that it was, although the defendant had lived for two years before, no further direct action could be brought against him, but the court did not think it necessary, in the determination of this cause, to ascertain the exact time of privilege that members of the house of Commons were intitled to after a dissolution of the house of parliament. Trin. 8 Geo. 2. in B. R. Col. Pit's

3. Of the proceedings in courts by and against perfons intitled to privilege of parliament.

By the statute 12 & 13 W. 3. cap. 13. sect. 1. it is enacted, That any perfon may prosecute any suit in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, or Chancery, or Exchequer, or the Dutchy court, or in the court of Admiralty; and in all causes matrimonial and testamentary in the courts of arches, the prerogative courts of Canterbury and York, and the delegates, and all courts of appeal, against any lord of parliament, or any of the knights, citizens and burgesses of the house of Commons, or their serveys, or any other person intituled to privilege of parliament, at any time immediately after the dissolution or prorogation of parliament until a new parliament shall meet, or the same be re-affembled, and immediately after the dissolution or prorogation of both houses for fourteen days until both houses shall meet; and the said courts may after such dissolution, prorogation or adjournment, procceed to give judgment, and make final decrees and sentences thereupon; any privilege of parliament notwithstanding.

Stat. 2. Provided, That this act shall not subject the perfor of any of the knights, citizens and burgesses, or any other person intituled to privilege of parliament, to be arrested during the time of privilege; nevertheless all any person have cause of action or complaint against any peer, such perfon after such dissolution, prorogation or adjournment as aforesaid, or before any fifons of parliament, may give any interrogatories, out of the court of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer against such peer, as he might have had out of time of privilege; and if any person have cause of action against any of the knights, citizens or burgesses, or any other person titled to privilege of parliament, after any such dissolution, prorogation or such adjournment, &c. Such person may perforc such knight, citizen or burgess, or other perfon titled to privilege, in his Majesty's courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, by summons and diftrefs infinite, or by original bill and summons, attachment and diftrefs infinite, which the said courts are intitled to pass upon, and they may enter a commum appearance on file common bail; and any person having cause of suit or complaint may in the times aforesaid exhibit any bill or complaint against any peer, or against any of the said knights, citizens or burgesses, or other person intituled to privilege, in the Chancery, Exchequer or Dutchy court, and proceed thereupon by letter or judicata as usual; and upon leaving a copy of the bill with the defendant, or at his last place of abode, may proceed thereon; and for want of an appearance or answer, or for non-performance of any order or decree, may assize the efface of the party, as is the case of a peer, but shall not arrest the body of any of the said knights, citizens and burgesses, or other privileged person, during the continuance of privilege of parliament.

Sect. 3. Where any plaintiff shall by reason of privilege of parliament be stay'd from prosecuting any suit completed by such plaintiff, he may be heard by any fusture of limitation, or nonqualified, dismissed, or his suit dit-continued for want of prosecution, but shall upon the riuing of the parliament be at liberty to proceed.

Sect. 4. No suit or proceeding in law or equity against the King's original and immediate debtor, for the rece-very of any debt originally and immediately due to his Majesty, or against any person liable to render an account to his Majesty for any part of his revenues, or other original or immediate duty, or the execution of any fuch proceedings, shall be impaired or delayed by privilege of parliament; yet so that the perfon of fuch debtor or accountant, being a peer, shall not be liable to be arrested, or being a peer, be imprisoned, or his estate be sequestrated, nor, during the continuance of privilege, be arrested by such proceeding. See *the Stat. 2 B. 3 Ann. cap. 18.
Geo. 2. cap. 74.

Sect. 5. This act shall not give any jurisdiction to any court to hold plea of any real or mixed action in other manner than such court might have had thereon before.

It hath been always held, that a peer is to put in his anfwer to a bill in equity, on his honour only, and not his oath; but when he is examined as a witness, he must be sworn.

Alfo if a peer be brought in court to be examined on interrogatories, or to make an affidavit, the fame must be on oath. Salk. 512. & vid. Preced. Ch. 3. p. 72.

As where the Lord Sturton brought a bill against Sir Thomas Meers, to compel him to a specific performance of articles for the purchasing of Lord Sturton's estate, Sir Thomas in his defence intitled that there were defects in Lord Sturton's title to the estate; and it being ordered that Lord Sturton should be examined on interrogatories, touching his said title; it was objectted, that Lord Stur-ton being a peer of the realm ought to answer upon ho-our only; but it was ruled by Lord Harcourt, that the privilege of peerage did allow a peer to put in his anfwer upon honour only, yet this was restrained to an anfwer; and he added, that where a peer is examined as a witnefs, he must be upon oath; and that this examination upon interrogatories, being in a cause wherein his Lordship was plaintiff, to enforce the Execution of an agreement, as his lordship would have equity, fo he should do equity, and allow the other side the benefit of a discovery;
and that in a legal manner; and accordingly ordered Lord Sturton to put in his examination on oath. 1 Wills 145.

It hath been held, that though a court of equity will not proceed against a member that hath privilege of parliament, yet if a parliament man fuses at law, and a bill is brought here to be relieved against that action, the court will make an order to stay proceedings at law 'till affirmative order. 1 Vern 329.

R. T. being chose a burgess for Buckingham, and having a trial at bar to be had on Tuesday before the sitting of the parliament, moved to have his privilege allowed him; but was denied, in regard the parliament was not fitting, nor to fit 'till after the trial had. Rog. 11.
1 Sid. 43. S. C.

It hath been held, that in an action founded on the statute 15 & 16 Car. 2. sect. 12 W. 3. the defendant shall have an impeachment; and it was said in this cafe, that the practice is to file a bill in nature of a special complaint against the defendant, and then to sumon him; and if he appears upon such summons, the plaintiff may declare against him, as in vulguis marlhill. *Hill. 10 *Geo. 1.
1 B. R. Waithworth v. Handlee.
Peers are intitled to a letter missive, which method was introduced on a presumption that peers would pay towards the costs of suit, as it were, if it were not so plain as to be intimated on that respect that it is due to the peerage.

177. If the lord doth not appear upon the letter, a solaspana on motion is awarded against him; because no subsequent process can be awarded but upon a contempt to the Great seal, and the Chancellor's letter is only ex gratia.

If on the voir dire of the solaspana, the peer doth not appear, or if he appears, and does not put in his answer, no attachment can be awarded against him, because his person cannot be imprisoned; but the proceedings must be by sequestration, unlesse caufe, &c. and this is regularly made out, upon affidavit made of the service of the letter and the solaspana, although sometimes it is moved for without, since the peer may have writ of service at the day assigned to shew cause why the sequestration should not issue; and this order for a sequestration is never made absolute without an affidavit of the service of the order to shew cause, and a certificate of no cause flown.

2 art. (which have been put off on that account) the very first causes in the paper, when the court sits after delay, is privileged.

A bill being filed against a peer or peers, the first application is for my Lord Chancellor's letter returnable in term of time; or it may be immediate, if the peer or peercess lives in town; but in this case there must be an affidavit, that the original letter is left with the peer at his broad, and that the letter is received, and the answer therewith is also left an office copy of the bill signed by the fix clerk; for if the bill is not signed, the issue is irregular.

4 Bar. Abr. 298.

This letter is only a compliment, and no procels to found proceedings on; so that the peer may appear or not, as he pleases; if he fail a solaspana issues against him, and his time for appearing and answering being out, an attachment must be actually false and entered against him, though never executed, to ground a sequestration upon. It is a motion of course for a sequestration upon an attachment for want of an answer.

4 Bar. Abr. 298.

The peer must be personally served with this order, and be eight days to shew cause after personal service of the order; if no cause, the order is absolute; as if the sequestration is for want of an appearance, and appears, the plaintiff run must file race over again on or want of an answer, and the peer must pay time to flower, as suitors do.

4 Bar. Abr. 298.

The fame proceeding is against a member of the house of Commons; there the party proceeds by way of sequestration, only with this difference, that instead of a letter, here is always a solaspana issued out; and when a caufe arises against him, or a cause for contempt in the paper, if the bill is put in, and cannot proceed (privilege being in the court never strikes it out as they do in other cases where the party is not ready, they let it fland over from one term to another, till privilege is out, and never put the party to sue out a solaspana to hear judgment; and the direction of the court to the registre to put privilege of the party who have been put off on that account, the very first causes in the paper, when the court sits after delay, is privileged.

4 Bar. Abr. 298.

A sequestration was granted, unless cause, against the Lord Clifford for want of an answer; he afterwards put in an answer, which being reported insufficient, it was refused, and the suit for contempt in the paper, if the bill is put in, and cannot proceed (privilege being in the court never strikes it out as they do in other cases where the party is not ready, they let it fland over from one term to another, till privilege is out, and never put
the party to sue out a solaspana to hear judgment; and
the direction of the court to the registre to put privilege of the party who have been put off on that account,
the very first causes in the paper, when the court sits after delay, is privileged.

4 Bar. Abr. 298.

W. 3. Likewise granted the motion, it appearing to be both within the meaning and words of the statute; and the party had it. But should it have been denied was not granted by the Master of the Rolls, yet the registre refused to draw it up as thinking it against the course of the courts; which being moved again before the Lord Chancellor, his Lordship, upon reading the statute,
Vol. II. No. 117.

117. There are three sorts of privacies, viz. privilege in effate, in blood and in law. Privy in blood in kindness of privies in blood inheritable, and this is in three manner, sic, inherited as general heir, or as special heir, or as general and special heir. Privies in effate are as joint tenants, baron and feme, donor and donee, leaffer and leffe, and joint tenancy in law are, when the law with out blood or privy of effate cafe, the right of the privy, makes his entry lawful, as lord by effeet, lord that tners for mortmain, lord of villains, &c. Rep. 42. b. Hill 45 Eft. Wislingham's cafe. C. Cited per James J.
fs. 32. in the cafe of Godfrey v. Wade.

There are town of privacies, viz. in respect of effate only, contras only, effate and contract together.
Privy in effate is, as if the leffer grants over his reversion, (or if the reverfion ecbate.) Now between the granting (or the lord by effeet) and the leffe, there is privy in effate only. So between the leffer and af-fiagene of leeffe; for no contract was made between them.
Privy of effate is personal privy, and extends only to the person of the leffer, and the privy of the leffe, as in the principal cafe when the leffe affigned over his intereft, notwithstanding his affiliation the privy of the contract remained between them, tho' privy of the effate be removed by the act of the leeffe himself; and the reason of this, is, flue. Because the leeffe himself shall not prevent by his own act such remedy which the leffer had against him by his own contract, but when the leffer granted over his reverfion, there, agains his own grant, he cannot have remedv; because he has granted the reverfion to the other, to which the rent is incident. 32. The leeffe may grant the term of land for the use of a poor man, and not to be able to fale the land, and who will by iudgence, or for malfice, permit it to be frefed, and then the leffer shall be without remedv, either by diftrife, or by action of debt, which shall be inconvenient, and will concern in effect every man, (because for the most part every man is a leeffe, or a leffe,) and for those two reasons all the cafes of entry by tort, evifion, fupenfion and apportionment of the rent are anwered; for in cafe it is either the act of the leffer himfelf, or the act of a ftranger, and in none of the fad cafes, the folc act of the leeffe himfelf shall prevent the leffe of his remedv, and will introduce such inconvenience to the term of land; and the feffe, and eaffe together, is between the leffer and leffe himfelf.

Privies, (derived from the French privie, familiarit) Signifies him that is par-taker, or hath an interef in any action or thing; as prives of blood, Old Nat. Bre. 117. are those persons who are linked in kindred, every peer in their heir in privy is privileged.

2. As for sole dividers divers, see Mas. 21. fol. 147.

Privy was between me and the tenant.

Littleton, fol. 136. If I deliver goods to a man, to be carried to such a place, and he, after he hath brought them thither, doth flay them, 'tis felony; because the privy of delivery is determined, as soon as they are brought through the hand of the man.

25. Merchants privy are opposite to merchant strangers, 2 Ed. 3. 9 & 14. The author of the New Terms of the Law maketh divers sorts of privies, sic, privies in effate, privies
privies in ded, privies in law, privies in right, and privies in blood. See Parkin 831, 832, 833, and Geo. l. 3. fol. 23. Walker's cafe, and lib. 4. fol. 125, 124. mentions four kinds of privies, viz. Privies in blood, as the heirs of any person; privies in representation, as executors or administrators to the deceased; privies in estate, as he in the revenue, and he in the remainder, when land is given to one for life, to another in fee, for that their estates are created both at one time: The fourth is priory in tenure, as the lord by osche, that is, when the land escheats to the lord for want of heirs. Cowell, edit. 1777.

Privies inheritable, as heir general, shall take benefit of the infamy, as if infant tenant in fee-simple makes sequestration, and dies, his heir shall enter. The same law of him that is heir general and special, and also of him that is heir special, and not general. But privies in estate (unles in some special cases) shall not take advantage of the infancy of the other. 8 Rep. 42. b. 53. Westminster's cafe.

A sufferer by an idlet of an estatte for life to destroy a contingent remainder is void at initis, and therefore any perfon may take advantage of it, as well privy in estatte as heir at law. But a sequestration and livery made propriis manibus of the idmet, not being merely void, makes a difference. Carth. 436. Hill. 9 W. 3. B. R. Thompson v. Litch.

And the Steward, Treasurer and Controller, or two of them, shall have power to determine the matter according to law. See Infant.*

Proclamation. (Proclamation) Is a notice publickly given of any thing, whereof the King thinks fit to advertise his subjects, and so it is used, 7 Ric. 2. cap. 6.

It is plain that the King by his prerogative may, in certain cases and special occasions make and issue out proclamations for prevention of offenses, to ratify and confirm an ancient law, or as a foreseen evil, to prevent them, that they keep the laws of his displeasure; and such proclamations being ground on the laws of the realm are of great force. Partes, de Laud. cap. 9. 12 Co. 74. 75. 11 Co. 87. Dalf. 20. pl. 10. 2 Rel. Atr. 209. 3 bift. 162.

It is likewise clear, that the subjects being charged on pain of fine and imprisonment to obey every proclamation legally made; that though the thing prohibited were an offence before, that yet the proclamation is a circumstance which highly aggravates it; and upon which alone the party disobeying may be punished. *12 Co. 74. Hob. 251.

It is clearly agreed, that no private person can make any proclamation of a publick nature except by custom, as is usual in some cities and boroughs; this being a prerogative act, with which alone the King is intrusted. Bra. Proclamat. pl. 1. 12 Co. 75. Cramer, Jur. 41.

But notwithstanding the King's prerogative herein, it seems clearly agreed, that the King cannot by his proclamation change any part of the Common law, statutes or customs of this realm; nor can he by his proclamation create any offence which was not an offence before; for that these things cannot be done without a legislative power, of which in our constitution the King is but a part. Dalf. 20. pl. 10. 12 Co. 75. 11 Co. 87. 1.

On this foundation hath been laid the ground of the King's proclamation prohibiting the importation of wines from France, upon pain of forfeiture, was against law and void; there being no war at that time subsisting between the nations. 2 bift. 63.

So where an act was made by which foreigners were licensed to merchandise within London; and *4. 4. by proclamation prohibited the execution of it, and ordered that it should be in supfense ufque ad proximum parliaments, and this was held to be against law. 12 Co. 75.

Upon a conference between some Lords of the Privy Council and the two Chief Justices (of which the Lord Coke was one) and Ch. B. and Bacon were of the question was, Whether the King by proclamation might prohibit new buildings in and about London, 2dly, If the King might prohibit the making of flarch of wheat. And the judges were of opinion, that the subject could not be restrained in these particulars by the King's proclamation. 12 Co. 74.

In the light of the above-mentioned opinion, there are instances of persons who have been sentenced in the star-chamber upon proclamations against the increase of buildings; and particularly in *Hob. where a perfon was fined in the star-chamber for building without brick, though upon an old foundation; and it is there said, that such buildings had an ill effect, as a preventer of fire, consumption of timber, and difficulty of feeding, clearing and governing the city; and it was said in general, that proclamations were so far just as they were made for public service; and for public utility. *Hob. 251. *Arm. Stead's case.

*The King by proclamation may call or diftive parliaments, or declare war or peace; for these are prerogative acts with which he is intrusted as the executive part of the law; but if there be an actual war between us and a foreign nation, it is not necessary in pleading to shew that such war was proclaimed. *3 bift. 162. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 163. Owen 45. *Roil. Ent. 605. *The King by proclamation may let into public company, and make it a current money of this kingdom, according to the value imposed by such proclamation; he may legitimate base coin, or mixed below the standard of sterling, he may enhance coin to a higher denomination or value; and may decree money that is current in use and payment, and in all these cases a proclamation, which was, made under the Great seal, is necessary. *Ca. The King by proclamation may appoint fads and days of thanksgiving and humiliation; and ifue proclamations for preventing and punishing immorality and proclamations, and injoin the reading the same in churches and chapels. Comp. Incumb. 354.

A proclamation must be under the Great seal, and if denied is to be tried by the record thereof; but if a man pleads that he was prevented doing a thing by proclamation, it seems the better opinion, that he need not aver that such proclamation was under the Great seal, for that if proclamation was made, it shall be intended to have been duly made. *Cra. Good out all contemptes, and could not be taken, the bill was taken pro confesso, and a decree upon it decreed to be well grounded, and a bill of review ordered to be inscribed.

In a suit for tithes the defendant was in contempt for not answering, and was brought by several orders to the arity and being a quaker, refused to answer on oath, but stayed to answer without oath. Finch C. admonished him of the perils, viz. that the bill must be taken for pro confesso, and, saying he was sure after hearing what the Lord Chancellor pronounced the decree, though Sir J. Clerk, as amicus curiae, said, that this suit for tithes, especially small tithes, was not proper for this court, and had not been used; but decreed for him plaintiff, and referred the valuation to the Maller. C. Cnap.

The defendant having appeared, and afterwards found in contempt 'til fequestration was returned; it was infilled, that the bill ought to be taken pro confesso; but he Lord Keeper said, He would consider of it 'til the next term. And it being alleged, that baron and fee were defendants, and that it was the wife only who had answered, and that without the husband's privy, Lord Keeper referred it to a Maller to examine the fact, and said, if it should fall out to be so, he could not decree against the husband, but they must proceed, and lay on him to sequestration to bring him in. Vern. 247. Trin. 684. Gilson v. Stormont.

The court was going to answer, and flanding out all contemptes 'til an order was made for a sequestration; it was prayed by the plaintiff's counsel, that the bill might be taken pro confesso. To which it was objected by the counsel on the other side, that this could not be done, because the sequestration was neither under seal nor executed, and also because the Maller did not produce the original indent, but only a copy of it. Lord Chancellor Parker held the last objection certain a good one, but as or the other, there seemed to him to be no reason for it; for the putting the seal to the sequestration, and actually executing it, seems to be then only necessary when he plaintiff is not ripe for a decree upon his own bill, it want some discovery from the defendant's senec, upon which the decree may be founded; and therefore he actual executing a sequestration to extort an answer, of which the plaintiff has no occasion, seemed to him very unnecessary. 10 Mod. 431. Pofb. 5 Geo. Ann. fent for every cathedral or collegiate church, and two for the body of the inferior clergy of each diocese: And by virtue of these letters authentically sealed, the said bishop of London directed his like letters severally to the bishop of every diocese of the province putting them in like manner, and commanding them not only to appear, but also to admonish the said deans and archbishops personally to appear, and the cathedral or collegiate churches, as also the common clergy of the diocese to send their proctors to the place at the day appointed; and also willed them, to certify to the archbishop the names of all and every person and persons summoned by them, in a schedule annexed to their letter certificatory. The bishops proceed accordingly, and the cathedral and collegiate churches, and also the clergy make choice of their proctors; which done and certificated to the bishop, he returneth all at the day. These proctors of the clergy had heretofore place and suffrage in the Commons house of parliament, as appears by the statute 21 R. 2. cap. 2. & 12. See Prio foronum, Convocation, and 4 Inst. fol. 4.

Procurations (Procurations). Are certain sums of money which parish-priests pay to the bishop or archdeacon, ratione satisfactorum: They were ancienly paid in necessary wheather for the visitor and minister, and afterwards turned into money. Complaints were often made to the pope of the excessive charges of the procurations, which were prohibited by several councils and bulls. That of Clement IV. mentioned in the Monachism, 2 tom. pag. 165, is particularly, wherein that pope tells us, that complaint had been made to him, that the archdeacon of Aginhal in Normandy, received money with fifty bound and three horses, twenty-one dogs and three hawks, and did so grievously oppress a religious house with that vast equipment, that he caused the monks to spend in an hour as much as would have maintained them long time. Conv. edit. 1777. See 17 Fin. Ann. 355.

Procurator, Is a person who has a charge committed to him by another. So the proxies of lords in parliament, are in our Law books called procuratores. It signifies also a vicar or lieutenant; one who acts instead of another. In Petrus Blisfens, &p. 47. we read of a procurator Eccez. So procurator reipublica is a public magistrate. There are also procuratores clerici sent to the convocation; and the bishops sometimes are called procuratores ecclesiarum. And from this word proceed the civil right of procurator in the civil court. It is also used for him that gathers the fruit of a benefice for another man. Stat. 3 Ric. 2. rec. 1. cap. 3. and procuracy for the writing or registering that he is authorized. Procurators are at this day in the west parts called proctors. Procuratores ecclesiasticis parochialis, The churchwardens who were to act as proxies and representatives of the church, for the true honour and interest of it. Paroch. Antiq. 562.

opinion that a prohibition ought by law to be granted; in this case they will not compel the party to find special bail to the action in the common law. Salis. 22. Gurr. 5. Com. 74. 1 Lord Raym. 576. S. C. Clay v. Smelgrove.

If there is judgment against a fimoniff, who by the {affent} of parties is to continue for a certain time on the benefice, and who at the expiration of the time refuses to remove, but commits waste on the house or glebe, a prohibition to stay doing waste may be had by the patron, incumbent or any other person, because that is the King's writ; and any one may pray a prohibition for the King, and it is grantable ex debito justitiae, and not honorary, and in the dioces of the court. Comp. Incomb. 43. 1 Sid 65. Hob. 247.

2. Who have a right to, and may demand, and join in a prohibition.

The King may sue for a prohibition, though the plea in the spiritual court be between two common persons, because the suit is in derogation of his crown and dignity. F. N. B. 40.

So if the ecclesiastical court will hold plea of any matter which belongs not to their jurisdiction, upon information thereof to the King's courts, either by the plaintiff, defendant or by a mere stranger, a prohibition will issue. 2 Leiz. 651.

And where a matter is in the spiritual court for a matter which does not appertain to that court, but to the Common law, as a matter of frank-tenement; yet he himself, against his own suit, may pray a prohibition, and shall have it. 2 Rol. Ab. 312. 1 Leon. 130. Godilf. 149. 12 Ch. 56.

So where the plaintiff in the spiritual court brought a prohibition to stay his own suit there, for that he suing for tithes by virtue of a lease made by the vicar of A. for three years, the defendant claimed to be discharge of the tithes by a former lease and composition by deed; and in this case it was held, that the plaintiff himself may have a prohibition to stay the suit; for the ecclesiastical judges are not to meddle with the trial of leases or real contracts, though they have jurisdiction of the original cause (viz. the tithes); for the lease is in the reality, and is not merely accidental; and it makes no difference, that the plaintiff brings prohibition to stay his own suit; for if the temporal court has knowledge by the fact, that the spiritual court meddles with temporal trials, a prohibition ought to be awarded. Cro. Jac. 351. 2 Bull. 283. Lit. Rep. 20. Wurtz v. Cliffon.

If a vicar sues a parochioner for tithes in the spiritual court, and the parson appropriate appears there pro interesse sua, and prays a prohibition, it shall be granted. 2 Rol. Ab. 312. Robert's cafe. Cro. Eliz. 251. Eliz. 110.

If several libels are exhibited against A. and B. in a matter in which the court hath not conscience, A. and B. cannot join in a prohibition; so if the griefs be several, as in the books say. Nay 131. 1 Leon 288. Cro. Car. 129.

But where the vicar of A. libelled several persons severally for tithes, who joined in a prohibition, suspecting a med; and though the court held in this cafe, that the prohibition was not regularly brought, being in all their moves, where there were several libels; yet insomuch as this was on a custom, and matter triable at Common law, in which the Ecclesiastical court was properly prohibited, tho' not in exact form, they refused to award a confutation; but directed that the parties should put in several declarations, as if there had been several prohibi-

Where the matter suggested for a prohibition appears upon the face of the libel, an affidavit is never intituled upon; but if it does not appear upon the face of the libel, or if a prohibition is moved for, more than appears upon the face of the libel, to be out of their jurisdiction, there ought to be an affidavit of the truth of the figigation. 2 Salk. 549. The figigation in the temporal courts may be traversed. 2 Ifl. 611. 2 Co. 44. Mort 525.

On a rule to file caufe, why a prohibition should not be granted to stay a suit against the plaintiff in the court of the archdeacon, for not going to his own church, or any other church, on Sundays or holidays, nor receiving the sacrament thrice a year, upon figigation of the statute of Eliza, and tole ration act, and then qualifying himself into the act, and alleging, that he pleaded it below, and they refused to receive his plea; caufe was shewn, that this fact was false, and that the plaintiff was not a dissenter, nor had qualified himself at first, and therefore hoped the court would not suffer the rule to stand unless there was an affidavit of the fact; for by that means any person might come and figigate a false fact, and out the spiritual court of their jurisdiction, which the court admitted; and therefore for want of such affidavit the rule was discharged. 1 Id. Raym. 1211. Burdett v. Newell.

If a plea to an inferior jurisdiction be properly tendered, which they refuse, tho' this be a good caufe for a prohibition, yet an affidavit must be made of the referral. Sin. 20. Hard. 406. 3 Ed. 217.

On a libel for calling the plaintiff old thief and old whore; the defendant suggested for a prohibition, that if any such words were spoken, they were spoken at the same time; but this figigation was held ill, because the words ought to have been fully confided. 1 Vent. 10. Day v. Pitts.

But as 3 Ed. 6. cap. 13, it is enabled, "that if any party at any time hereafter, for any matter or cause before reheard, limited or appointed by this act to be sued or determined in the King's Ecclesiastical court, or before the Ecclesiastical judge, do sue for any prohibition to any of the King's courts where prohibitions before this time have been used to be granted; that then in an action of Libel, where the party shall be granted to him or them, shall bring and deliver to the hands of some of the justices or judges of the same court, where such party demanded prohibition, the very true copy of the libel depending in the Ecclesiastical court concerning the matter where the party demanded prohibition, subscribed or marked with the hand of the same party, and under the copy of the said libel shall be written the figigation, whereby the party to demandeth the said prohibition; and in case the said figigation, by two honest and sufficient witneses at the levell, be not proved true in the court where the said prohibition shall be grant-

The party on failure of proof of the fuggestion, shall not only have double costs and damages, but also his costs and damages in the action he brings for the recovery of them.

Bendl. 143. See fl. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 11.

But if the prohibition be ground ed partly on a malus, which need not be shown on the oath of the parties, which needs no proof, ought not to be double costs; for the mixing the contract with the manner of titling privileges the whole.

Brewn. 99. Tlov. 119.

So where for a variance between the libel and fuggestion, a consultation was awarded, and double costs adjudged to the defendant; and this was held to be error by the very letter of the statute, which gives double costs only for want of proving the fuggestion, and for no other cause. Tlov. 79, 80. So where a prohibition was obtained upon a fuggestion which was not proved within the fix months, when the defendant took issue with the plaintiff, which was found for the plaintiff; and in this case it was revolved, that the defendant should not have double costs for want of the fuggestion's being proved; for the statute is, that he shall have a consultation and double costs; but in this case he could not have a consultation, the matter and issue being found against him; but ought to have prayed a consultation upon the fuggestion's not being proved, and then should have had his double costs.

A prohibition is not to be granted the last day of term, but on motion a rule may be obtained to stay proceedings till the ensuing term.

At what time a prohibition is to be granted; and in what cases it may be granted to inferior temporal courts.

It is clearly agreed, that in all cases where it appears upon the face of the libel, that the admiralty, spiritual court, &c. have not a jurisdiction, a prohibition may be awarded, and is granted as well after as before sentence; for the King's supremacy, and partly on a superintendency over all inferior jurisdictions, and are to take care that they keep within their due bounds.

Dike v. Brow.

It is clearly agreed, that a prohibition doth lie as well to a temporal court as to the spiritual, court of admiralty or other court, whole proceedings are different from the Common law, if such temporal court exceed the bounds of its jurisdiction, and take cognizance of matters not arising within its jurisdiction. So in a prohibition to the court of the honour of Ely, where the cause was:—one contracted with another for divers parcels of malt, the money to be paid for each parcel being under 40l. and he levied divers plants thereupon in the said court; wherefore the court here granted a prohibition, because though there be several contracts, yet so much as the plaintiff might have joined them all in one action, he ought to have so done, and fixed here, and not put the defendant to unnecessary vexation, any more than he could splt an intire deed into divers, to give the inferior court jurisdiction in fraudem legat. 2 Vent. 231.

And therefore, in an action on a promiss in an inferior court, not only the promiss, but the consideration must be alleged to arise within the inferior jurisdiction, and must be so proved on the trial. 1 Rel. Air. 545.

But if the plaintiff had shown that the money had been lent infra jurisdictionem currus, or if it had been for goods there sold, the plaintiff would have had no need to say, that the defendant affirmed to pay infra jurisdictionem cu- ris, because the law creates the promiss upon the creation of the debt, which debt being within the jurisdiction, the promiss shall be intended there also. 1 Lord Raym. 211.

In all cases where inferior courts assume a jurisdiction, or hold plea of a matter not arising within their limits, the party hath his remedy, and may flay their proceed- ings, and the court shall have power to regul- arly be obtained by its appearing on oath made, that the fact did arise out of the jurisdiction, and that the defendant tendered a foreign plea, which was refused, 6 Mad. 146. Carth. 402. 1 Salk. 201. 1 Per Will. 476.

In the case of Minda v. Stint it was greatly illuminated upon, that though the party neglected to plead to the jur- isdiction, and to the matter arising thereout, the inferior court, there assumed jurisdiction, the superior courts ought to grant a prob- hition; for that otherwise the parties, their counsel and attorneys, would give a jurisdiction to inferior courts which they were not intituled to by law; but it was otherwise adjudged in this case; and it seems to be now appeared, for whatsoever does arise the jurisdiction, the impa- rchly, the party cannot apply for a prohibition. 2 Mad. 271.

But in the abovementioned case these things were agreed by the court. 1. That if any matter appears in the declaration, which sheweth that the cause of action did not arise infra jurisdictionem, there a prohibition may be granted at any time. 2. If the subject matter in the declaration be not proper for the judgment and de- termination of fuch court, there also a prohibition may be granted at any time. 3. If the defendant, who in- tended to plead to the jurisdiction, is prevented by any artifice, as by giving a short day, or by the attorney's refusing to plead it, etc. or if his plea be not accepted, or is over-ruled; in all these cases a prohibition likewise will lie at any time. 2 Mad. 273.

Cre. El. 228. 3 Lem. 265. Green v. Pentiden.

There are frequent instances of prohibitions being granted to the ecclesiastical courts, to flay fluxs for fees by the spiritual court, which at length are good, for the reasons acquired on this foundation, that demands pro oper & labore are properly determinable at Common law, and that fees cannot be settled by the canon law; and that the spiritual court can only give costs and expenses of suit, but that no action of debt will lie for such costs at Common law; and that the profits arising from the office being temporal, the remedy in the spiritual court to be by quantum meruit or in case it be an office of freehold, by seisin; the denial of just fees being a dijfisen; and therefore it seems to be now settled that neither a proctor nor registre can sue for fees in the spiritual court, but that the proper remedy is, in case of a fee certain, by an indivisibilis affinmitis, or in case of such it is said not to be necessary to prove a tenant, that being implied by law. 2 Rel. Where a man speaks generally of proof, it shall be intended of proof by a jury; as for instance, in debt on a bond conditioned to pay so much within six months after his return from Venice, and proving it, which he did under the hand of the doge himself; but it was held by the court, it ought not to have been in this case, because the defendant had three months time to make satisfaction after proof made, and notice given thereof. 2 Rel. 488. lings; and the plaintiff averred he had not proved it. The defendant pleaded, that D. R. waseward of the court, and that he, (the defendant) was there ready to make it appear, and the reward refused, &c. And upon a demurrer, this was adjudged an ill plea; for where the consideration is to prove a thing generally, it must be such as the law requires, and that is by jury; but where the proof is modified by the agreement of the parties,

Protection of ambassadours. See Ambassadore.

Protection of parliament. Peers and members of parliament, & by their privilege, may protect their men-servants, and those actually employed by them in service; but by a late order, this extends not to others, on written protections. One Cates, gentleman to the Earl of Suffolk, was by order of the house of Lords committed to Newgate, on proof of his being guilty of procuring and selling written protections, from and in the name of that peer, to several persons, to the great danger of his masters, and in breach of the order of that house; and being charged with other crimes, re-refling on the house of Peers, he was sentenced to pay a fine, and to stand in the pillory, Med. Cas. in L. E. 341. See Privilege.

Protection of the courts at Westminster. The protection of the court of B. R. is allowed for any person who attends his own business in this court, by virtue of any such grants, but this is more properly privilege.

Protectionus, The statute allowing a challenge to be entered against a protection, &c. 33 E. 1. See Distraction.

Prouti, (Prosthetri,) Hath two divers applications; one is by way of caution, to call witnesses (as it were) or openly affirms, that he doth either not at all, or but conditionally yield his content to any act, or unto the proceeding of a judge in a court, wherein his jurisdiction is doubtful, or to answer upon his oath further than by law he is bound. See Plowden, fol. 676. Gryphes's, caf, and Reg. Orig. fol. 360. The word was not in the King’s time a minne bill. For example. If I give money to a merchant in France, taking his bill of exchange to be repaid in England, by one whom he at-gnith; if at my coming, I find not my self satisfied, but either delayed or denied, then I go to the Exchange, or open concourse of merchants, and protest, that I am not paid; and thereupon, if he hath any good remaining in any man’s hands within the realm, the law of merchant is, that I be paid out of them to my full satisfaction. Cowell, edit. 1727. See Bills of exchange.

Prestate. See Prestation.

Prestation, (Prastation,) Is a defence of safeguard to the party which maketh it from being concluded by the party to be in abut to doit; that silence cannot be joined by it. Plowd. fol. 276. Whereof see Reg. Orig. fol. 316. It is a form of pleading when one does not diredly affirm or, directly deny any thing that is alleged by another, or which he himslef allegeth. Cowell. ed. 1777.

Prestation is a form of pleading, when one doth not directly affirm or, directly deny any thing that is alleged by another, or which he himself allegeth. A prestation that he made no tennament pro placito that he made not the plaintiff his executor; because if he made no testament he could make no executor. Holin's Max. 26, cites Pl. C. 276. Gryphorck v. Pox. 21. See 10 kinds, 18. When a man pleads any thing which he darest not diredly affirm, or that he cannot plead, for fear of making his plea double; as if in conveying to himself by his plea a title to any land he ought to plead diredly defences by diredly perfons, and he darest not affirm that they were all seised at the time.
PRO
of their death, or although he could do it, yet it will be double to plead two defects, of which both every one by himself may be a good bar; then the defendant ought to have pleaded, or as the French say, the yre prothmas, as to pay (by prothmas) that suit, as one died seised, &c. and that the adverse party cannot traverse. 2dly, Another is, when one is to answer to two matters, and yet by the law he ought to plead but to one, then in the beginning of his plea he may say prothmas (as with respect to a suit with which the defendant is so much concerned, as in the case of two partners, &c. and so he may take issue upon the other part of the matter, and then he is not concluded by any of the rest of the matter which he hath by prothmas confessed, but that he may afterwards take issue upon it. Punishments. (Pena) Is the penalty of transgressing the laws: And as debts are discharged to private persons by a writ of pardon, so for all offences, for disturbing the society, are discharged when the offender undergoes the punishment inflicted for his offence. Kings, and such as have equal power with them, have a right to require punishment for injuries committed against themselves or their subjects, upon the violation of national law; tho'
A purchaser of lands from A. by which B. makes title to, getting the deeds that make out B.'s title, is not lawful. Chan. C. J. 69. Palf. 17 Cor. 2. Ferley v. Fogg.

Plea of his being a purchaser for a valuable consideration was overruled, because he did not plead the purchase made from one of the plaintiff's ancestors; for a purchase from a stranger, who might have no good title, was not a sufficient plea. N. C. R. 135. 21 Cor. 2. Syme v. Nafadyvya.

A. having a long lease of a house, in which his wife had some interest, by her conveyance for eighty-one years, and in consideration of 400 £. assigns it to B., who assigns it to C. his son, who married M. and died, leaving M. his executor. M. on a second marriage conveys it to trustees; etc. A. by bill sets forth this assignment, and that it was a mortgage, and that B. agreed to execute a reconveyance thereof, etc., and prayed a redemption. The executrix pleads she was a purchaser without notice of such agreement; and in consideration of a marriage with J. S. and of his undertaking to pay her debts, she assigned the original lease, etc., such a day to trustees, to the use of her intended husband, not having any notice of the agreement prior to the executing the said deed on marriage. It was decreed, that defendants were in nature of purchasers; and the plea was allowed. Finch R. 9. Mich. 25 Cor. 2. Hordige v. Hardie.

A. indebted by bond, devolved a debt to be paid out of his personal estate; but if it was not sufficient, then to sell his real estate, and pay it: the estate was sold, and by several meane conveyances came to the defendant, who was sued for the debt as charged on the lands which he bought. The defendant pleaded, that he had no notice of the demand, and was a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and that the personal estate was first liable, and that the purchase money was paid to two other of the defendants was liable in the next place, and that there were other lands, which defended to one of them against the defendant, which ought to come in aid of him, and decreed accordingly. Flr. R. 137. Mich. 26 Cor. 2. Prostat v. Edwards, Braon & al.

A purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice was decreed to pay arrears of an annuity charged on the lands purchased, though the same were due thirty years before, and no demand in all that time. Sitch R. 252. Trin. 28 Cor. 2. Duke of Albemarle v. County of Norfolk.

A voluntary conveyance decreed against a (jointdef) purchaser for a valuable consideration; but it seems, that the not having notice was the laches of the jointdef, etc. The 1°. 293, 294. Mich. 28 Cor. 2. Biff v. E. of Bankury.

A purchaser from T. S. who has a decree against him in Chancery for land, shall be bound by the decree, tho' he had no notice of it. 2 Chan. Caf. 48. Hill. 32 & 33 Cor. 2. Snelling v. Spaul.

Bill to show to a purchase a true term, the defendant pleads himself a purchaser, but does deny notice, and so was ordered to answer. Per Lorn. North. Vern. 179. Trin. 1693. Bodlin v. Vandelkendy.

Bill was brought to prove a will, and peremptuate the testimonies of the witnesses; the defendant pleaded himelf a purchaser without notice of any such will, and in- sided there had been a verdict in affirmance of such will (nothing hindering the plaintiff, but that he had a title he might recover at law) the plaintiff ought not to be admitted to examine his witnesses, thereby to hang a cloud over the purchaser's estate; and upon debate the court allowed the plea. Vern. 334. pl. 330. Hill. 1 & 2 Jan. 24th, 1693. Gen. Bettel. Bennet v. E. A. mortgaged land to B. and afterwards by his will (having sons C. and D.) devised the equity of redemption to D.-B. and C. join in an affinmation of the mortgage to E. though E. pleaded want of notice of the will, and that C. was the visible heir, yet decreed, that D. should have the equity of redemption on the foot of the the first mortgage. N. Ch. R. 153. Ed. 1. 1869. Cooper v. Cooper. A. purchaser, having notice of a settlement whereby B. the vendor was but tenant for life, remained to his first, &c. in title, and would have had no notice; B. being, leaving a son; the bill was dismissed as to C., but decreed to A. to account for the consideration money, which he held the estate for, with interest from the decease of B. thereof discounting what was due on a mortgage prior to the settlement which he had bought in. 2 Vern. 384. Mich. 1750. Forrest v. Cherry. Cooper v. C. said, His Lordship took it to be a rule in equity, that where a man is a purchaser without notice, he shall not be equitably in equity; not only where he has a prior legal estate, but where he has a better title or right to call for the legal estate than the others; and therefore dismissed the bill. The case was; A. purchases of B. who had done a 26ch of bankruptcy, but without notice of it; afterwards a commission is taken out, and there being a term standing out in trustees, affignee brings a bill against them, and the purchaser to have the term assigned to him. 2 Vern. 599. Mich. 1707. Wilker v. Badington. A bill was to redeem lands mortgaged in 1694. to the defendant's grandfather by the plaintiff's father for 50 years, the rent void on payment of 126l. and interest. The defendant pleaded, that he is a devisee of those lands under his grandfather's will, who in 1692, purchased them for a 200 years term without condition of re- demption, and had enjoyed 15 years quiet possession. But the court over-ruled the plea for the defendant's not answering the summons as to the mortgage, and if the plea for the purchase may be true, it may be only a term for years to attend the inheritance. Is the clearing a man's field of a crop which he is generally suspected, and of the fame accused before a judge. Of this there was great use in England touching matter of felony, imputed to clerks in former times, as appear by Stawduft. Pl. Cor. Lib. 2. cap. 48. See Clergy, and Wfifm. 1. cap. 2. It is still observed for matters pertaining to the ecclesiastical court, as suspicion or common fame of inconstancy or such like. And here note, That purgation is either canonical, canonicis, or vulgar, vulgaris. Canonical is that which is prescribed by the Canon law, the form whereof is usually thus in the spiritual court, the man suspected takes his oath, That he is clear of the fault objected, and brings a witness to his behalf, and if the burden of proof is not above twelve, as the court shall affigne him, to swear upon their confidence and fidelity, that he sweareth truly. Vulgar purgation was by fire, or water, or by combat, and both by Infidels and Christians, till by the Canon law abolished. Covell. But by the 13 Cor. 2. cap. 14. sect. 4. It shall not be lawful for any peron exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction, to tender or administer unto any peron whatsoever, the oath usually called the oath ex officis, or any other oath, whereby such peron to whom the fame is tendered or administered, may be charged or compelled to confess, or accuse, or to pave him or herself, of any criminal matter, or thing, whereby he or she may be liable to confinement or punishment. Compiled to confess) So that any peron may still offer himself voluntarily, for the clearing of his innocence, to such purgation as hath been described. Gib. 1542. Anciently, upon the allowance of the benefic of cler- gy, penance was delivered to the ordinary, to make his purgation; which was to be before a jury of twelve clerks, by his own oath affirming his innocence, and the oath of twelve compurgators as to their belief of it. 2. H. 3. 385. Wood's G. L. 669. But now, by the statute of the 18 Edw. 3. this kind of pur- gation is not allowed to any, and the peron admitted to his clergy shall not be delivered to the ordinary. A sine dictamen, in pleading is used to supply the want of a traverse. 2 Litt. 405. In cautum fugit fugit a day, the defendant pleads the plaintiff's licence to him to enter on the same day, and that virtue made he entered

he need not pay the defendant of, and as trespas for taking of goods; if the defendant justifies the same day and place: And in trespas and battery, if the defendant justifies that the same day and place the plaintiff assaulted him, and that what damages happened to him was of his own wrong; this is good without qua

eft eadem. 2 Hen. 7, pl. 2. A fact laid to be Nou. 1, and a justification Nou. 2. qua eadem, is well enough without a traverse, the day not being material; but, it had been naught, if the day had been material. 1 Lev. 241. If a trespass is alleged to be Nou, and justification the 11 Nou, and there be an averment of qua eadem, it is here held good without making any traverse. Litt. 1457.

Quaute pluta, Was a writ that lay where an inquisition had been made by an ecclesiastic in any county, of such lands or tenements as any man did seize of, and all that was in his possession was imagined not to be found by the office: The form whereof see in Reg. Orig. fol. 292, and in F. N. B. fol. 255. It differs from the writ called medius inquisitionem, according to the same Firminbert, because this is granted that where the ecclesiastic formerly proceeded by virtue of his office; and the other where he found the first office by virtue of the writ named dacion extremae transitum. Quagnagatina, is Denariori Quadragemaries, in former days it was the custom for people to visit their mother church on Midlent-Sunday, and to make their offerings at the high-altar; as the like devotion was again observed in Whit. Where as the proceedings and oblations at Whitunday, were sometimes commuted into a rated payment of Pentecostals, or Whitfastenings, so likewise the Lent devotion was changed into a customary rate called Quagnagatina, and Denariori Quadragemaries, and sometimes Lutare Jerusalem, because that hymn was sung on Midlent-Sunday. Qua re, was a writ judicial, that lay where a man of religion had judgment to recover land, before execution was made of the judgment; for this writ did go forth to the ecclesiastic, before judgment and execution. In order where there was no religious person, had any right to recover, or whether the judgment was obtained by collusion between the demandant and the tenant, to the intent, that the true lord might not be defrauded. Quam sit ut bene geserit, Is a clause often used in letters patent of the grant of offices, as in those to the Baron of the Exchequer, which must be intended only as to matters concerning their office; and is nothing but what the law would have implied, if the office had been called by a different name.

Quantum balbunt, Is where goods and wares sold are delivered by a tradesman at no certain price, or to be paid for them as much as they are worth in general; then quantum valebit lies, and the plaintiff is to aver them to be worth so much; so where the law obliges one to furnish another with goods or provisions, as an innkeeper his guests, &c.

Quare ejecta infra terminum, Is a writ that lieth for a tenant in fee of land, but out of his farm before his term be expired, against the fosce or feoffor that ejected him. And it differs from the ejecto firmis, because this lies where the lefser, after the lease made, infocheth another, who ejecteth the lessee: And the ejecta firmis lieth against any other grantor that ejects him. Quaint and Quainten, (Decima quinta) is a French word signifying a fifteenth, with us it is a tax, so called from the way it was raised after the fifteenth part of men's lands or goods. Ann. 10 Rich. 2, cap. 1, and 7 H. 7, c. 5. It is well known by the Exchequer roll, what every town throughout England is to pay for a fifteenth. See Fifteenth. Sometimes this word Quaintine or Quainten, is used for the fifteenth day after any feud, as the Quaintme of St. John Baptist. Stat. 13 Ed. 1, in the preamble. It is a mistake that this was a tax of the fifteenth part of all lands, for it was first granted by the parliament 18 Ed. 1, void. Compostas quintas dicta Regi, Ann. 18. It was a heavy impost, and was taken, according to the Custom and Laws of England, to be a fifteenth part of the produce of lands and goods.

Quaintnall, (Quinantlun) A weight of lead, iron and copper, which was numbered, and paid for in hundreds of, at sixpence per cent. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Quainten, (Quinanten) Was a Roman military sport or exercise, on men on horseback, formerly practised in this kingdom to try the agility of the country youth: It was a tilting at a mark made in the shape of a man to the navel, in his left hand having a shield, and in his right hand a wooden sword, the whole made to turn round, so that it was flucci with the lance in any other part but full in the breast, it turned with the force of the stroke, and flucci the forsemen with the sword which it held in its right hand: This sport is recorded by Matt. Parry, ann. 1253. See Parecis, Antiq. p. 18.

Quinto crass, (Quinto exadus, mentioned in stat. 31 Edw. cap. 3.) Is the last call of a defendant, who, is fined to the outlay, where, if he appear not, he is, by the judgment of the coroners returned outlawed; if a woman, married. See Quingut, Outlaw.

Raj. I. A Sans word, and signifies operta reposin, open or partial theft. Lamb. Archi, f. 125, defines it thus, Ran dictus opera reposin, quae negari non potest. In the Saxon laws of King Canute, cap. 58. Si in presumptis militari ran conmemiperit, pro fidi ratione encondat. How- other in the latter part of Henry II. speaking of some things, William the Conqueror amended in the laws of England, faith, Decretum est in domino, quod Francigana appellaverit Anglicum de perjurio ante maris, furis, homicidio, ran quod dictum apertam ramanum quae negari non potest, Anglicus ille defendet, per quod melius volunt, aut judicis erro ant duels. So we till say, when a man takes away another's goods by violence, or he hath taken all he could rap and ran. Raps, from raptis, to snatch. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Rape, From the French racer, to order, dispose of. It is used in the Forst Laws, both as a verb, as to range, and a substantive as to make range. Charta de Foret, cap. 6. To range allo, signifies to wander and stray about.

Ranger, Is a sworn officer of the forest, of which there are twelve. Id. cap. 7. whole authoritie is in part described by his oath set down by Manwood, part 1, pag. 50. but more particularly part 2. cap. 26. num. 13, 16, 17. His office chiefly consists in three points, To walk daily thro' his charge, to see, hear and inquire, as well of trespasies as trespassers in his bailiwick; To drive the beasts of the forest both of venery and chase out of the deforested into the forested lands: And to prevent all trespasies of the forest at the next court holden for the forest. This office is made by the king's order, and hath a fife of twenty or thirty pounds paid yearly out of the Exchequers, and certain fee-deer. Rangeauer Forst of Whitleywood. Pag. 14 R. 2. m. 3.

Ranfore, (From the French Rancon, redempence) Signifies properly the sum that is paid for the redeeming one that is taken prisoner in war. But it is also for a sum of money paid for the pardoning some great offence, as in the statutes of 1 Hen. 4. cap. 7. 11 Hen. 6. 11, and 23 Hen. 8. cap. 3. where fine and ranfom are joined together: But here note, that when one is to make a fine and ranfom, the ranfom shall be treble to the fine. Crimp. Jogft. of Peace, fol. 134. and Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. cap r. Pag. 556. Here observe the great difference between amerciament and ranfom, that ranfom is the redemption of a corporall punishment due by law to any offence. Lib. 3. cap. De Americania taxable. See Co. on Lit. fol. 137.

A ship was taken by the French; the master (having a share in her) ranfomed her for 1800 l. and was taken to France as an hostage for this money. And by Lord Chancellor, The ranfom money must be raied out of the profits, notwithstanding any former mortgage of the ship; for if there was a precedent mortgage, what would become of that security, if the ship had not been redeemed? but the Court determined, the perfomer her intended voyage, and the freight money received after redemption was the first profits arising, and out of them the ranfom money is to be satisfied; the inferiors always pay a part of the ranfom money. Esq. 5 Ann. Hope v. Winter, MS. Rep. 2. Esq. Abr. 690.

Rape, (Raps and Basset.) Is part of a county, being in a manner the same with a hundred, and sometimes contains in it more hundreds than one. As all Suffex is divided into six Rapes only, viz. of Chichester, Arundel, Brember, Lewes, Pevensey and Holings; every of which, besides their hundreds, hath a castle, river and foreft, belonging to it. Camb. Brit. pag. 235, and 239. These in other countries are called hundreds, tythings, lathes and wapetakes. Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 5 c. 16.

Rape of the foreft, (Ruptus forstis,) Is reckond among those crimes, whose cognizance belongs only to the King. Violentus scutatorum, rups forestis, reductionem forettis forasam. See Exchequ. Lib. II. c. 10. Trespasis committed in the forest by violence.

Rape of woman, (Ruptus,) Is a felony committed by a man, in the violent defluruing of a woman against her will, be the old or young. Britton, cap. 2. Wyfem. Symbol. part. 2. st. Indictments, f. 54. hath these words, Culpation velim 3. This is termed a rape or ravishment of the body of a woman against her will, which is carnal knowledge had of a woman who never consented thereto before before the fact or after. And this in Scotland ought to be commenced of the same day or night that the crime is committed. *Stoic de aeterno, signifi. verb. rapina, and his reason is, quia lapsi dies hac crimine praefcriptur. This offence is felony both in the principal and his aiders, 13 R. 2. f. 2. c. 1. 11 H. 4. c. 13. 1 Edw. 4. c. 1. and Windsor. 2. c. 13. and this is upon the same principle, the ben- efic, if free, and the victor, 8 Eliz. cap. 7. and Picta says, the woman must be made within forty days, or else the woman may not be heard, lib. 3. cap. 5. sect. Prætreas. And carnal knowledge of a woman under ten years old is felony. 6 El. 6. Of the diversity of rapine, see Cramp. *Tоius & Pedic. fol. 43. 44. The offender is called rapinor, and in Bratton's time was punished with the loss of his eyes and fiones, *Quae callimrapit inoffuertur, 3 Inft. fol. 60. The civil law useth rapinis in the same signification; and rapines virginitem, vel mulierem, et ei inferre libidinis. Cowell. Rape is when a man has carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will; and rapines, to ravish, signifies as much as carnaliater coacervare, and cannot be expressed in legal proceedings by other words. 2 Inft. 80. Ca. Lit. 123. b. 124. a.- And th'o' there be emittis feminis, yet if there be no penetration, viz. rei in re, it is no rape; for the words of the indictment are, carnis etiam inoffuertur, e.g. woman useth rapinis. 2 H. 8. 164. it must proceed to some degree of penetration to make it amount to a rape, but that it is said however, that emissio is prima factio evidence of penetration. By flt. 1 Ed. 3. c. 13. The King prohbiteth every per- son to ravish, or take away by force, any maid within age, although a maid, or any wife of full age, or any other woman against her will; and if any one will such offenders within 40 days, the King will do common right; but if none sue within 40 days, the King will sue, and the offender, being convicted, shall suffer two years imprisonment, and be fined at the King's pleasure; and if not able to pay that fine, shall suffer beating to be inflicted upon the body to the trefpasant, according to the trefpasant. Rape was felony at Common law, for which the of- fender was to suffer death; but before this act the offender was made false, and the punishment changed, viz. from death to the loss of his members whereby he offended, viz. his eyes and his testicles, so that at the making this act, it was not felony. And in those days, if the of- fender, in the appeal brought by her that was ravished, had been condemned by the country, he shou'd without any redemption lose his eyes and his privy members, unless the that was ravished demanded him for her husband before judgment, and which was only in the will of the husband, or the woman he ravished to be released; and the punishment of loss of members continued till the making of this act, which was on purpose to make it punishable by fine and imprisonment at the suit of the King, unless the should pur chase her remedy within 40 days mentioned in the act. 2 Inft. 180. 181. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 34. enacts. That if one ravished a married woman, a maid, or other, who does not consent neither before nor after, he shall have judgment of life and member. And if a man ravished a married woman, lady, damoef or other, although the consent after, he shall have like judgment, if attained at the King's suit, and the King shall have the suit. See Appeal of Rape. W. D. was indicted for the rape of a girl of seven years old and no more, setting forth the good fiam felinearet rapit on & consensum suæ, Up that he was the husband of such woman, if he have any, and if no husband, the father or next in blood shall have the suit against such offender. W. D. was indicted for the rape of a girl of seven years old and no more, setting forth the good fiam felinearet rapit & consensum suæ, Up that he was the husband of such woman, and he was found guilty; but the court doubted whether a child of that age could be ravished; if she had been nine years old the might; for at that age she may be endow- ed. Dyer 304. pl. 51. Mich. 13 & 14 Eliz ann. The doubt in the case before-mentioned was the cause of mak- ing the following act for the plain declaration of the law. 3 Inft. 60. c. 11. Stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 7. enacts, that the benefit of cle- rgy is taken away from such offenders, and shall be guilty of felony by act of Parliament, and that he shall be adjudged guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, whether it be done with the consent of such child or not. M. P. was indicted for Neuterus felonies for that carnal knowledge of a woman under 14 years, an infamy under 16 years; and because upon evidence to the jury at his arraignment it was not proved that he entered into the child's body, (but the contrary) although he very much had abused her, the jury would not find him guilty of the felony; whereupon, by advice of justice Jones and justice Berkley, who heard the evidence, and taking the fact to be true and fact and fit to be punished, an indictment of battery for abusing the said infant, in lying with her, was pre- ferred and found; and he was thereupon tried this term at the bar; and being found guilty, was adjudged for the misdemeanor to be committed to prison, there to abide until he should do the future, to be made good, and he was fined upon the pillory in Chaucey-lane in Middlesex, near the place where the fact was committed, with a paper upon his head signifying the cause, and to be bound with all furies to the good behaviour during life. Cre. C. 332. pl. 17. Mich. ann 9 Carr in B. R. Martin Paulo case. A woman went for her husband to a bailiff's house, and being threw the rooms by one Sarah Blandford, in the company of one Leisfing, who lodged in the house, the said Blandford locked them in a chamber, and went away laughing, and then Leisfing ravished her. The evi- dence was Mrs. May the woman herfelf, who cried out, and was so much in his affiance, and when the door was open the immediately complained of the injury; but the evidence for the prisoner was, that immediately after she came down stairs, there was an open familiarity be- twixt her and the prisoner, and therefore it could not rea- sonably be intended that they should have a difference f, lastly, which concerned his life; and though a woman cannot be ravished by one man without some extraordinary circumstances of force, yet the jury found them both guilty; but they were both pardoned. 2 Nei. Jov. 93. tit. Rape, cites 1 Geo. 1. May v. Leisfing. The party raviished may give evidence on oath, and in the case of a competent witness; but the evidence of the testimony, for of which fact it was that the jury were to take the evidence of Leisfing be left to the jury, and is more or less credible according to the circumstances of fact that concur in that testi- mony. For instance, If the witness be of good fame; if the presently discovered the offence, and made pursuit after the offender; he gave circumstances and signs of the injury, wherein many are of that nature, that only wom- en are the most proper examiners and inspectors; if the place, wherein the fact was done, was remote from people, inhabitants or passengers; if the offender fled for it: Thence, and the like, are concuring evidences to give greater probability to her testimony, when proved to be genuine. But on the other side, if the concealed the injury for any considerable time, after she had opportunity to complain; if the place where the fact was suppos'd to be committed, were near to inhabi- tants, or common recourec, or pause of passangers, and she made no outcry when the fact was suppos'd to be done, when and where it is probable that he was not in it; if the circum- stances carry a strong presumption, that her testi- mony is false or feigned. And upon the whole, rape is true, to a most destracible crime, and therefore ought the third part of her husband's goods, after debts and funeral charges decayed. F. N. B. fol. 322, who there quotes the eighteenth chapter of Adamnus Gruartus, and Glanville, to prove that, according to the common law of England, the goods of the deceased, his debts first paid, should be divided into three parts, whereof his wife to have one, his children the second, and the executors the third; and this writ lies as well for the children as wife, which appears by Reg. Orig. f. 142. See 12 Jan., 1425.

Rationalis. Was the same with petitio. It was worn by the high priests of the old law, as a sign of the greatest perfection, and by the pope and bishops as a token of the highest virtue, qua gratia & ratione perfectius, and from hence tis called rationalis.

Rationale, (Rationalism) A quality liable on importation (i.e. not paid). See 2 Wall. & M. c. 5, sect. 2.

Rattus, (Rat) He who defouils a woman by violence. See Rape.

Ravishment, (Rapina) Signifies an unlawful taking away either a woman, or an heir in ward; sometimes also it is used in the same sense with rape, which see.

Ravishment de banc, Was a writ that lay for the guardian by knights-service, or in socage, against him that took from him the body of his ward. See F. N. B. f. 140. and Stat. 12 Car. 2, cap. 24.

Reasom, It has been observed, is the very life of the law; and that what is contrary to it, is unlawful. When the reason of the law once ceases, the law itself generally ceases; because reason is the foundation of all our laws. Co. Litt. 97, 183. If maxims of law admit of any difference, those are to be preferred which carry with them the more perfect and excellent reason. Ibid.

Realizable adv. (Rationalite auxilium) Was a duty that the lord of the fee claimed of his tenants holding by knights-service, or in socage, to marry his daughter, or make his son a knight. Wolffmuller v. cap. 39, but now taken away. See the Stat. 12 Car. 2, cap. 24.

Reattachment, (Reattachment) Is a second attachment of him that was formerly attached and disfitted the court without day, as by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty. Broke, hoc situ, where he makes re-attachment general and special: General is where a man is re-attached for his appearances upon all writs of affize lying against him. Ibid. 2id, nam. 18. So then special must be for one or more causes. Reg. Jux. dict. fol. 35. A cause discontinued, or put without day, cannot be revived without re-attachment or re-suits; which if they are special, may revive the whole proceedings; but if general, the original record only. 2 Hark, 300.

Rebellion, (Rebellion) Signifies the taking up of arms traiterously against the King, be it by natural subjects, or by others once subdued: Amongst the Romans it denoted a second resistance of such as formerly being overcome in battle, yielded to their subjection. The word rebellion is sometimes misapplied here. It willfully breaks a law. 25 3. 8. 17 and 3 R. 3, Stat. 3, cap. 2. Sometimes to a willian disbelieving his Lord. 3 R. 2, cap. 6.

Rebellion, (Rebellious) A gathering together of 12 or more, or intending or going about, practicing or putting in use, unlawfully of their own authority, to change any laws or statutes of this realm; or to destroy the inclofe of any park or ground inclosed, or banks 7 G of Defter, from the Fr. Bouter, repperter, to put back or bar) Is the answer of the defendant in a cause to the plaintiff's surrejoinder: And the plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rebutter is called a surrebuter; but it is very rare that the parties go far in pleading. Pratit. Act. tern., edit. 1. pag. 86. Rebutter is also where a man by deed or fine grants to warranty any land or hereditament to another; and the person making the warranty on his heir, sues him to whom the warranty is made, or his heir or assignee, for the same thing; if he who is sued, plead the deed or fine, or warranty, and pray judgment: The defendant shall be required to receive the thing which he ought to warrant to the party against the warranty in the deed, &c. This is called a rebutter. Term. de Ly 511. And if I grant to a tenant to hold without impeachement of waste, and afterwards implied him for waste done, he may deem me of this action by I\.wieving my grant; which is a rebutter. Co. Estr. 284. 1 Ifli. 386.

Recaption, (Recaptts.) Signifies a second disfriv of one formerly disfrained for the same cause, and also during the plea grounded on the former disfriv: It likewise signifies a writ lying for the party thus disfrained; the form, and further use thereof, may be seen to P. N. B. fol. 86. Reg. Judis. fol. 69. See Disfrains, Replevin.

Receipt or receiv. See Receipt.

Receiver, (Receiver) Is by us, as by the Civilians, commonly used in evil part, for such as receive stolen goods, &c. And the receiving a felon, and concealing him, makes a person acccessary to the felony, 1 Ifli. 183. But a receiver of a felon, &c. must have notice of the felony either express or implied, which is to be expressely charged in the indictment; and the felony must be complete at the time of the receipt, and not to become fo afterwards by matter subsequent: If a person is in some manner of felony, barely receive him, and permit him to efcuse, without giving him any advice, oriance, or encouragement, it is a high misdemeanor, but no capital offence; and a wife, in regard to the duty and love which she owes her husband, may receive him when he hath committed felony; but no other relation will exempt the receiver of a felony from punishment. S. P. C. 41. H. P. C. 218, 219, 2 Hawb. P. C. 123, 319, 320. By statute, if any person shall receive or buy knowingly any stolen goods, or conceal felons knowing of the felony, he shall be accssary to the felony, and suffer death as a felon. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 31. Such receivers, &c. may be transported, by a Gen. c. 31. See Felony, Larreny.

Receiver, Annexed to other records, as Receiver of rents, signifies an officer belonging to the King, or other great person. Cram. juriscl. fol. 18.

Receipt, (Receipts) Is the rehearsal or making mention in a deed or writing of something which has been done before, 2 Litt. Abr. 416. A recoil is not conclusive, because it is no direct affirmation; and by feigning recitals in a true deed, men may make what titles they pleased, since facile recitalls are not punissable. 1 Ifli. 352 2. Ifli. 353. If a person by deed of assignment recite that he is possessed of an interest in certain lands, and assign it over the deed, and become bound by bond to perform all the agreements in the deed; if he is not possessed of such interest, the condition is broken; and though a recital of itself is nothing, yet being joined and connected with the rest of the deed, it binds as it was 123.

Recital cannot make a first lease good, which was not good before, or in a better condition than it was before; because the first lease is a stronger to the second deed, and therefore cannot take advantage of it; and by the better opinion, recital of a deed is not material. Del. 13. pl. 23. Pofh. 7. Edw. 6. f. 132.

No one is bound in his declaration to recite more of a record than induces his action, and makes for his purpose. Trench. 233. pl. 34.

Bond was conditioned to pay 10l. being for a rent of certain lands; defendant alleged, that the oblique (the plaintiff) had entered on the land, and so expended the rent, whereas the plaintiff demanded, and adjudged for him; for that being but a recital in a testum, it is taken from the same as he had applied it by pleading to the lease, Uct. Recorciari, faitias, or Recorciari, faitias, is a writ directed to the sheriff, to remove a caufe depending in an inferior court, as court of Ancient demesne, hundred or county, to the King's Bench or Common Pleas. F. N. B. t. 32. Where, and in what cases this writ lies, and the time when it is to be applied for, is by a record to be had, because it commands the sheriff to whom it is directed to make a record of the proceedings by himself and others, and then to send up the cause. See the table of the Reg. Orig. verba Recorrentes. See also Certificari and Recorciari ad sectionem. Recorciari (Recorder) is he whom the mayor, or other officer, of the magistratate of any city or town corporate having jurisdiction, or a court of record within their precincts, by the king's grants, doth appoint to him for his better direction in matters of justice and proceedings according to law: And is therefore for the most part a man very well and experienced in the law. The ancient recorder of London is one of the justices of the Oyer and Terminer; and a justice of the quorum, for putting the laws in execution for preserving the peace and government of the city: And being the mouth of the said city, he learnedly delivers the sentences and judgments of the courts therein; and also certifies and records the city customes, 1art. Chas. 2. & 6. The recorder of London is chosen by the lord mayor and aldermen; and attends the business of the city on any warning by the lord mayor, &c.

Recovering, (Recovermun, from the Fr. recoverer, recoverer.) Signifies in a legal acceptation, an obtaining any thing by judgment or trial of law, as evictis done among the Civilians. And here results, That there is a true recovery, and a figned recovery. A true recovery is an actual or real recovery, of any thing, or the value thereof, by judgment; as if a man sued for any land, or other thing moveable or immoveable, and have a verdict or judgment for him. A signed recovery is (as the Civilians call it) Quodam fihlo juris, a certain form or course set forth in a certain order, and observed, for the purpose of recovering lands or tenements unto us: And the end and effect thereof is (according to Winch. Symbol. part 2. tit. Recoveries, f. 1.) to discontinue and destroy easements, tail, remainders and revenons, and to bar the interest thereof. And in this formality are required three persons, viz. the demandant, tenant and vouchser. The demandant is he that brings the writ of entry, and may be termed the recoverer. The tenant is he against whom the writ is brought, and may be termed the recoveree. The vouchser is he whom the tenant voucheseth, and calls to warranty for the land in demand. A recovery with double vouchser is, where the tenant voucheseth on the owner, or another, on the vouchser of the tenement. And a recovery with triple vouchser is, where three are vouched. But to explain this point a little more: A man that is desirous to cut off an easement in lands or tenements, to the end to fell, give or devise it, causeth a signed writ of entry for division in le sfit, to be brough in the lands of which he intends to cut off the interest, and in a signed count or declaration thereinupon made, pretends he was deficient by him, who by a signed fine or deed of bargain and sale is named and supposed to be the tenant of the land. This signed tenant, if it be a single recovery, is made to appear and vouch the title of the owner, or the former owner of the land, or the owner of the Common Pleas (for there only can such recoveries be suffered) who makes default. Whereupon the land is recovered by him that brought the writ, and a judgment is by such fiction of law entered, that the demandant shall recover, and have a strict of sfiten for the possession of the lands demanded, and that the tenant shall recover the value of the lands against the land of the vouchser. This signed recovery is also called a common recovery, because it is a recovery only of the land, and not that end for which it is appointed, viz. to cut off the easement above described. But a true recovery is as well of the value as of the thing: For example, if a man buy land of another with warranty, which land a third person afterwards by fair of law, recovereth against me, I have my remedy against him, or other, to recover my value, as is to recover to much money as was paid for it, or much other lands by way of exchange. E. N. B. fl. 134. Cestui.

A recovery in a large scale is a restitution to a former owner for solemn judgment; and judgments, whether obtained after a real defence made by the tenant to the writ, or a judgment obtained upon his default, did have the same efficacy and force to bind the right of the land in question; this was the notion of the Common law, and from hence men, taking an opportunity of making use of the decisions of the court to their own advantage, and to the prejudice of others, who though in some cases strangers to the action, yet were interested in the land for which it was brought. 2 Hil. 75. 429.

For whist these recoveries were governed by the first rules of the Common law, particular tenants, as tenant in dower, coudr, in tail after poftibility of issue extinct, and for life only; all those who had made lease of the tenements for the life of the lessee, being entitled to dower often took advantage of them, and by force of law, and suiting their purchasers to recover them, thereby defeated the right of the tenant in remainder or reversion, which were inconvenience so great, that it was thought necessary to provide against them by positive laws: as that Hly. 2. 2. 3. which makes provision for him in rearment, against the recoveries suffered either by the tenant in dower, by the courteous, or in tail after poftibility of issue extinct, or for life; and by the 4th chapter of this statute, the wife is feued as to her dower; and the flatus of Gloucester, c. 11. and Stat. 7 & 8 Hen. 6. have effecituf the right of termors, and enabled them to fail est such recoveries. See Co. Litt. 104. Kel. 199. F. N. I. 468. Plow. 57. Dr. & Stal. 45. &c.

But there is no express provision made by any statute to prefer the interest of the infeue in tail, or of him in reversion, against a recovery suffered by the donee, yet seems to have been for two hundred years after the making the flutes de danis, that they were proceeded by the courts at large in an affinitf course, and the persons interested, where such recovery was allowed to bar the infeue in tail or throfe in remainder or reversion, till the reigns of El. 4. and H. 7. though in some cases the donee in tail was allowed to charge the intail, and even to bar it. See 1 Rol. A4. 342. Co. Lit. 343. 10 Co. 37. Plow. 439. 2 Le. 335. Co. Lit. 374. 4 Le. 132. 133. 3 Sol. 31. 1 Clastaitet.

When these recoveries were established as a common conveyance, and the bell and fequest of barring the infeue in tail, and thofe in remainder or remainder, the tenant for life began to apply them once more to the purpose for which they were first made. Though the former statutes gave those who had the inheritance a greater advantage, yet the provision made by them being tedious and expensive it was thought proper to make the 32 H. 8. c. 31. which declares all such curious recoveries against the particular tenants to be void in respect to him in reversion or remainder; and though the judges very reasonably determined against this statute, yet the judges did not further proceed, but a forfeiture of the particular easement, because it was a manner of conveyance as much known at that time as a fine or foftemion, and therefore by parity of ratio ought to have the same effect and operation: yet the statute did not fully answer the end for which it was made. See Co. Litt. 356. and the 32 H. 8. c. 31. and 2 H. 7. c. 16. make it void.

For if A. had been tenant for life, and made a lease for years to B. and B. had made a foftemion in fee, the feelee had suffered a recovery, and voucheted the tenant for life, this was no void recovery within the statute, because A. the tenant for life was not feated at th time of the recovery, for the feoffment of the tenant was a difficult to A. and him in reversion; and the flature makes recoveries of tenants for life in possessions only void against them to whom the reversion then belongs. 10 Co. 45. a. Co. Lit. 362.

Yet where tenant for life bargained and sold his land in fee, and the bargainee suffered a recovery, and vouched the bargainee, this was a void recovery, and a forfeiture within the 32 H. 8. for though the bargain and sale was of the inheritance, yet it passed only for estate for the life of the bargainor, which was the greatest estate he could have, and peradventure, the bargainee was not devested; and therefore, the bargainee being a legal tenant for life in possession, the recovery against him, with a voucher of the bargainee, was void within that act against him in reversion, whole reversion was not turned to a right in the former case. 11 Eliz. 1. Perelman v. Dellin. 1 Co. 15. R.-c.

But the former defect was cured by 14 Eliz. which declares all recoveries (had by agreement of the parties, or by covin) against tenant for life, of any lands whereof he is so forfeited, or against any other voucher over of him, to be void, as against the recoverers and their heirs.

These flatures made no provision for recoveries or re- mainders expellant on estates-tail; and therefore if there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee, and the tenant for life suffers a recovery, and vouches the tenant in fee, and the remainders in tail, and concurrence of the common vouches; this is so far from being a void recovery within the said flatures, that the recovery in fee is actually barred by it; for the intended recompence, which the remainder-man in tail is to have against the common vouches, is to go in succeffion, as the estate-tail would have done; and it cannot be a recovery within the said act, because the remainder in tail joined in, who at any time suffer such a recovery to destroy the remainder in fee. 10 Co. 59. b. 45. Fenning's case. Co. Lit. 362. a. 2 Co. 60. b. C. Eliz. 562. Wifeman v. Crew. Mar 690. C. Eliz. 570.

These common recoveries were no sooner allowed of by the judges to bar estates-tail, but men began to improve in the making of a common way of conveyance, and to declare uses upon them, as upon fees and foifeements. Hence it is, that the slature, which provide against any alienations or discontinuances of particular tenants, provide for the same time against their recoveries; thus 11 H. 7. c. 20. declares all recoveries, as well as other discontinuances by fee or foifeement of women tenants in tail, of the gift of their husbands, or their ancestors, to be void; so a recovery against husband and wife of the inheritance of the wife, without any voucher, is declared to the 32 H. 8. c. 28. Thus if the slature says, suffered or done by the husband; for this, like a foifeement by baron and feme in fullblace, is the 2e of the baron only; and so within the slature, but a common recovery suffered by a feme covert, where her husband joins with hers, is good to bar her and her heirs. 1. Who may suffer a recovery; and of what things a recovery may be suffered, and by what names.

When recoveries were improved into a common way of conveyance, it was thought reasonable that those, whom the law had judged incapable to aet for their own interest, should not be bound by the judgment given in recoveries, though it was the solemn act of the court; for where the defendant gives way to the judgment, 'tis as much his voluntary act and conveyance, as if he had transferred the land by livery, or any other act in pari and therefore if an infant suffers a recovery, he may re- serve it, as he may a fine by writ of error, during his minority; and this was formerly taken for law, as well where the infant appeared by guardian, as by attorney, or in person but now the diffolucion turns on this point, that if an infant in fact, or in law, has a recovery, he is a capable person, and he may reserve it by writ of error; but even in this case the writ of error must be brought during his minority, that his infancy may be tried by the inspection of the court, for his seat at full age it becomes obligatory and unavoidable; and in cases of necessity, the court has admitted the infant to appear by guardian, and to suffer a recovery, or come in as voucher; but this too is fel- dom allowed by the court; and upon emergencies, when it tends to the improvement of the infant's affairs, of when lands of equal value have been forfeited on him, and these recoveries have been allowed by the court; for the judges, the infant could not let them slide or shake them; besides, if such recoveries be to the prejudice of the infant, he has remedy for it against his guar- dian, and may reimburse himself out of his pocket, to whom the law had committed the care of him. 1 Blou. 235. 2 Red. If an infant suffers a recovery, and appears by attor- ney, it seems he may reserve it after his full age; be- cause here it may be discovered, whether he was with- in age when the recovery was suffered, because it may be tried per pari, whether the warrant of attorney was made by him when he was an infant. A recovery, as well as a fine by a feme covert, is good to bar him, because the præcept in the recoveries is, that the covin shall suffer the writ of covin in the feme to bring her into court, where the examination of the judges destroys the presumption of law, that this is done by the coercion of her husband, for then 'tis supposed they would have re- fused her. 10 Co. 43. a. 3 Red. So if a man be feiled of a reputed manor, which really is no manor, and he suffers a common recovery of this by the name of a manor, this is a good recovery of the lands which constituted the reputed manor; though strictly speaking there is no manor recovered, because the law supports this, as all other conveyances, according to the intention of the parties; for it would be feve to vacate this conveyance, when the purchase was promised by the agent for the owner under such a denotation. 2 Red. In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, the tenant to the praecipe was made by a fine, the recovery was suffered, and the fine was reversed; yet it was held only to be a good tenant to the praecipe at the time.

If a manor be given to a man and a woman, and the heirs of the body of the man begot on the woman, and they intermarry, and then the husband suffers a recovery of the whole manor; this is good for a moiety, because the husband made before marriage, they had each an undivided moiety, which, if eaten over, the recovery can operate but for a moiety, because the husband only was tenant to the praecipe, and consequently the deman-1470tant only could recover his interest in the manor, which was but a moiety.

If lands are given to a man and his wife, and the heirs of the body of the husband in his lifetime, in his third, and not in the will; and bargained, and sold the land in the parish of Ribton, with covenant to levy a fine, and suffer a recovery to the uses in the deed; but the fine and recovery were only of the lands in Ribton; the question was, whether this recovery would survive for the said land in the parish of Ribton; and though it was objected, that where a place was named in the record, and no more said, 'tis always intended a will; and consequently, that in this case, the fine and recovery being of lands in Ribton, shall pass only the lands in the will of Ribton; and that it was further urged that it was dangerous to extend the recovery to the uses words of the record, because the deed declares the intention of the parties to pass the lands in the parish, insomuch as by such construction no man could tell what was conveyed by fines and recoveries, but must for greater certainty have recourse to a pocket deed; yet the court, in favour of common recoveries, extended this recovery to the lands in the parish of Ribton; and the rather in this case, because the verdict found, that he that suffered the recovery had no lands in the will, and consequently that the recovery must be void, if not extended to the parish; and though parishes are not so ancient as wills, and therefore till lately were never inserted in writs, yet not the fine, and the law takes notice of them. 2 Priz. 31, 32. 2. What estates and interests may be barred by a common recovery, and of fine and double voucher.

In respect to eftates-tail, and the barring of them by recovery, what is principally to be regarded is, that there must be a legal tenant in the estate or tail, and that that estate or tail be before the time of the writ purchased, or at the return; for since eftates-tail are only barred on account of the intended recumph which is to follow the defendant of the tail, where there happens to be no tenant to the praecipe, the demandant can really recover nothing; and consequently the supposed tenant hath no recumph in value against the voucher, for that is only given against the vouches in consideration of what the tenant loft. Hdb. 262.

As if there be tenant for life, the remainder in tail, the remainder in fee, and the tenant for life with the remainder in tail suffer a recovery, with voucher over, this shall not bar the remainder in tail, nor the remainder in fee, because the remainder-man in tail was not tenant to the praecipe, and consequently could not have the intended recumph, because that was given in lieu of the estate recovered, which was no greater than the estate for the only being legal tenant to the praecipe. 1 Rol. Hdb. 262.

As if there be tenant for life, the remainder in tail, the remainder in fee, and the tenant for life with the remainder in tail suffer a recovery, with voucher over, make a good tenant of the whole; but the court held her wife. 4thly, It was held, that the estate-tail to 1, and E. being determined, the remainder to D. in tail vile general, and all the other remainders depending thereon were barred absolutely by this recovery; for D. might have recovered the remainder of all the estates he had or had, and consequently a comes in representation of the remainder to himself in tail male general, and then the recouperation in value goes to that, and also to all the other remainders depending thereupon, and be confecution all are barred by that. But this is not the case. 5thly, that this estate-tail to 2, because he was actually feised of that at the time of the præcipe brought against him; for his diflief did not devest his own estate, but only gave him a defeasible estate for life, which was immediately merged in his remainder, because the estate for life and his inheritance could not subfift together; at the time in 3, 395. After this, we fee how estate-tail are barred by recoveries, and the uses of the fingle and double voucher; and in this respect the operation of a recovery is correspondent to that of a fine, for they are but different ways of transferring estate-tail for the fecurity of purchasers; but the operation of a fine differs from a recovery in refpefl to strangers who have recoveries or remainders expedient on estate-tail; for a fine does not bar them, unless they omit to make their claim within five years after their revocation or remainder is to execute; but a recovery reaches them immediately, and at the same time bars the estate-tail and remainder on account of a fine for real or imaginary recovery. As and a common recovery suffered by tenant in tail bars all recoveries and remainders expedient, fo it avoids all charges, leaves and incumbrances made by thole in reversion or remainder, and the recovery shall free the land from any fuch charge for ever; as where he in remainder upon an estate-tail granted a rent-charge, and the tenant in tail suffered a recovery; and it was adjudged, that the grantee could not distrain the recoveror; for since the rent was only at first good, because of the poftibility of the grantor's remainder coming in position, with that poftibility ceafs by the recovery of tenant in tail, fuch grant must then become void. 3. Of errores and void recoveries, who may avoid them, and by what method.

It is already observed, that a recovery suffered by an infant in perfon fhall not bind him; but though he may avoid it, yet it can't be done by any entry in pais, but by writ of error. But if this error be not made during his minority; for the judgment of the court being on record must be fet aside by an act of equal notoriety; but an infant may avoid a recovery by writ of error, as well where he comes in as vouchee, as where he is tenant to the præcipe; for tho' frivolly speaking the recovery is not against him, where he is not tenant to the præcipe, yet for the greater security of the purchaser, and to strengthen the recovery by the use of the double voucher, the perfon, who really has the right to the land in demand, comes in as vouchee, and then by vouching over the common vouchee, has one recompence for all his titles; and consequently if he be the perfon that really loses the land, he ought in reason to reverse the recovery, as well where becomes in as vouchee, as where he is fefe of the land and tenant to the præcipe. 1 Rol. Ab. 742. 1 Lem. 142. 1 Rol. Ab. 731.

If tenant in tail within age come in as vouchee by attorney in a common recovery, he in reversion or remainder, must sign this form for the futurity of the recovery; and where a man's interest is bound by another's act, 'tis but reasonable he should be allowed to free himself from the mischief of it by taking advantage of any error in it. 1 Rol. Ab. 755. 756.

If A. be tenant in tail, the remainder to B. and A. suffers an erroneous recovery, and the common vouchee relieves to the recoveror; yet if A. dies without issue, B. may, notwithstanding the relafe, reverse it by writ of error, error, for the common vouchee is only called in for form; and as he has really no interest in or title to the land; so really neither does he make any recompense to the person that holds the land; and therefore it is only a case as an unreasonable way of the imperfect recompense so far as to suppose him a real sufferer, and thereby give him the privilege of setting aside a conveyance which he is in no way affected by.  "C. Eliz. 2. 3 Lord Norris v. Marquis of Winchelsea."

In a writ of error to reverse a recovery suffered by an infant who appeared by guardian, the error assigned was in the entry of his admission by guardian, viz. Counsel, eft per curiam hic quod A. B. sequatur pro J. S. Armig. quis infra attest exspect ut guardianus praedictus. J. S. Whereas as it was objected, that since the infant was tenant to the writ, it ought not to have been entered upon the general register, it must be defended for the infant; but this exception was disallowed, because the words ad sequendum, for the infant signify the fame with ad deferdendam, for the infant; for ad sequendum, is to follow and attend the buffets and suit of the infant; and the guardian being as- signed to do that, much likewise have been assigned to take care of, or to take upon him the defence of the infant's suit. 2 Sound. 94. 95. 1 Mod. 48. Hylkett v. Lee.

In a common recovery the writ of error bears date 1 Martii, in Eliz. ret. de Venus in qua parte fepotam quadragemini proxim futurum, the first day of March being that the first day in Lent, the recovery fell in the usual form of a writ of error; and in this case the error assigned was, that the words proxim futurum should be referred to Quadragemini, and then the writ of error was not returned till Monday in the fourth Week of Lent, 8 Eliz. which was the time the tenant was to appear; and consequently this recovery must be void, because here was judgment upon a voucher, and a recovery in value, before the writ was returned, before which the court has no power to proceed. But it was answered and resolved that since proxim futurum were not written at large, they may be indifferently applied either to die Venus, by supposing them to stand for proximo futuro, or to guard- ian, and that the same may be allowed to the party with the writ of error. But this the error assigned was, that the words proxim futurum should be referred to Quadragemini, and whereof the words abbreviated may be indifferently referred, 'tis but reasonable to give them such a relation, as will best support the recovery, which is but a voluntary conveyance, ut res magis valiat quam peraret; and if the words had been at large proxima futura, then they must necessarily be referred to quadragemini, and then the objection had been good, and the recovery for that reason must have been void.

In error to reverse a recovery, the errors assigned were, 1. That the writ of entry was brought of an advowson of a rectorcy, and allo of a rent influing out of the fame rectorcy, the petition, and juramento, and the writ of error to reverse this rectorcy, and allo of the thing vicius; but this was disallowed, because the advowson and rectorcy are different things; for he that has the advowson has only the right of presentation, but he that has the rectorcy has the profits of the church, out of which the rent influes; and consequently there can be no his petition in this cafe, because by the demand of the advowson of the rectorcy, and of the rent influing out of the rectorcy, the demandant recovers more than by a demand of the rectorcy only; another error assigned was in the demand of a rent or pension of four marks influing out of the rectorcy, which is so uncertain a demand, a pension being a different thing from a rent, and recoverable therefore in the Spiritual court; but this too was disallowed; because it is plain there is but one sum of four marks demanded, and the pension or rent must be synonymous here, because they are demanded as influing out of the rectorcy; and therefore the pension cannot be in nature of an annuity, which character is because it is capably to influe out of the rectorcy. Poph. 23. 5 Co. 41. 6.

In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, the error inflicted on was, that the warrant of attorney of the vouchee bore date before the Summanuas ad warrantiam, issued, yet the judgment was affirmed, because the vouchee made no alteration before the Summanuas ad war- rantiam, and make his attorney, and therefore to support the common recovery, it shall be presumed the vouchee was present in court and appointed his attorney, and so the de minimus for the warrant and the Summanuas ad warrantiam, void. 1 Stid. 213. 1 Lev. 130. Redo, Is a writ of right, which is of fo high a nature, that whereas other writs in real actions are only to recover the poiffession of the land or tenements in question, which have been loft by our ancestor or ourselves; this writ of right is for the recovery of any thing which none of our ancestors or we had, and also the possession of the thing, whereof the ancestor did not fold or sear; and whereby are pleaded and tried both their rights together, viz. as well of poiffession as of property: So that if a man once lofe his or her cause upon this writ, either by judg- ment, affile or battel, he is without all remedy, and shall be excluded per eemnionem rei judicatis. Bridton, lib. 5. tract. 1. cap. 1. & seq. It is divided into two kinds, 1. Redem patens, a writ of right patent, and Redem clausum, a writ of right clofe. This the Civilians call justicum petillum. The writ of right patent is so called, because it is fent open, and is in nature the highest writ of all others, lying always for him that hath fee-fimple in the lands or tenements fued for, and not for any other. Recto de rationabilis parte, Is a writ that lies always between priories of blood, as between in Guvilkind, or fitters, or other coparceners; as nephes or nieces, and for land in fee-simple. For example, If a man lease his land for term of life, and afterwards dies, leaving behind him, and the whole estate of life dies also, the one fitter entering upon all the land, and so decoy the other; the fitter so decoyed shall have this writ to recover past. F. N. B. fol. 9. Reg. Orig. fol. 3.

Recto quando Dominus reministe, Is a writ of right, which lies in case where lands or tenements are that are in the king's hand, are in some demand by a writ of right; for if the lord hold not court, or otherwise at the prayer of the demandant, or tenant, shall tend to the court of the King his writ, to put the cause thither for that time, (lying to him at other times the right of his sigillatory) then this writ lies out for the other party, and hath the name from the words contained, being the true occasion thereof: This writ is claus, and must be return'd before the justices of the Common Bank. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 16. Reg. Orig. fol. 4.

Recto for distraint, Is a writ that lies where a lord in the King's court of Common Pleas shows upon his own demur and demand by a writ of right, or upon which distraint he shall have this writ in case if the lord aver and prove, that the land is holden of him; shall recover the land for ever. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 150, which is grounded upon the statute of Wifum. 2, cap. 2.

Recto, (Lat.) Signifyes a governor; and regtor eccle- siae parabihii is he that hath the cure or charge of a parochial church, qui tantum jus in excelsa parabihii bakes, quantum possessae, in ecclesia collegiata: It hath been over-ruled, that regtor ecclesie parabihii, is he that hath a parsonage when there is a vicarage endowed; and he that hath a parsonage without a vicarage is called per- fons; but this distinction seems to be new and fable, Bradden certainly ues it otherwise, lib. 4, tract. 5, c. 1. Yet in these words, in ecclesiasticae parabihii commendatam capitatis officio, qui infituet lice fere officiis & ordinarius ut perfine; where it is plain, that regtor and perfona are confounded. Observe also these words there following. Item dici possint rectorres canuntii de re- clisii prae- tendant. Item dici possint rectorum vel quis ubicu ad- moti, prior & ali, qui habeant ecclesias ad proprias s. Cowell, edid. 1727. See Antic.

Rectura, (Registroria) Is taken for an intire parish church, with all its rights, glebes, tithes and other profits whatsoever. The word rectura was often used for the rector's manse, or parsonage house. See Paroch. Antig. p. 549.

Redevolution. The reformation of law, is where a matter is refered by the court of Chancery to a matter, and by the courts at law to a prohotonary or fecondary, to examine and report to the court. 2 Lii. Atq. 432.
In Chancery by order of court, irregularities, exceptions, matters of account, &c. are refered to the examination of a matter of that court. In the common law R. mat-ters of account, &c. are referred to the court, or to some undue proceedings in a cause by either of the parties, are proper matters of reference under the fecondary, and for him in some some ordinary cases to compose the differences between them; and in others to make his report how the matters to stand, that the court may settle the differences according thereunto in due order. Particular, if a marked in difference between the plaintiff and defendant be referred to the fecondary, and one of the parties will not attend at the time appointed, after notice thereof given, to hear the busines referred; the other party may proceed in the reference alone, and get the fecondary to make his report without having the parties present. See Rep. 168.

Refunding, An attorney, lying ill of the fick-ness of which he afterwards dies, takes back his clerk and all the money he had received at any times, and by articles agrees with the father of B. to return 60l. of the money if he died within a year. A. died within three weeks. The executor of
A. was decreed to pay back 100 guineas. Ver. 460.

A. was indebted to B. by mortages in 400l. principal money, and died leaving J. S. executor. On a bill in Chancery, for payment of debts of A. out of lands charged with the fame, the matter reported 400l. due on the said mortgage, and the executor received the whole 400l. but afterwards it appeared that 353l. 13s. 4d. had been paid to B. the teftator by A. in his life-time. And the old fum of £353. he had given to the tenant, brought a bill to be relieveed against this over-payement; the executor defendant pleaded all the former proceedings, and alfo that he, before any notice of the over-payement, as executor of B. had paid away the 400l. in the debts of B. The matter of the Rolls decreed the executor to repay the surplus, and he to be at liberty to sue fuch creditors, as his mistake he had paid, to refund; and this decree was affirmed by Lord Chancellor Cowper, who compared it to the cafe of a judgment obtained by the executor, and after reversed in error, and to that of a decree which is afterwards reversed by appeal; though he faid that in the cafe of an appeal if the defendant had delayed the appeal, and would fly fway by whifh the executor paid away the money to the teftator's creditors, it would be otherwise; for this would be drawing the executor into it.

A. for 400l. purchafes B.'s intereft and poftibility in Spelman.) The royal rights of a King, which the Civilian reckon to be fix. 1. Power of judicature. 2. Power of life and death. 3. Power of war and peace. 4. Materiels goods, as vails, effrays, &c. 5. Allitterations. And 6.

Minting of money. See Holytale. Also the crown, feeper with the crofs, feeper with the dove, St. Edward's staff, four feveral fwordes, the globe, the orb with the crofs, and other fuch like things used at the corona-ation of our Kings, are called regalia. See the relation of the coronation of King Charles the Second in Baker's Chronicle. And regalia is sometimes taken for the dignity and prerogative of the King. Regalia is also taken for those rights and priviages which the church enjoys by the grants and other permissions of the Kings.
Although it is taken for the propriety of the church;
as Regalia Sancti Petri, &c. It fignifies the things and hereafter mentioned were by Kings to the church,

Regard, (Regardum and Rewardum, Fr. Regard, i. Aemptus, Rejipsus) Signifies generally any care or diligent respect, yet it hath also a special application, wherein it is only used in matters of the foref, and there two ways, one of them is to signify the regarder, the other for the comprendence of the ground belonging to that office. Cran. Jur. fol. 175., 199. Touching the former, see Manwood in his Peril.-laws, Part 1, p. 194., &c. 198. And touching the second signification, the compend of the regarder's charge is the whole foref, that is, the all ground which is parcel of the foref; for there may be woods within the limits of the foref, that are no parcel thereof, and those are without regard. Sect. 7. All memorials shall be in writing in vellum or parchment, and directed to the Register; and in case of deeds and conveyances shall be under the hand and seal of the grantor or grantee, their guardians or trustees, attested by two witnesses, one whereof to be one of the witnesses to the execution of such deed; which witnesses shall sign on oath before the Register prove the signing and sealing of the memorial, and the execution of the deed mentioned in such memorial; and in case of wills, the witnesses shall be under the hand and seal of the devisors, his guardians or trustees, attested by two witnesses, one whereof shall prove the signing and sealing of such memorial.

Sect. 8. Every memorial of any deed or will shall contain the day of the month and year when such deed or will bears date, and the names and additions of all the parties to such deed, and of the devisors of such will, and of all the witnesses and the places of their abode, and shall mention the lands and hereditaments contained in such deed or will, and the names of all the parishes, townships, hamlets, precincts or extraparochial places, where such lands are, in such manner as the same are mentioned in the register of the aforesaid deeds and wills, or of the same, of which such memorial is to be registered, shall be produced to the Register at the time of entering such memorial, who shall insert a certificate on such deed and will, or prove thereof, and mention the day, hour and time, on which such memorial is entered into the register, with the names of the parties and number the same is entered; and the Register shall sign the certificate so indorsed, which shall be allowed as evidence of such registries in all courts of record; and every page of such Registry-books, and every memorial that shall be entered, shall be numbered, and the day of the month, and the year and hour, or time of the day, shall be entered in the margins of the Register-books, and of the memorial; and such Register shall keep an alphabetical catalogue of all parishes, extraparochial places, and townships, within the Well-riding, with reference to the number of every memorial that concerns lands in such parish, and of the names of the parties; and such Register shall duly file every such memorial in order, as the same is brought to the office, and enter the memorials in the order that they shall come to his hand.

Sect. 9. Such Register, before he enter upon the office, shall be sworn, before the justices of peace, or three of them, that shall be present at his election, in these words:

Y\u2019ou shall truly and faithfully perform and execute the office and duty that is directed and required by act of parliament, in registering memorials of deeds, conveyances and wills, within the Well-riding of the county of York, so long as you shall continue in the said office; and that you have not given nor promised, directly or indirectly, nor authorized any person to give or promise any money, grateful or reward whatsoever, for procuring, or obtaining the said office for you: So help you God.

Sect. 10. When the Register shall appoint any deputy, such deputy shall take the oath before two justices of peace; and every Register at the time of his being sworn shall enter into a recognizance with two sureties, to be approved of by five justices of peace present at his election, by writing to be registered at the next quarter-sessions, of the penalty of two hundred Pounds to his Majesty, to be taken and had by him in case of his being incapable of his duties in the execution of his office; the same to be transmitted by the justices within one month into the office of her Majesty's Remembrancer of the Exchequer.

Sect. 11. When any Register shall die or forebear, and his register shall be required, and the register of the devior and his misbehaviour appear to have been committed by such Register, the recognizance shall become void.

Vol. II. No. 120.
cally the registry of the memorial within six months after their attainment of such will, or of probate thereof, or record thereof, shall be sufficient.

Sect. 22. No member of parliament shall be capable of being chosen Regifter, or of executing the office, nor shall any Regifter or his deputy be capable of being chosen a member.

Sect. 23. This act shall be a publick act.

To every cafe between purchasers of lands in Yorkshire, where the second purchaser having notice of the first purchase, but that it was not registered, went on and purchased the same estate, and got his purchase registered, yet it was decreed, that having notice of the first purchase, tho' it was not registered, bound him, and that for certifying that such register was a fraud; the design of such acts being only to give parties notice, who might otherwise without such registry, be in danger of being imposed on by a prior purchase or mortgage, which they are in no danger of when they have notice thereof in any manner, tho' not by the registry. Decreed by my Lord Chancellor King.

Sect. 5. 18. 1. All bargains and fales of lands within the said West-riding, inrolled before the Regifter in the publick office at Wakefield, shall be effectual, according to the act 27 H. 8. 16. and the Regifter or his deputy, (together with one justice of peace) shall cause to be entered the acknowledgment of the bargainers; and shall enroll such bargains and sales; and indorse a certificate on such bargains and sales, of the times of inrolling, and sign the same; and the rolls thereof shall keep in the publick office upon record according to the memorials of deeds.

Sect. 2. 3. Deds. of bargains and sales enrolled, and copies of the enrollments thereof, shall be allowed in all courts as sufficient evidence, as bargains and sales enrolled in the courts at Westminster.

Sect. 3. Such enrollment of such deed in the Regifter-office shall be deemed the entering of a memorial thereof.

Sect. 4. No judgment, fiatute or recoginace (other than fuch as shall be entered into in the name and upon the proper account of her Majesty) shall affect any land in the West-riding, but only from the time that a memorial of such judgment, &c. shall be entered at the Regifter-office, expressing, in case of such judgment, the names of the plaintiffs, and the names and additions thereto, the name of the Regifter, and the time of enrollment, and in case of statutes and recognizances, expressing the date of such statute or recognizance, the names and additions of the cognizors and cognizors, and for what sums, and before whom the fame were acknowledged; and the party shall produce and leave with the Regifter the acknowledgment of such judgment, or of such recognizance, signed by the proper officer, and together with an affidavit sworn before one of the judges at Westminster, or a mayor in Chancery, that such memorial was duly signed; which memorial such officer is required to give such plaintiffs or conuenees, or their executors or administrators or attorneys, they paying 11.

Sect. 5. The Regifter shall make an entry, and if required give a certificate under his hand, testified by two witnesses, of such memorial of any judgment, statute or recognizance, and therein mention the day on which such memorial is registered, expressing in what book, page and number.

Sect. 6. The recognizance entered into by the Regifter for the faithful performance of his duty shall stand a security, as well for the due enrollment and safe keeping of the enrollments of all bargains and sales enrolled before the Regifter, as for the faithful performance of his duty in the execution of the office of Regifter.

Sect. 7. The Regifter shall be allowed for inrolling every such bargain and sale enrolled, and for certificates, copies and searches, like fees as for the entering memorials of deeds and wills, &c.

Sect. 8. If any person shall forge or counterfeit any entry of the acknowledgment of any bargainer in such bargain and sale, or any such memorial, certificate or indenture, as herein mentioned, and be thereof convicted, such person shall incur such penalties as in an act 3 5 Ann. cap. 14. are imposed for forging or publishing false and false seals, whereby such bonds are defrauded or any person may be moleded; and if any person shall for such himself before the Regifter, or before any judge or master in Chancery in the cases herein mentioned, and be thereof convicted, such person shall incur the same penalties, as if the oath had been made in any of the courts at Westminster.

Sect. 9. All certificates required by this act, or by the act 2 Ann. cap. 4. to be given by the Regifter in case of searches, shall be signed by the Regifter or his deputy, in the presence of two persons, who shall set their names as witnesses.

In cases of mortgage, judgments, statutes and recognizances; if a certificate shall be bought to the Regifter, signed by the mortgagees and mortgagees, plaintiffs and defendants, cognizors and cognizors respectively, their executors, administrators and affiants, and attested by two witnesses, whereby it shall appear, that all monies due have been paid in discharge thereof; which witnesses shall sign on oath before the said Regifter prove such monies to be satisfied, and that they found such certificate signed; the Regifter shall make an entry in the margins of the register-books, against the enrollment of such mortgage, or registry of the memorial thereof, and against the registry of such judgment, statute or recognizance, or mortgage, &c. was satisfied, and shall file such certificate upon record in the books of the said register-office.

Sect. 11. If any judgment, statute or recognition, be registered within thirty days after the acknowledgment or signing thereof, all the lands that the defendant or cognizor had at the time of such acknowledgment or signing, shall be bound.

Sect. 12. This act shall be a publick act.

Sect. 6. Ann. c. 32. § 1. A memorial of all conveyances, which after the 29th of September 1778. shall be made, and all wills where the devisor shall die after the said 29th of September, concerning, and whereby any lands in the East-riding of the county of York, or in the town and county of Kingston upon Hull, may be affected, may be registered; and every such deed shall be adjudged fraudulent against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, unless such memorial be registered, before the registering the memorial of the deed under which such subsequent purchaser or mortgagee shall claim title; and such devise by will shall be adjudged fraudulent against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, unless a memorial of such shall be registered as is herein directed.

Sect. 2. One publick office for registering (at the publick charge of the East-riding, to be raised by the judges of peace at their quarter-seessions, in such manner as they may think fit), for the registries of the rents and monies for the repairs of county bridges) shall be established at Beverley.

The act contains other directions to the same effect, as the acts 2 Ann. cap. 4. and 5 Ann. cap. 18. with the following additions.

Sect. 30. In all deeds of bargain and sale enrolled in pursuance of this act, whereby any effect of inheritance in fee-fEmfe is limited to the bargainee, the words grant, bargain and sell, shall amount to, and be construed to be, express covenants to the bargainee, his heirs and assigns, from the bargainer, for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, that the bargainer, notwithstanding any act done by him, was at the time of the making of the deed, of the persons thereby granted, bargained and sold, of an indefeasible estate in fee-fEmfe, free from all incumbrances (rents and services due to the lord of the fee only excepted) and for quiet enjoyment thereof against the bargainer, his heirs and assigns, and all claiming under him, and also further assurance thereof to be made by the bargainer, his heirs and assigns, and all claiming under him; unless the same shall be restrained by express words contained in such deed, and the bargainee, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, may in any action assumpsion thereupon, or they might do in such cases such covenants were expressly entered.
Sect. 31. Every leaf of the register-books and retard-ment-books shall be signed by two justices of peace appointed by the parties at their quarter sessions, and an entry shall be made from time to time by the clerk of the peace of the said riding in the order-book of the feffions, and signed by the justices that shall sign he register-books and retardment-books; and a like entry shall be made upon record and signed, of the number of the books, as also that all motions, at all such pages of them contain, in the Register office.

Sect. 32. All the clauses in this act concerning the East-riding, and the town of Kingston upon Hull, and not contained in the acts 2 Ann. cap. 4. and 5 Ann. c. 18.
shall extend unto all lands within the West-riding (the mortchage or purchase whereof shall be entered in the margins) as if in the said acts. 2 Ann. c. 4. and 5 Ann. c. 18.

Stat. 7 Ann. cap. 20. sect. 1. A memorial of all conveyances, which after the 20th of September 1799, shall be made, and of all wills where the devisee shall die after the said day, concerning any lands in the county of Middlesex, may be registered; and every such conveyance shall be adjudged fraudulent against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, unless such memorial thereof be registered before the registriing of the memorial of the deed under which such subsequent purchaser or mortgagee shall claim; and every such device by will shall be adjudged fraudulent against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, unless a memorial of such will be registered.

Sect. 2. One public office for registering such memorials shall be erected in manner following, viz. The clerk of incumbrance in Chancery for Middlesex, the Chief clerk in the Inns of Chancery, the clerk of the in:
ventaries in the Common Pleas, and the Queen's remarkers or his deputy in the Exchequer shall be the Register or masters of the office, and shall appoint one or more persons, for whom they shall be accountable, to be their deputies; which Register shall perform all things intended by this act in some office near the Inns of Court or Chancery; and the full Register shall present such deputies to the Lord Chancellor, the Chief justice of the Queen's Bench, the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, to be by three of them approved of before such deputies shall enter upon the execution of the office; and such deputies may be displaced by the Lord Chancellor, the Chief justices, and Chief Baron, or any of them, by writing; and the Lord Chancellor, the two Chief justices and Chief Baron, or any of them, shall have power to make rules and orders for the government of the said office.

Sect. 3. Every such Register, before he enter upon the execution of the office, shall be sworn before the Lord Chancellor, the Chief justices and Chief Baron, or one of them, as in 2 Ann. cap. 4.

Sect. 4. If such person appointed Register shall be convicted of any neglect, misdemeanor or fraudulent practice, in the office, he shall be liable to pay treble damages, with full costs to every injured person.

cognition with fourteen (to be approved of by the Lord Chancellor, to be by the Lord Chancellor, or by any one of them) of the penalty of 3000l. unto her Majesty, for being taken by one of the Chief justices; conditioned for his true and faithful performance of his duty in his office, in all things directed by this act; the same to be transmitted by such Chief justice within one month after the date, into the office of her Majesty's remembrancer of the Exchequer.

Sect. 14. The damages to be forfeited by any such Register, for any neglected, misdemeanor or fraudulent practice, or any other breach of this act, shall be recovered in her Majesty's courts at Exchequer, and

The following fection is to the same effect as sect. 19. of Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 6. sect. 1. A memorial of all deeds and conveyances, which after the 20th of September 1796, shall be made, and of all wills where the devisee shall die after the said day, and of all judgments, fi-tures and recognizances (other than such as shall be entered into in the name and upon the account of his Majesly) which shall be obtained or entered into after the said day, whereby any lands in the North-riding of Tra-hlove may be affected, may be registered; and every such deed or conveyance, judgment, &c. shall be adjudged fraudulent against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee, plaintiff or cognizant, upon valuable consideration, unless such memorial thereof be registered, before the registerring of the memorial of the deed or conveyances, and the judgment, &c. under which such subsequent purchaser or mortgagee, plaintiff or cognizant, shall claim; and every such devise by will shall be adjudged void against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee, plaintiff or cognizant, upon valuable consideration, unless a memorial of such will be registered.

Sect. 2. One public office for registering such memorials, shall be established at such market town, as the justices of the peace shall adjudge to be the nearest to the center of the north-riding, to be managed as in sect. 2.
of the said act of 2 Ann.

chaser for valuable consideration, nor any plaintiff in any judgment, or cognizant of any forfeiture or recognizance, shall be defeated by any title devised by such will, unless the will is actually registered within five years af-aft the death of the devisee.

The following two sects are to the same effect as sects.
4. 6. of the said act of 5 Ann. c. 18.

Sect. 21. Bargains and sales of lands within the North-riding, which shall be inrolled by the Register, shall be as effectual as if the same had been inrolled ac-

Sect. 22. Any person claiming title to any heredi-ments in the North-riding, may register at full length in the said office, any deeds, wills or conveyances, under which such title shall be claimed; and which shall be made, and in the case of wills, where the devicer shall die, after the last month of September 1796; and the said Register is authorized to inroll such deeds, wills and conveyances; and the Register shall in the margin of such inrolment mention the time of inrollment, and shall indorse and sign a certificate on such deed or will, and shall keep all the books, wherein such inrolments shall be made, in the said office, there to remain upon record;
and all copies of such inrolments, signed by the Register, and
and attested by two witnesses, shall be good evidence of such deeds, wills or conveyances, destroyed by fire or otherwise accident.

Sec. 23. At the time any deed or will shall be brought to be inrolled, one of the witneffes shall make oath or affirmation before the Register, that such deed was duly executed by the grantor, or that such will was signified and published by the devifor.

Sec. 24. Such deed and wills, as shall be made and executed in any place not within forty miles of the office, may be entred at length, in cafe an affidavit or affirmation, made before one of the judges, or a Master in Chancery, be brought with such deed or will, where in one of the witneffes shall swear or affirm, that he lafe the fad deeds executed, or fuch will signified and published.

Sec. 25. Such inrolment of fuch deeds and wills shall be deemed to be the entry of a memoria thereof, pursuant to this act.

Sec. 25. Such Register shall be allowed for the entry of every memorial 1: but if such memorial exceed two hundred words, then after the rate of 4d. an hundred words for all the words in fuch memorial, over and above the fad two hundred words; and the like fees for every bar-fain and fale inrolled, and the deeds and wills registered at length; and for every search 1s.

The fee following fections are to the fame effect as fect. 12, 14, 15, 19, of the fad act of 2 Ann, and fect. 10, 11, 20, of the act of 6 Ann c. 18.

Sec. 33. If any judgment, fature or recognizance, be registered within twenty days after the acknowledgment or signification thereof, it shall be as available as if fuch memorial had been entered on the day of the signification or acknowledgment.

The refufe of this act is to the fame effect as fect. 16, 22, 23, of the fad act of 2 Ann, and fect. 20, 31, of the fad act of 6 Ann c. 35.

Stat. 35 Geo. 2. cap. 4. feet. 1. The deputy or fecretary of the chief clerk to inrol pleas in the King's Bench, called the Master of the King's Bench Office, shall be one of the Registrars of the office for the things contained in the 7 Ann. cap. 20. instead of the chief clerk to inrol pleas in the King's Bench, with the like powers as by the fad act are given to fuch chief clerk; and the chief clerk shall be difcharged from being one of the Registrars for inrolling fuch deeds, &c. for the county of Middlefex as are mentioned in the fad act, and the ability which fuch chief clerk as one of the fad Registrars would have been subject to.

Sec. 2. Such secondary, called the Master of the King's Bench Office, fhall before he enters upon the fad office of one of fuch Registrars, take the oath prefcribed by the fad act, and enter into fuch recognizance, as therein mentioned, in fuch pleas for the better beha-viour as of any of the fad Registrars are subject to.

Sec. 3. This act shall be a publick act.

Regnum profefl. (mentioned in flat. 12 Car. 2. c. 17.) Henry VIII. founded five lecrures in each university, viz. Of Divinity, Hiftory, Greek, Law and Phy-fick; the readers of which lecrures are called in the university, Regulares profeflores.

Regnum ecclefiaticum. In some countries formerly, the clergy held there was a double supreme power, or two kingdoms in every kingdom; the one a Regnum ecclciasticum, absolute and independent upon any but the pope over ecclefiasticall men and caues, exempt from the fenate, the fenate, or the King, of the King, or the civil magistrate, which had fubordination and subfe&ion to the ecclefiasticall kingdom; but these usurpations and abufedities, were exterminated here by King Henry VIII. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 324.

Regum, (Regratarius, Fr. regrateur) Signifies him that buys or deals in, or venders, on purpose to enhance the prices; formerly called such, when bought by great, and sold by retai-l, came under that notion. 27 E. 3. flat. 1. cap. 3. But now that name denotes him that buys and sells any wares or vulators in the fame market or fair, or within five miles thereof, whereof fee the flat. 5 E. 6. c. 14. 5 Eliz. 12. and 15 Eliz. 25. Regula, The book of rules or orders, or statutes in a religious convent: Sometimes for the martyrology or obituary.

Regulat, (Regulare) Are such as profess to live un- der some certain rule; as monks or canons regular, who ought always to be under some rule of obedience.

Regulus, Subregulus. Are words often mentioned in the councils of the English Saxons: The firft signifies the other vicitome. But in many places they fignify a fubjurffionary; as in the old book in the archives of Worcester cathedral. Cowell, edit. 1729. See Subregulus.

Regulatio facris feifinam, quando vicicemos litteris feifinnam de maior parte quam debetur, is a writ judicial, Reg. fals. fol. 13. 51. There is another writ of this name and nature, s. 54.

Rehabilitatio. (habilitationis, mentioned in flat. 25 H. 8. cap. 21.) Is one of thofe exiftions mentioned in that fature to be claimed by the pope herefovere in Eng- land, and feems to signify a bull or breve, for reinoaking a fpiritual perfon to exercife his function, who was formerly disabled; or a refuming to former ability. Cowell, ed. 1727. See flate 25.

Rehabilitation of the former fad act, (hall be) where the defendant in any action makes an answer to the plaintiff's replication, or takes an exception or answer thereto, and it ought to be a fufficient answer to the replication, and follow in force the matter of the bar pleaded, 2 Litt. Atr. 435. The defendant is not to rejoin upon fuch words as are contained in the declaration or replication; and if the defendant do in his rejoinder depart from his plea pleaded in bar, the rejoinder is not good, because this is uncertain, and to fay and unfay, which the law doth not allow. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. It is obferved, that in many cafes, if the plaintiff in his replication, alleges a new matter, the defendant may there make a new an- fwer in the rejoinder, though if the defendant pleads a general plea, he fhall not commonly make that good af- terwards, by a particular thing in his rejoinder, 5 H. 7. 16. Regm. 22. Where a replication is pleaded which is iffuable, the clerk of the papers when he makes up the paper-book, both of course make up the rejoinder, which is in bar, and if the replication be iffuable, he hath the making up of the fur-rejoinder to and the iffe thereupon, 2 Litt. 433. See Departur.

Relation, (Relatia) Is a fiction of law, to make a nullity of a thing from the beginning (for a certain in- tent) which in truth had effence; and rather for necessi- ty, ut res magis valenti quam perdit. Co. lib. 3. c. 28. But more properly, it is a fiction of law, in which it is, where, in confideration of law two times, or other things are confidered as if they were all one; and by this the thing subfequent is faid to take its effect by re- latio in the time proceeding. As if A. deliver a writing to B. to be delivered to C. as the deed of A. when C. hath paid a fom of money. Now when the money is paid, and the writing delivered; this shall be taken the deed of A. at the time when it was firft delivered. So bills of parliament, to which the King affents on the laft day of parliament, flall relate and be of force from the firft day of the beginning of the parliament; and this is of divers other like things. Cowell, edit. 1727.

A confiftent, a man who fruck another, and after suffered him to go; and afterwards the party fruck, died of the blow. This efface is not for cyon, and yet it fhall have relation to the ftriking, in refpect of him who ftruck; ex prima confa cuitur attis but shall not have fuch relation in refpect of the confiftent who fuffered the effect, 2 Reg. 8. 22. 26. 7 Eliz. 25.

When an erroneous judgment is reversed by writ of error, as to the meane profites the fame fhall have rela- tion, by construction of law, to the fame of the firft judgment given; and that is to favour juflice, and ad- vance the right of him that bad wrong by the erroneous judgment. 13 Reg. 21. in Mervou’s cafe.
REL

But if any stranger has done a trespass in the mean time, and it be proved, after the recovery of the record, shall have an action of trespass against the trefpayers; and if the defendant pleads, that there is no such record, the plaintiff shall have the special matter, and maintain his action; so that unto the trefpayers, who are wrong-doers, the law shall not make any comparison: by Hen. 8. & 9. 12 & 13. this is the reason for then by the law, by a fiction and construction, should do wrong to him that recovered by the first judgment; for as the law chargeth the recoverer with all the mene profits, so it gives him remedy, notwithstanding the recovery, against all trefpayers in the intrey; for otherwise it would, by construction of relation, discharge trefpase, and charge him that recovered with the whole. And so he that reverses the judgment shall have an action for all the mene profits against the recoverer, and the recoverer shall have action of trespass against the trefpator. 13 Rep. 21, 22.

In Ninian Mawin's case. Relation shall in no case conclude the King. Arg. Part. Cates 74. in the case of The king shall not be over-reached by relation; as in the case of money of an outlaw paid into the Exchequer when the outlawry is reveted; now by relation the money was the property of the party all the time, but fund relation does not over-reach the prerogative of the King. Per Hals. Skin. 615. Alb. 7 4. B. R. in the Bankers case. If a gift is made to the King by deed introlled, and before involvement he grants away the land, the grant is void; yet the involvement by relation makes the land to pass to the King from the beginning. Relato, (Lat.) A rebecur, or teller; also applied to an information. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 20. See dictum warranto. Releas. (Relaxatio.) Is an instrument whereby ef-tates, rights, titles, entries, actions and other things, are sometimes extinguished, sometimes transferred, sometimes abrogated, sometimes enlarged. Wiff. Symbol. part 1 lib. 2. sect. 509. And there is a release in fact, and a release in law. Perkin's Grants 71. & 289. A release in fact, is that which the very words expressly declare. A re-lease in law, is that which does accrue by way of con-sequence or intendment of law; an example whereof you have in Perkin's abo supra. How these are available and how they are to be understood at large, lib. 3. cap. B. Cowell. A release is the giving or discharging of a right of action which a man hath or may claim against another, or which he has; or it is the conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath to a thing to another who has possession thereof, or some estate therein. 4 Bac. Abr. 203.

Relations are distinguished into express releases in deed, and those arising by operation of law; and are made of lands and tenements, goods and chattels, or of actions real, personal and mixt. Co. Lit. 264. a. There are to be adapted to the nature of the case, and the purpose for which the release is intended; so that if in the sale of a piece of land, or dispossession of goods, and reale all actions, he may notwithstanding land into his hands, or reale his goods, the right and property being still in him, though he has devolved himself of his remedy. 1 Hil. 165. 4 Co. 135. So where a man has given means to come to his right, he may release those, and yet take advantage of the other; but if a man has not any means to come to his right but by way of action, there by a release of all actions his right by judgment of law is gone, because by his own act he has barred himself of all means to come at it. 8 Co. 152. a. Hence releases were confirmed with much nicety and great trifcheifs, and being considered as the deed or grant of the party, were according to the rule of law taken strongest against the releasor; they now receive such interpretation as these grants and agreements do, and are favoured by the judges as tending to repose and quietness. Dyer 55. Plowd. 289. Hell. 15. 8 Co. 148.

Hence it hath been established as a general rule in the construction of releases, that where there are general words only in a release they shall be taken most strongly against the releasor, and not as a particular recital in a deed, and then general words follow, the general words shall be qualified by the special words. 1 Mid. 99. 1 Ld. Raym. 235.

1. Of the words and ceremony required in a release; and for a covenant, agreement or a disafforestation by will may operate as a release.

2. What shall be released by a release of all claims and demands.

3. What shall be released by a release of all actions and suits.

4. How for a possibility or contingent interest may be released.

1. Of the words and ceremony required in a release; and how for a covenant, agreement or a disafforestation by will may operate as a release.

Littleton tells us, that the proper words of a release are remissfil, release & quietum clannifies, which have all the fame significiication. Louti Coke abos. Renunciare, acquies- ter; and says, that there are other words which will amount to a release; as if the liber, & liberti, or the life, for life, that he shall be discharged of the rent; this is a good release. Litt. f. 445. Co. Lit. 264. Plowd. 140. So it hath been held, that a pardon by act of parliament of all debts and judgments amounts to a release of the debt, the word pardon including a release. 1 Sid. 261.

An express release must regularly be in writing and by deed, according to the common rule, esem modo oritur, esem modo diffidetur; so that a duty arising by record must be discharged by matter of as high a nature; so of a bond or other deed. Co. Lit. 264. 4. 1 Rol. Rep. 43. 2 Leon. 76, 213. 2 Rol. Abr. 408. 2 Sand. 48. Mar. 57. pl. 787. But a promiss by words may before breach be discharge or released. 1 Sid. 177. 2 Sid. 78. Cro. Jac. 2483. 620.

As where in affaffity the plaintiff declared, that the defendant for valuable consideration affirmed to go a certain voyage in such a ship before August following, and alleged a breach in the non-performance; to which the defendant pleaded, that before any breach, the plaintiff the fourth of April at such a place extenuavit ram of the said promiss; and on demurring the plea was held suffisi, without failing how he discharged him, or that such discharge was in writing. Cus. Carr. 385. Langdon v. Stokes.

But where in affassity for 5 l. upon exchange of a horse, to be paid upon requcst, the defendant pleaded, that before the action brought the plaintiff did exonerate him of this agreement; and this plea was refused to be il] for though a parol agreement may be discharged by parol before cause of action accrued, yet after that it cannot be discharged but by deed; and here the cause of action did accrue at least upon requcst, and therefore he should have pleaded the exoneration before the request. 1 Mid. 262. 2 Med. 250. S. C. Edward v. Heath.

In trefpas for riding the plaintiff's horse, the defend-ant pleaded that such a day the plaintiff extenuavit him of the trefpafs; and this was held an ill plea, in not futhing how the discharge was in writing. 1 Sid. 293. Wiflins v. Parke.

A release of a right in chattels cannot be without deed. 1 Leon. 285. Per Anderson. Ch. J.

A covenant perpetual, as that the covenantor will not sue without limitation of time, is a defeasance or absolute release; and this construction has been made to avoid 7 l. circuity ed in debt being the cause of an action of covenant would lie.

So if the obligation and grants to and with the obligor, that during 99 years he would not put the bond in suit; this is only a covenant which on a covenant will lie, but it cannot be pleaded in bar of the bond.

If two are jointly and severally bound, a release to one discharges the other.

A. co-owners with B. to pay him 300l. for the wife of the wife of A. only for her life; in covenant brought on this, and breach alleged that there was so much of the 300l. arrear, defendant pleads that there was another indenture between him and the plaintiff since the date or delivery of the deed of covenant declared on, reciting the said covenant and agreement, and for the payment of the rent money: now the time wherein it was covenanted and agreed, that so long as A. and his wife did cohabit, the payment of the 300l. should cease; and avers, that they did cohabit for the time the said arrear became due, and pleads this in bar of the first agreement; and though in this case there could not have been any great mischief in confounding the deed pleaded a defeasance or release, there being no other parties to the deed; yet as this was a sum in gros, and the covenant temporary and not perpetual, it was adjudged no bar.

It seems agreed, that a will, though sealed and delivered, cannot amount to a release, because it is amputatory and revocable during the testator's life; and by reason of the executry's content requisite to every dispositional of a personal thing by will, and the injury that might accrue to the testator's creditors, were a will allowed to operate as a release.

And therefore where in debt upon an obligation, by the representative of a testator, the defendant pleaded that the testator by his last will in writing related to the defendant; this was adjudged ill, and that no advantage could be taken hereof by plea.

But it hath been held in equity, that though a will cannot enure to a release, yet provided it were express and be to the intention of the testator, that the property should be discharged, the will would operate accordingly; and Lord Corgar said, that in such case it would be plainly an absolute discharge of the debt though the testator had survived the legatee.

If A. being possessed of goods loses them, and they come to the hands of B. who being in possession, A. by deed releases to B. all actions and demands personal which at any time before habuit vel habere potest against B. for any caute, matter or thing whatsoever; this shall be a bar to the property of the goods, so that B. has the absolute right of thing by this release.

By a release of all demands, all actions real, personal and mixed, and all actions of appeal, are extinct.

A release of all demands extends to inheritances, and takes away rights of entry, feises, &c.

But if the King releaseth all demands, yet as to lands, the inheritance shall not be included.

If B. a merchant is released by C. for non-performance of an award made for the payment of money at a day to come, there is no present debt nor any duty before the day of payment is come, and therefore it cannot be discharged.
before the day by a release of all actions and demands. 36 Car. 2d. 249

So if a man devolves a legacy to 2d. 'S. at the age of 23, tho' the legatee, after he attains the age of 21, and before the day of payment, may release it, yet by the word 'demand' it is not released, but there must be special words for the purpose. 10 Co. 51, in Lampert's case.

A release of all demands does not discharge a covenant not broken at the time; as where a leffer, on payment of 60l. to him by the leffe due on a judgment, released to him all demands; and it was adjudged that this did not release a covenant for repairs then broken; but a release of all covenants would have released the covenant. Howse v. Field, 2 Lev. 173. 2 Rob. Abr. 407. Nay 129. For the difference when broken or not, see Dryer 217. Lit. Rep. 50. 8 313 3. 2a. 60. 10 Co. 51. 5 Co. 71. 14 Lev. 173.

If there be leffe for years grants over by indenture all his estate, reserving a rent during the term, and afterwards releases to the assignee all demands; this shall discharge the rent, for he had the freedom of the rent in the time. Wotton v. Bis, 2 Rob. Abr. 408. 2 Lev. 456. Bridg. 123. 2 Rob. Rep. 20. Poth. 156.

If he have a rent charge in fee releases the tenant of the land all demands from the beginning of the year. If he release a covenant, this shall discharge all the rent, as well as to come as when paid. 20 Aff. pl. 5. 2 Rob. Abr. 408.

It is laid by Littleton and Lord Coke, that by a release of all demands a rent-service shall be released; but this it is laid is to be intended of a rent-service in grosis as a feu-dvrie. Lit. J. 510. Co. Litt. 291. And therefore in the case of Han v. Hanfen, where in covenant brought on a covenant in a lease for years to pay the rent reserved, the defendant pleaded release by the plaintiff of all demands at a day before the rent in question became due; the plaintiff replied that the release was in formal words not perfect. And in the covenant the tenant and lessee bound themselves to maintain the covenant and to pay the rent when due, and if it were broken, to do all that was necessary to renew it. To this it was adjudged by Fyler, Mallett and Windham, that the rent was discharged by this release, as it became due by the perception of the profits, and was not like to a rent-charge, or a rent parcel of a feu-dvrie; and they held, that this rent being incident to the reversion, and part thereof, was no more released hereby than the reversion itself was; and that this conformation should the rather prevail, as it was not the intention of the party to release this rent; But Twifden contra, he said, that in releases and deeds where words are heaped up, the party that grants the advanatage may take the strongest words and the fairest form of it, and that is the reason they are put in; and as to the intent, that must be gathered from the words; and men must take care what words they use, sporti politiam obidire legisnot leges politicæ; and he said, he could fee no difference between this rent and a rent in fee, both are rent-services, and neither de-mandable before they become due, otherwise than as in 40 Ed. 3, 47. it is laid, there is a continual demand between lord and tenant; and in this case there is a tenure between the leffe and him in reversion; and the reason why the reversion is not touched by this release is, because it can work only by way of extinguishment, and not by way of putting an intercal; but it was adjudged at futura. 1 Lev. 179, 120. 1 Seld. 141. 1 Inst. 499, 510. Han v. Hanfen.

The plaintiff declared upon a lease for years, reddatum 301. at Lady-day and Michaelmas, and assigns for a breach non-payment of a year's rent due and ending at Lady-day 1689. the defendant pleaded a release dated the 18th day of all demands, and upon a second judgment was given for the plaintiff; for the growing rent not due, which is incident to the reversion, is not discharged, though the first half-year's rent, which was a duty demandable, was released; but here the release being pleaded as a bar to all, which it is not, the plea is naught, and judgment must be given for the plaintiff. 2 Salt. 578. Stephens v. Susan.

3. What shall be released by a release of all actions and suits.

A release of all actions discharges a bond to pay money on a day to come; for it is Debitum in praesenti, quamvis sit 4ovandum in futuro; and it is a thing merely in action, and the right of action in him that releases, though no action will lie when the release is made. Co. Lit. 292.

But a release of actions does not discharge a rent before the day of payment, for it is neither debitum nor 4ovandum at the time of the release; nor is it merely a thing in action, for it is grantable over. Co. Lit. 292.

So if a man has an annuity for a term of years, for life or for life, and he be before it be behind releases all actions; this shall not release the annuity, for it is not merely in action, because it may be granted over. Co. Lit. 292. 1 Bald. 178. Co. Abr. 897. Mor. 113. But the release shall release the arrearages incurred before. 39 H. 6. 43. 2 Rob. Abr. 404.

If one releases summa querela uatis lupus, this is as large as a release of all actions, and releases all causes of action, tho' no action be then depending. Co. Lit. 292.

By a release of all manner of actions, all actions as well criminal as real, personal and mixed, are released. Co. Lit. 287.

A release of actions real is a good bar in actions mixed, as an affife, for fines, contracts, debts, Pennsylvania, warbles, quiets, impound, annuity; and fo is a release of actions personal. Co. Lit. 284. But not after the grantee has made his election. 1 Fon. 215.

In an appeal of robbery or felony, a release of all actions personal will not bar, because an appeal, in which the appelee is to have judgment of death, is higher than a personal action; but a release of all manner of actions, or of all actions criminal, or of all actions mortal, or of all actions concerning the pleas of the crown, or of all appeals, or of all demands, will be a good bar of any such appeal. Co. Lit. 287. 2 Henok. F. C. 190. And in an appeal of malice a release of all actions personal may be pleaded, because damages only recovered. Co. Lit. 288.

A release of all actions is regularly no bar to an execution, for execution is no action, but begins when the action ends. Co. Lit. 289. 8. 213.

Also a release of all actions does not regularly release a writ of error, for it is no action, but a commissio to the justices to examine the record; but if therein the plaintiff may recover, or be referred to any thing, it may be released by the name of action. 2 Lev. 40. Trib. 209. Co. Lit. 288.

But a release of all actions is a good bar to a fire feas, though it be a judicial writ, for the defendant may plead to it, and it is in nature of a new original given by the statute. Co. Lit. 290. Comb. 455.

So in replevin a release of all actions is a good bar, for the avenant is defendant, though in some respects he is plaintiff. 2 Rob. Rep. 75.
By a release of all fuifs a man is barred of a writ of e القوات. Lateb 110.
So by a release of all suifs a man is barred of execution, because it cannot be had without application to the court, and prayer of the party, which is his fuif. Co. Lit. 143. 4
If a diff., releaseth to the diff. all actions; this is no releaseth of his right of entry, for when a man has several means to come at his right, he may releaseth one of them, and yet take benefit of the other. Co. Lit. 23. 6.
If a man by wrong takes away my goods; if I releaseth to him all actions personal, yet by law I may take the goods out of his poss.ion. Co. Lit. 286. St. Tr. 57.
If a man releaseth all actions, by this he shall releaseth as well actions which he has as executor, as though in his own right. 2 R. Rol. 167. 7. C. Cited by Penet, and said by him to be clearly so, unless there was an action of his own for the release to work upon.
If a man releaseth all quarels; a man's deed being taken most strongly against himself, it is as beneficial as all actions, for by it all actions real, personal and mixed, are releaseth. Co. Lit. 292. 4.

4. How far a possibility or contingent interest may be releaseth.
It is a general rule in our books that a mere poss.ibility cannot be releaseth, and the reason hereof is, that a releaseth supposeth a right in being, and it was thought to countenance maintenance to transfer choises in action, possibilities and contingent interests. Co. Lit. 48. a. Cro. Eliz. 552.

Hence it is held, that an heir at law cannot releaseth to his father's d. in the life-time of the father, for the heirship of the heir is a contingent thing, for he may die in the life-time of the father, or the father may alienate the lands. If the conushee of a fleasu releaseth to the consor his all his right to the land, yet he may afterwards for execution, for he has no right to the land, but only a poss.ibility. 1 And. 133. Co. Lit. 265. 2 Rol. Abr. 405. Cro. Eliz. 552.

So if a creditor releaseth to his debtor all the right and title which he hath to his lands, and afterwards gets judgment, the execution may be filed against the bail, for at the time of the releaseth there was only a poss.ibility of the bail becoming chargeable. 5 Co. 70. R. and B. brings a writ of e, pending which A. releaseth to B. all executions, and after the judgment is affirmed, and new damages given to A. for the delay upon the statute of 3 H. 7, this releaseth shall not bar A. to have execution of those damages, because he had not any right to have execution, nor to any duty at the time the releaseth was made. 2 Rol. From the reasons herein it was held, that if at Common law a woman before marriage had accepted of a child, and female action of dower, this she could not have bound her, because at the time she had no right to dower. 4 Co. 1. Tnom's cafe.
A city orphan cannot at law releaseth her orphanage part to her father, for he hath no right in her during the life of her father; but it hath been held in equity, that a woman's child, by a valid consideration, may use the marriage of a daughter, and a portion given her by the father, such releaseth may operate as an agreement to waive the orphanage, and hath accordingly been so declared in equity. 1 Peer Will. 638. 2 Peer Will. 527. Prev. Chan. 545.

One poss. of a term for years to A. for life, remainder to B. B. may releaseth his right to A. and such releaseth shall extinguish his interes., though it was objected, that B. had only a poss.ibility at the time of the releaseth made. 10 Co. 47. Lampe's cafe.
But it was held in the above-mentioned cafe of Lampe, and hath in like manner been held in other cases, that B. could not affin his interest to a frauds, in the life-time of A. the same being only a chose in action, and a mere poss.ibility, insuch as an eflate for life is in supposition of law a larger eflate than for any number of years. 10 Co. 47. 4 Co. 66. 1 Sid. 188. Rol. 129.
But later resolutions, especially those which have been in courts of equity, have made a great alteration in this doctrine. 2 Per. 593.

As in the cafe of Calne v. More, where one poss. of a term devineth it to A. for life, remainder to B. and made executor; B. devineth this remainder to C. and died in the life-time of A. and in order to defeat C. of his interes., A. assigned his term to a third person. And it was decreed by Lord Chancellor Eyre, that A. the executor and devineth, for life was a truth for B. and thould not be at liberty to defrey this remainder, but that the executor should prefereth the leaf, so it might go according to the will, with the performance whereby the executor was intuited. Mor 866.

So in the cafe of Careing v. Bickerstaff, where the truth of a term was devineth to A. for life, remainder to B. It was agreed by all, that B. might affin his interest to the truth, which flould that a term in remainder must be transferred over by deed. 1 Chan. 44.

One poss. of a term for years devineth it to A. for life, remainder to B. B. in the life-time of A. devineth his remainder to J. S. who devineth it over; and the question was, Whether A. (the devineth for life) being dead, the devineth of J. S. should have the term, or whether it should go to the administrator de bonis non; and it was decreed for the devineth of J. S. and the administrator de bonis non of B. was directed to affin his term to him. 1 Peer Will. 572. Hind v. Ipel.

And in the case of Theobald v. Duffay in the house of Lords, March 1729-30; it was (inter alia) determined that a poss.ibility of a term is assignable for a good consideration.
It is laid down in Hot's cafe, that a duty uncertain at first, which upon a condition precedent is to be made certain afterwards, is but a poss.ibility, which cannot be releaseth. 5 Co. 705. 2 Med. 281.

As a nominer waiting on a rent which cannot be releaseth till the rent is behind, as the non-payment of the rent makes the nominer passus a duty. Telv. 215 Bruns. 116. Bridges v. Easau.

So if an award be, that upon the plaintiff's delivering the defendant by a certain day a load of hay, the defendant shall pay him 10 l. in this cafe the 10 l. cannot be releaseth before the day, for it rests merely in possession and contingency, whether the money shall ever be paid.

Religion (Religion) is virtuous, as founded on reverpunishment, a systen of Divine faith and worship as the only means to salvation. Thus as we ascend towards the Divine nature, where we are enabled and inclined to serve and worship him after such a manner as we conceive most acceptable to him, is called religion.

Remainder, (Remanentia) Is an estate limited in lands, tenements or rents, to be enjoyed after the expiration of another particular estate. And this remainder may be either for a certain term, or in fee simple, or fee tails, as appears by Brke, tit. Dene and Remainder, fol. 245, and Glanville, lib. 7. cap. 1. The difference between a remainder and revocacion, according to Speelman, is this, That by a revocacion after the remanent term, the estate remains to the donor, or his heirs, as the propriety fountain; whereas by remainder it goes to some third person, or a stranger. Cowell, ed. 1727. Remainder is described to be a remnant of an estate in lands or tenements, expectant on a particular estate created together with the same and at the same time, and is to expire on the particular estate, that unless it can take effect when the particular estate determines, it is void. Rep. Abr. 415. 1 Co. 95, 103. Plow. 56. If the remainders are of three sorts; Fiftly, When it is a limitation to one not in ife, for in that case, if the remainder-man never does come in ife, it is a void remainder. Secondly, When the particular estate may determine before the remainder can commence; as an estate to A. for life; and from and after the determination of his estate, then to C. during the life of A. this is good by contingency, that is, if A. forfeit his estate by alienation, or otherwise, in his life-time. Thirdly, When there is a limitation precedent, or something to happen before the remainder can vest; then it is a void ife, as a remainder to commence when J. S. shall reside in England from Rome. In the case of Dermor v. Feretich, Mich. 14 Geo. 2. Per. Lee Chief Justice. But if J. S. in the case above, be living at the time of the remainder limited to his right heirs, this puts such remainder in abeyance, and whatever contingency, that is, if, A. does not give the estate, but in mihibus viti nullius, if the sefior or donor it not, because he has limited it out of him, and all remainders must pass out of him at the time of the limitation, though they do not presently velt in the person intended; and in the right heirs of J. S. it cannot be, because he cannot have heirs during his life; for in such cases no estate can vest in abeyance, but by inquiry, to take it; therefore it is in the mean time in abeyance or expectancy, to vest or not vest, as the cafe happens; for if J. S. dies during the particular estate, then the remainder presently takes place in his heirs; but if the particular estate determines by death of otherwise in the life of J. S. then such remainder is become totally void, and can never velt, but the estate settles again in the sefior or donor, as if no such limitation in remainder had been; and he becomes tenant to the propriety, and is obliged to do the services; and though \( J. S. \) do live after, yet his heir can have no benefit by it, nor have his capapcity to take the estate when it fell. 1 Co. 135. Co. Lit. 378. a. 2 Co. 51. 2 Red. Abr. 415. Plow. 28, 556. Poph. 74. Mar. 720. 3 Co. 10. 20. Co. 50. Raym. 145. Pollet. 56. But if there be no such J. S. at the time of the limitation, though he be after born, and dies, during the particular estate; yet his heirs shall have the remainder. So if a remainder be limited to A. fan of B. in tail, &c. or to E. wife of D. where in truth there is no such A. or E. though B. has a fon called A. or D. marries one E. yet they cannot take the remainder; because if there be such persons as the words of the gift import, there the remaineder ought to velt in them presently, and they will never after be made capable of taking the estate, but if there be no such per son then in ifes, none who come within that description after can lay claim to it, because the limitation was prefent to per ons; but a remainder limited primogenitus filia, or proxime heredi majusi of A. or perpetuus hereditario de jurgant pannorum, or fentanti parae of A. or to the right heirs of A. being then such A. in ifes, or to the wife that A. shall marry; there are good remainders, and shall velt when such persons come in ifes as are within the description; because here appertains no present regard for any person in particu lar, and therefore if they answer the description at any time before the particular estate determined to be time enough, and so there is a diversity between a remainder limited to one by name in particular, and such remainder limited by description or circumscription, or between a general name and a special name. Co. Lit. 3. 1 Co. 66. 2 Co. 51. Hib. 33. Mar. 104. Dyrt 337. 2 Law. 210. 1. A. makes a lease to B. for life of B. and after the death of A. to remain to B. and his heirs; this remainder is contingent, and cannot vest prefently, for if A. survives B. it is void; and because otherwise the expiration of liverty would be interrupted during the life of A. for he cannot give himself any estate, his livery operating to pass estates from him, not to give any thing to him who had the whole before; and therefore during his life the operation of the livery must cease, and by consequence no remainder can take effect in virtue of that livery, which pro tempore being at an end, all that depended thereon ceases, and can never after be revived for it. But all the estates conveyed from the seflor, and if he comes again into the possession before they can all take effect, this breaks the force of the livery, and brings back again to him all such livery which had taken out of him, and they can never take effect but by a new livery; and this is the reason of the common ease, that one cannot give lands to another to begin begin after his death, because being to make livery preferably, if that cannot operate preterently, it can never operate at all, for it is a contradiction to give lands to one after death, and to remove them from those very persons, and yet by words to refrain that operation to a future time; but in the principal case, where A. dies first, there is no interruption of the livery, for B. had an eftate for life by virtue thereof, and before that determines, the same livery, which carried the remainder behind, was in A.'s heirs, the collateral remainders upon A.'s death direct and lette, or bring down the remainder to B. and his heirs. 10 Co. 85.

If a lease be made to A. and B. and C. for their lives, and if B. survives C. then to remain to B. and his heirs, this remainder is in abeyance, because though the perfon for whose benefit the last-mentioned eftate was to have that B. survives C. yet till that be known the remainder cannot vest. So if a lease be made to A. for life, and after the death of B. who is a stranger, to remain to C. in fee, or to A. in fee, these remainders are in abeyance or contingency, and depend on B.'s dying before C. or A. for if he survives them, the remainder cannot take effect. 3 Co. 20. 10 Co. 85.

2. If a lease be made to A. for life, remainder to the abbot of D. and his feoffadores, though the abbot be then dead, so as there is then no abbot at all, yet the remainder shall be good if an abbot be made before the death of the abbot; and if an abbot be made before the death of D. and chapter, prior and convent, yet there be then no mayor, dean or prior. So of a remainder to the bishop of D. parson of D. or other folio corporation and his feoffadores; these remainders not being li-limited to them by name specially, but to them generally, and so whenever comes within the description before the determination of the particular eftate, is capable of takine by virtue thereof, are good remainders in abeyance, etc. But if there be no such corporations at the time of the limitation, then the remainders are totally void ; and none created after, though by the same name, can ever have any effect, unless a patent be there after granted to make such corporation. 1c. 212. 12 H. 3.

2. Of crofs remainders, or those arising by implication and constrution of law.

A having ilive five fons, his wife being enfeianted two thirds of his lands to his four younger fons, and the child in vente sa mere if he were a foon, and their heirs; and if they all die without ilive male of their bodies or any of them, that the lands flall revert to the right heirs of the defiver; by this defive the property is in default in one of the dying heirs, the crofs remainders in tail to each other, and no part flall revert to the heir of the defiver till all the younger fons be dead without ilive male of their bodies. Dyer 302.

But when one having ilive three fons, A. B. and C. devises one house to A. and his heirs, another house to
B. and his heirs, and a third house to C. and his heirs, provided if all his foid children flall die without ilive, then if then all the foid meifiages flall remain and be to his wife and her heirs, and it was held by three judges, that upon the death of one of the fons without ilive the wife might enter, and that here there were no fuch crofs remainders from one fon to another, because being devised to them severally by expres limitation, there shall be no greater effe to them by implication but Law Ch. J. doubted; and Delderidge J. faid, that though perhaps crofs remainders may be by implication where there is a defive to two ferior perfon, yet not so if in abeyance, for the uncertainty of its taking effect does eflais by moieties to feveral perfon, and when another dies, remainder again to another, because of the uncertainty and inconvenience; and that it was never feen in any book, where an effate is limited to divers, that there could be crofs remians. Cra. Juc. 655.

2. Witty v. Witty, 173. 1 C. Cited, and admitted to be law.
As in 4 Lem. 259.

One felled of lands in fee, by his will in writing deplies Black Ace to A. his daughter and heirs, and White Ace to his daughter B. and her heirs; and if the die-before the age of eighteen years living A. then A. Shall have Black Ace to her and her heirs; and if Richard, die, having no ilive, living B. then B. Shall have the premises

A. to her and her heirs; and if both die, having no ilive, then A. and B. to his and her heirs and B. attains her age of sixteen years; and then dies without ilive in the life of
A. and first it was held by three judges against Dryr, that the daughter B. had an heir male by the death of A.
will, and not a fee determinable upon a contingency sub-

ferent; secondly, that by the words, if both die without ilive, no crofs remainders in tail were created by imlication, but that upon B.'s death without ilive, after sixteen, J. S. should have her part presently without having part of the premises. 2 Rol. 130. 1 Dall. 230.

Richard Holden felled in fee, and having ilive a foon and three grand-children, by his will devised part of his eflate to his wife for her life, and the reversion of such part expectant on her death, and all other her freehold estates, etc. to her for her life, and after his death to his first and other fons successively in tail male; and for default of such ilive, and after the determination of the faid effates, he gave the premises to his grand-daughter Anne Holden, and his granddaufther Elizabeth Holden, to be equally divided between them, and to the heirs of their respective bodies iliving; and for default of such ilive he gave the premises to his grand-daughter Anne in fee; the teffator died feared, Richard the foon died without ilive male, whereupon Elizabeth and the grandon ented, and Elizabeth died without ilive generally; Anne Holden mar-rried John Tare and the refolution was, whether there were crofs remainders between Elizabeth and Richard the grandon, or whether the moiety of Elizabeth Should go to Anne or to Richard? And it was resolved, that there were no crofs remainders between them, because here are no express words, nor is there a neceffary implication, without either of which crofs remainders cannot be railed; that the words, and for default of such ilive, being relative to what goes before, mean only, and for default of heirs of their respective bodies, and there it is no more than as if it had been a devile of one moiety to Richard and the heirs of his body, and of the other moiety to Elizabeth and the heirs of her body, and for default of heirs of their respective bodies remainder over, in which cafe there could be no doubt; and it was held that this cafe differed from the cafe fupra of Holmes and Meynell, the word reversion being in that cafe, and the first devisors were the teffator's daufthers, and the remainder-tevise his nephew; and the second cafe, Anne was as near to the teffator as Richard, a like cafe in B. R. between Brome v. Williams.

3. Of what things a remainder may be made, or limited.

As to eftates of inheritance, there can be no doubt but that the granator, having a perpetual and durable interest in the estate, may share and divide it, or grant as many remainders over as he thinks proper. 4 Bac. Abr. 497.

But as to personal goods and chattels, it was formerly held, that they in their own nature were incapable of any limitation over, being things transitory, and by many accidents subject to be destroyed, disposed of, delivered in trust, &c., and the exigencies of trade requiring a frequent circulation thereof, in which they differ from lands and tenements which are permanent, and therefore what is called an estate in lands is termed property in personal chattels; and hence it was held, that a grantor's devise of a personal estate, if not expressly qualified, to go to his heirs after a certain time or minute, was a gift for ever, and an absolute disposition of the intire property. Brs. Devise 13. Plew. 521. Dyer 74. 8 Co. 94.

Hence it came to pass, that it was a long time ere the courts of justice could be prevailed on to have any regard for a devise over even of chattel real, or a term for years after an estate for life limited thereon, because the estate for life being in the eye of the law of greater regard and consideration than an estate for years, they thought he, who had it devised to him for life, had therein included all that the devisee had a power to dispose of; but now such remainders over are allowed under the name of executory devices, and are established both in courts of law and equity and in trust and gift, and are made perpetual, so as to make estates unalienable. 4 Bac. Abr. 294.

Also a distinction was formerly taken between a devise of a personal chattel to one for life, with a remainder over, and of the use only; that in the first case the devise of life for the absolute property, but not so in the second, for that the devise of life had not the property of the goods, but only a special interest in them, so that there still remain a property which might be limited over; but this distinction is now exploded in conformity to the Civil law, and the devisee in remainder is allowed in equity the like remedy in both cases. Plew. 521. Grot. Car. 346. 1 Rol. Abr. 610. March 106. Owen 33. 1 Grot. Ca. 129. 2 Vern. 245. 1 P. Will. 4, 503, 657.

But a devise of a term for years or personal chattel to one for a day or an hour, is a devise of the whole term or interest, if the limitation over is void, and it appears at the same time that the whole was intended to be dispossessed from the execution. 1 P. Will. 666.

A being��classified of a term for ninety-nine years, devise of life for life, and after the failure of the devisees, all the seven persons being dead, and the term continuing, it was adjudged, that it should revert to the executors of the testator, and that it did not vest in the survivor of the devisees so as to vest it to his representation. 1 Salk. 231. 1 Ed. Raym. 325. Ayres v. Falsbeld.

A farmer devised his flock (which consisted of corn, hay, cattle, &c.) to his wife for life, and after her death to the plainfient. It was objected, that no remainder can be limited over of such chattels as these, because the use of them is to supply and consume them; but the Master of the Rolls said the devise over was good, but said if any of the cattle were worn out in using, the defendant was not to be answerable for them; and if any were sold as ufeless, the defendant was only to answer for the value of them at the time of the sale; and an account was decreed to be taken accordingly. Abr. Eqw. 561. Hayley v. Barrodale.

A gives his father, by will, to l. and directs that part of his personal estate, as his wife should leave of her substance, should go to the father; whatever the wife has not employed in that way, shall go over and be accounted for. 1 P. Will. 651. Uprawr v. Hafey.

But if a chattel real, money, goods or other personal things, are devised to one, and the heirs of his body, or to one, and if dies without heirs of his body, remainder over; this remainder is totally void, and the courts of equity will not allow of a bill of the remainder-man to compel security, &c. or to have the money, &c. after the death of the first devise, but it shall go to his executors or administrators; for the first devise gives the absolute property of a personal estate, as the like devise of a real estate before the statute De domini gave the absolute fee, upon which no limitation could be made further, and the same is true of the representation of an estate; so are the executors to take the personal estate; and this is not within the statute De domini, but remains as at Common law. 2 Tant. 339. 2 Vern. 600. 1 Salk. 156. Abr. Eqw. tit. Devise.

If A. devise that his goods and furniture shall remain in his house to be enjoyed according to the limitations in his will, by those intituled to the house, the first that would be tenant in tail of the house becomes absolute owner of the goods. Saunders v. Saunders admitted. Not only lands and tenements, but also rents, commons, eftovers or any other interest or profits in oil, wherein the grantor hath the absolute property to himself and his heirs, are to be granted with remainder over. Plew. 379. 9 Co. 45, 97.

So if one hath the office of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, sherif, &c. to him and his heirs, he may grant these offices to one for life, remainder to another for life, &c. for some major contract in fee minas, and as they are grantable over in fee, so may they be granted in fee or remainder. Jones v. Rolls. 1 Tit. Plow. 48, 100. 1 Salk. 330. 1 Salk. 577. 1 Lorn. 1225. March pl. 100.

In the case of The King v. Kemp, it was held, that the King may grant an estate in an office to commence in futuro, or upon a contingency, for he hath no inheritance in the office, or to the execution of it, but in point of time only, when he grants a lease. In the former case there was a diversification of offices in fee existing, and such as were grantable only for life, which being as a new thing created, might, as a rent de novo, be granted to commence in futuro. 4 Moel. 275. 1 Ed. Raym. 52. 3 Cary. 330. Salt. 495. Comb. 334. King v. Kemp. If one be desired to have a vicount, Earl, &c. created, and after, in the same patent, the same honour is granted to another in remainder, yet this operates as a new grant, and not as a remainder, for the King had no reversion of that honour in him, tho' he had the same power of appointing one in fee to take it, as he had of granting the office. 3 King v. Trenchard. 1 Co. 70. 1510. 1 Salk. 577. Underhill v. Besson. A licence to fell wine may be granted to one for life, remainder to another for life; because by such licence not only an authority pulchit, but an interest, by way of re"stitution, to that which was the subjedt before it was prohibited by statute. 1 Lorn. 226. Bridg. Rep. 193.

4. What words are sufficient to create a remainder.

The word remainder is no term of art, nor is it necessury to create a remainder. So that any words, sufficient to shew the intent of the party, will create a remainder; because such enfeetors take the denomination of remainder, though they may be limited over for time, as after they are limited, than from any previous quality inherent in the word remainder. To make them such therefore, if a man gives lands to A. for life, and that after his death the land shall revert, or defend to B. for
A. by indenture makes a leafe to B. for forty years, if A. so long live, and after his death to C. (who was no party to the deed) for one thousand years, and then A. leaves a fine and dies, and five years pass after his death, and then the plaintiff claiming under C. enters another suit, and ought to be in abeyance, or contingency, to vest or not vest when that determines; but here the first lease is no such particular estate; because that reaches not to the commence- ment of the remainder, nor is the remainder limited with any regard to the particular estate; because it is not determinable at all in the case, for it is to take effect at all events, upon the death of the lessee, be it before or after the end of the term, and therefore it can be no other than a future intertitt termini to begin after the death of the party that grants it, which being but for ten years it may well do; because it enures by way of contract, and though the grante there was no party to the deed, and therefore, as objected, could take nothing, yet it appears, that judgment was given for the plaintiff; which proves, First, That the grante had an interest; Secondly, That the interest was not determinable; and, thirdly, years non-claim after the death of the grante, not being touched, devolved or turned to a right; thirdly, That though the grante was no party to the indenture, yet he might well take by virtue thereof, if he gets the indenture to make out his title, for the grantor can't derogate from his own grant, or avoid his own act.

5. Of the continuance of the particular estate, and when the remainder it is to commence.

If a man makes a leafe to A. for life, and that after the death of A. and one day after, the land shall remain to B. for life, &c. this is a void remainder, because not to take effect immediately upon the determination of the first estate, and so during that time there would be an interruption of the livery, and no tenant of the freehold, either to deal in the foil, or to hold in his right, for another life, or term, or years, non-claim after the death of the grante, not being touched, devolved or turned to a right; thirdly, That though the grante was no party to the indenture, yet he might well take by virtue thereof, if he gets the indenture to make out his title, for the grantor can't derogate from his own grant, or avoid his own act.

5. Of the continuance of the particular estate, and when the remainder it is to commence.
Remembrances of the Chequeuage, (Rememrantes Scaccarii,) Are three officers or clerks there, One called the King's Remembrancer, 25 Edw. cap. 5. The second, The Lord Treasurer, and the third, the Clerk of the Judges of that court, in Remembrance of such things as are to be called on, and dealt in, for the King's behalf. The third is called The Remembrancer of the First-Fruits, 5 R. 2. Stat. 1. cap. 14, 15. Thee in 37 Edw. cap. 4 are called Clerks of the Remembrancer. The King's Remem- brancer makes all records, and enters them before the Barons for any the King's debts, or for appearances, or for observing of orders: He takes all bonds for the King's debts, for appearance, or for observing orders, and maketh processes for the breach of them. He writeth processes against the collectors of customs, fabulums, and fifteenth, for their accounts: All informations upon processes are entered in his office, and there all matters upon English bills in the Exchequer chamber remain: He makes the bills of compositions upon penal laws, takes the falsment of debts, has delivered into his office all manner of indentures, fines and other evidences whatsoever, that concern the affuir of any lands to the crown: He every year, in trallina animarum, reads in open court the statute for election of sheriff's, and gives them their oath; and he reads in open court the oath of all the officers of the same when they are admitted, besides many other things: The Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer makes processes against all sheriff's, effectors, receivers and bailiffs, for their accounts. He makes other processes of fees, fines and extents for any debt due to the King either in the pipe, or with the auditors; makes processes for all such revenue as is due to the King, by reason of his tenures: He makes a record, whereby it appears, whether sheriff's or other accountants pay their fines due at Egles and Michaelmas. He makes another record, and procures that the sheriff's give their days of prefixation. All efects of fines, fines and amercements, fee in any courts at Westminster, or at the alleys or seftons, are certified in this office, and are by him delivered to the clerk of the efects, to write processes upon them, &c. There are brought aloft into his office, all the accounts of cUSTOMERS, controllers and other accountants, to make entry thereon of record. The Remembrance of the First-Fruits takes all compositions and bonds for first-fruits and tenth, and makes processes against such as do not pay the same. Cornwell, edit. 1757.

Remembrances to make copies of seizures and inquisitions certifyed into their offices; and to enrol and certify to the improper of the great roll such debts as are charged upon sheriffs, &c. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 21, fol. 4, 6. Remitter. (Remitter, to relieve.) In a legal sense intends a restitution of one that has two titles to lands or tenements, and is feiled of them by his latter title, which proving defective, he is referred to the former and more ancient title. Cowell. E. N. & B. fol. 149. Dyer fol. 68.

Remitter is an ancient term in the law, and is where a man has two titles to lands or tenements, viz. one a more ancient title, and another a more late title; and if he comes to the land by a later title, yet they shall adjudge him in by force of the elder title; because the elder title is the more free and worthy title; and then when he is adjudged in by force of his elder title, he is said a remitter in him, for that the law does admit him to be in the lands by the elder and fitter title; as, if tenant in tail discontinues the tail, and after he dies his discontinue; and to died feised, whereby the tenements reversion, inheritable by force of the tail; in this case, it is to him to recover the tail, and discontinue, who has right by force of the tail, a remitter to the tail; because the law shall put and adjudge him to be in by force of the tail, which is his elder title; for if he should be in by force of the defendant, then the discontinue might have a writ of entry for dixit diem in the per annum, after the death of his adversary, and his damages. But inasmuch as he is in his remitter by force of his tail, the title and interest of the discontinue is quite taken away and defeated, &c. Lit. leg. 659.

Regularly to every remitter there are two incidents, viz. an ancient right and defeasible estate of freehold continuing together, &c. Lit. 548. Tenant in tail instituted his heir apparent in the tail within age, and another jointnain in fee, and the tenant-in-tail dies; the heir in tail is in his remitter as to the one moiety, and as to the other moiety he is put to his writ of formon, &c. Lit. leg. 663.

So if the discontinue after the death of tenant in tail made a demand of the heir apparent, he might take in the person who has a right, and to a stranger in fee, and makes livery to the infant in name of both; the issue is not remitted to the whole, but to the half; for, till he takes the feise, and after the remitter is wrought by operation of law, and therefore can remit him but to a moiety, &c. Lit. leg. 663.

But if tenant in tail insted his heir apparent, the heir being of full age at the time, and dies; this is no remitter to the heir, because it was his folly, that being of full age he would take such feeedom, &c. but such folly cannot be adjudged in the heir being within age at the time of the feecom, &c. Lit. leg. 664. For where the right of pollefion is distinct from the right of property; there if the proprietary re-obtains the right of polleffion by agreement, he must hold it under such agreement, for the other having the right of pollefion, and transferring it to the proprietary, such proprietary must take the right in the same manner as the other was conserved; for it is his own folly and laches, the proprietary would contrat about such right of pollefion, and not afflit his property in a proper action; but when he has contracted for such right of pollefion, and such right of pollefion is transferred, he must keep to the terms of the bargain, and he leaves all the right in the seceur he has not contracted; &c. 6 G. Treat. of Ten. 111. 134. A woman after her divorcement or keeping a husband, who alias to another in fee, the alience lets the same land to the husband and wife for their two lives, saving the reverto give him an adequate satisfaction or compensation for them, as the jury cannot determine what injury he has sustained. Ca. Lit. 96. a. Stil. 397. 2 Ld. Raym. 1160.

The services implied are such as the law obliges the tenant to perform when there are none contracted for in the grant; and there are more or less according to the duration of the gift; as at Common law, before the statute Ruin emperior terarrum, if the tenant made a feast in fee without any reservation of services, the feast-fee held by his grantor for services by which the feoffor held over; because the services being an incumbrance on the land, which the tenant could not discharge without his lord's consent, must follow the land into whose hands ever it comes. Ca. Lit. 22. 23.

Where a man is feoffed of lands grants by deed poll or indenture a yearly rent, to be floating out of the same land, to another in fee, in tail, for life or years, with a clause of diffrefs; this is a rent-charge, because the lands are charged with a diffrefs by the express grant or provision of the parties, which otherwise it would not be. See Allmyn.

So if a man makes a feast in fee, referring rent, and if the rent be void behind, that it shall be lawful for him to disclaim, this is a rent-charge, the word referring amounting to a grant from the feoffor. Lit. feñ. 217. Ca. Lit. 170. a. Plow. 134.

A rent granted for equality of partition by coparceners to another is a rent-charge, and disfainable of common right without clause of diffrefs; and altoso there be no tenure of the fitter who grants it; for as the law for the convenience of coparceners allows of such grants, it must conseqiently give a remedy to the grantee for the recovery of it. Lit. feñ. 252.

A rent-fee is fo called, because it is unprofitable to the grantee, as before feiff he had a life in any rent granted, whether in fee or in fee tail, with any clause of diffrefs; these are rent-fee's; for which, by the policy of the ancient law, there was no remedy, as there was no tenure between the grantor and grantee, or feoffor and feoffee, and consequently no fealty could be due. And it hath been ruled in equity, that where an annuity was devised by will to A, and the land subject to the annuity to B, that B. should give feifin of the rent-fee to A, in order to the recovery of the rent of it at Common law, it being the original intention of the gift, that the devisee should have some benefit from it. Mor. 626. 3 Chan. 92.

So when a bill was brought for 3 for a rent of 5. for twelve years, the equity of the bill being that the deeds by which the rent was created were lost, and consequently no remedy for the rent at law; and the court, upon the plaintiff's proving confiscatory payment till the latt twelve years, decreed the defendant to pay the arrears and growing rent; for since by the payment it was evident the plaintiff had a right to the rent, and that he could not without his deeds make a title at law, therefore the court decreed the defendant to pay the rent, and so subjected his person, which possibly might not have been liable by the deed that created the rent. 1 Chan. 120. Remitttir, or rather remittir, (mentioned in Hat. f. 8, c. 3.) Denying, from the French Renier, negare.

Renter, (from the French Rendre, i. reddere, retirare,) Signifies with us the same thing. For example, this word is used in levying of a fine, which is either free, whereby nothing is granted or renders back again the cause cognize to the cognizor; or double, which conveys a grant or renders back some of rent, common or other thing, out of the land itself, to the cognizor. Rent, (redditus in Latin, from redere, because, as Plato tells us, "Reditus " & quot; quies") Signifies in English, a right of money, or other considerations left, either in possession of the lands, or tenant's. Plowden, fol. 132. 138. 141. Browning's cafe; of which there are three forts, viz. Rent-service, rent-charge and rent-fee. Rent-service is, where a man holds his lands of his lord by fealty and certain rent, or by fealty-service, and certain rent. Lit. lib. 2. cap. 12. Or that by which a man making a lease to another for term of years, referreth yearly to be paid him for them. In the terms of the law, this reason is given for it, because it is at his pleasure either to disclaim, or bring an action of debt. Rent-charge is, where a man makes his essay to another, by deed indented, either in fee, or fee-tail, or for term of years, or other convenient time, for a sum of money yearly to be paid him, with clause of diffrefs for non-payment. See Littleton su fpa. Rent-fee, otherwise a dry rent, is that, which a man making over his essay by deed indented, referreth yearly to be paid him, without clause of diffrefs mentioned in the indenture; and the tenant is at liberty to demand the difference between a rent and an annuity in Dower and Stanton, pag. 30. Dial. prono. Cowell.

Littleton describes a rent-fee to be service where the tenant holdeth his land of his lord by fealty and certain rent, or by other services and certain rent. Lit. fæd. 215. Where these two sorts, either expressed in the lease or contrac, or raised by implication of law. rent or fee-farms shall be due, shall have an action of debt for 6 ch arrears against the tenants that ought to have paid the same or their representatives, against the executors and administrators of the said tenants; and it shall be lawful to every such executor and administrator of any person unto whom any such rent or fee farm is due, to distrain for the arrears against the land charged with the payment, so long as the said lands continue in the possession of the tenant, or his heirs in the nature of a fee, or the tenant ought to have paid the rent or fee-farm, or in the feisin or possession of any other person claiming only from the same tenant by purchase, gift or descent, in like manner as their tesorator might have done.

Sect. 2. This act shall not extend to any such manor or lordship in Wales, whereby the inhabitants have used time out of mind to pay unto every lord of such lordship, &c. at his first entry, any sums of money for the discharge of all duties and penalties wherewith the said inhabitants were chargeable to any of the lord's ancestors or predecessors.

Sect. 3. If any man shall have in the right of his wife, any estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, in any rents or fee-farms, and the same shall be unpaid in the wife's life; the husband after the death of his wife, his executors and administrators, shall have an action of debt for the arrears against the tenant of the demesne that ought to have paid the same, his executors or administrators, and also the husband after the death of his wife may distrain for the arrears, in like manner as if his wife had been living.

Sect. 4. If any shall have any rents or fee-farms for term of life of any other person, and the said rent, &c. shall be unpaid in the life of such person, and after the said person doth die; he unto whom the rent or fee-farm was due, his executors and administrators, shall have an action of debt against the tenant in demesne that ought to have paid the same, his executors or administrators, and also distrain for the same arrears upon such lands out of which the said rents or fee-farms were flowing, in like manner as if such person, by whole death the estate in the said rents and fee-farms was determined, had been in full life.

Sect. 5. Ann. cap. 14. sect. 1. No goods upon any tenements leased shall be taken by any execution, unless the party at whose suit the execution is sued out, shall before the removal of such goods, pay to the landlord of the premises, or his bailiff, all money due for rent for the present and for the arrears do not amount to more than one year's rent, and in case the arrears shall exceed one year's rent, then the party at whose suit, &c. paying the said landlord or his bailiff one year's rent, may proceed to execute his judgment; and the sheriff is required to levy and pay to the plaintiff, as well the money paid for rent, as the execution money.

Sect. 2. In case any lease of tenements, upon the demise whereof any rents shall be referred, shall fraudulently or clandestinely carry off from such premises his goods, with intent to prevent the lessor from distraining; it shall be lawful for such lessor, or any person by him empowered, within five days next ensuing such carrying off, to repair to the premises whereon such goods shall be found, as a distrain for the said arrears of rent; and the same to sell or dispose of, as if the goods had been distrained upon such premises.

Sect. 3. Nothing in this act shall impower such lessor to seize any goods as a distrain for rent, which shall be bona fide sold, and for a valuable consideration, before such tenant's default.

Sect. 4. It shall be lawful for any person, having rent due upon any lease for life, to bring an action for such arrears, as upon a lease for years.

Sect. 5. All distrains hereby impowered to be made, shall be made to such fates, and in such manner, as by a Writ & Order of the Court of Chancery are prescribed.

Sect. 6. It shall be lawful for any person having rent due upon any lease for life, for years, or at will, determined, to distrain such arrears, after the determination of the lease.

Sett. 6. In cafe any leafe shall be surrendered in order to be renewed, and a new leafe executed by the chief landlord, the new leafe shall, without a surrenderer of the leafe upon the first day of this present or any other, or shall be hereafter created, as in cafe of rent referred upon lease.

Sett. 7. Nothing in this act shall extend to Scotland. Stat. 11 Geo. 2, cap. 10. [See the first nine sections of this act under tile Diftrefs] sect. 10. It shall be lawful for any person lawfully taking any Distress for rent, to impound or secure the distress on such part of the premises, as shall be sufficient to pay the rent, or the half yearly rent, and to appraise, fell and dispose of the same upon the premises, as any person may now do off the premises, by virtue of 2 Will. & Mar. stat. 1. cap. 5. or of 4 Geo. 2. cap. 28. And it shall be lawful for any person to come and go to and from such part of the premises, to view, appraise and buy, and also to carry off the same on account of the purchaser; and if any pound-breath or recus be made of goods disinfained for rent secured by virtue of this act, the person aggrieved shall have like remedy as in cafes of pound-breath or recus by the said statute.

Sett. 14. It shall be lawful for the landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the tenements occupied by the defendants, in an action on the caufe for the use and occupation of what was held; and if in evidence on the trial any parol deed, or any agreement not by deed, whereon a certain rent was referred, shall appear, the plaintiff may make the same thereof as an evidence of the quantum of the damages.

Sett. 15. Where any tenant for life shall die before or on the day, on which any rent was referred upon any demise which determined on the death of such tenant for life, the executors or administrators of such tenant for life may in an action on the caufe, recover of the under-tenants, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole, or if before such a day, then a proportion, of such rent, according to the time such tenant for life lived of the last year or quarter, or other time, in which the said rent was growing during making all just allowances.

Sett. 16. If any tenant holding tenements at a rack-rent, or where the rent referred shall be full three fourths of the yearly value of the premises, who shall be in arrear for one year's rent, shall defeat the premises, and leave the same uncultivated or unoccupied, and shall not be able to make a second view; and if upon such second view the tenant, or some person on his behalf, shall not appear and pay the rent in arrear, or there shall not be sufficient distresses upon the premises, the justices may put the landlord in possession, and the lease to such tenants, as to any demise therein contained only, shall become void.

Sett. 18. In case any tenant shall give notice of his intention to quit the premises, and shall not accordingly deliver up the possession at the time in such notice contained, the said tenant, his executors or administrators, shall pay to the landlord double the rent which he should otherwise have paid.

Sett. 20. [See sect. 19. under tit. Distrefs] Provided that no tenant shall recover for such irregularity aforesaid, if tender of amendments hath been made by the party disclaiming, or his agents, before action brought.

Sett. 21. In actions of trespas, or upon the case, brought against persons intitled to rents or services, their bailiffs or receivers, or other persons, or for any distress or action upon the premises chargeable with such rents or services, or to any distress or feizure, sale or disposal, of any goods thereupon, it shall be lawful for the defendants to plead the general issue; and in case the plaintiffs become nonsuit, &c. the defendant shall recover double costs.

By plat. 1, 7 Geo. 2. c. 16. a tenant may be prejudiced by payment of rent to a grantor before notice of the grant. And by plat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 52. sect. 42. Arrears of rent due from farmers of revenue are excepted out of the general pardon.

2. Of recovering and demanding rent, and in what cases a demand is necessary.

Here the material difference is between a remedy by re-entry, and a remedy by distress, for the non-payment of the rent; for where the remedy is by way of re-entry for non-payment, there must be an actual demand made previous to the entry, otherwise it is peremptory; because such condition of re-entry is in derogation of the grant, and the eftate at law being once defeated is not to be restored by any subsequent payment; and it is presumed that the tenant is there refusing on the premises in order to pay the rent for the possession of his estate, unless the contrary appears from the tenant's bitterness to the landlord, and therefore unless there be a demand made, and the tenant thereby, contrary to the presumption, appears not to be on the land ready to pay the rent, the law will not give the lessor the benefit of re-entry, to defeat the tenant's eftate, without a wilful default in him; which cannot appear without: a demand hath been actually made on the land. Ca. Lit. 201. 6. Hob. 207, 331. 5 Co. 56. Dyer 51. Plow. 70. 7 Co. 56. Mandin's cafe, Vough. 32.

So if there had been a numine pane given to the lessor for non-payment, the lessor must demand the rent before he can be suffered to make the penalty, or if the clause had been, that if the rent were behind, that the eftate of the lessee should cease, and be voided; in these cases there must be an actual demand made, because the presumption is, that the lessee is attendant on the land to save his penalty and preserve his estate, and therefore shall not be punished without a wilful default; and that cannot be made appear without a demand be proved, and that was not answered; and the demand in these cases must be made at the day prefixed for the payment, and alleged expressly to have been made in the pleading. Hutt. 114. Hob. 207, 337. 7 Co. 56.

But where the cause of recovery of the rent is by distress, there needs no demand previous to the distress: for he the deed says that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, that the lessor may disclaim; but the lessor, notwithstanding such clause may disclaim when the rent becomes due. So it is, if a rent-chARGE be granted to A, and if it be behind, being lawfully demanded, that then A. shall distrain; he may distrain without any previous demand, because this remedy is not in destruction of the estate, for the defendant is not a pledge for the payment of it, and the very taking of the disfrets is a legal demand of the tenant to pay the rent, which was all that was required by the deed; and the tenant is not injured by the taking of the disfrets, because upon the tender of the rent the pledges are immediately to be reflected at the defendant's choice. After the rent has been forfeited in a replevin; whereas in the case of re-entry or of the penalty, the tenant is really injured either by the loss of his estate, or the payment of a greater sum than the rent, which cannot be restored upon the payment of the rent; and therefore he shall not be punished in this way, unless it should happen, which cannot otherwise appear than by the proof of a demand, which was not suffered by the tenant.
Ren

But this general diffusion must be understood with those restrictions.

Fifth. That if the King makes a lease, rendering rent, and if the rent be arrear and be demanded, that it should be lawful for the prebend to re-enter; if the reversion in the case comes to the King, the King must in this case demand the rent, though he be by his prerogative excused of an implied demand; for the implied demand is the act of the law, the other the express agreement of the parties, which the King's prerogative shall not defeat; therefore in case of the King, if he makes a lease, rendering rent, with a proviso, that if the rent be in arrear, the King must in this case demand the rent, though he be by his prerogative excused of an implied demand, it appears that the King himself, whilst he continues the reversion in his own hands, is obliged to make an actual demand by reason of the express agreement for that purpose.

Secondly. Another exception is, where the rent is payable off the land, without a clause that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded at the place of the land, or where the clause is, that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded of the person that is to pay it, that then he may distrain; in such cases, though the remedy be by disfrets only, yet the grantee cannot distrain without a previous demand, because here the disfrets and demand are not complected, but different acts, to be performed at different places and times, the demand must be previous to the disfrets; for the disfrets is an act of grace, and not of common right, and therefore must be used in the manner that it is given.

But where the clause is no more than that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, (without paying at any place off the land, or of the person of the grantor) then that the grantee may distrain; there needs no actual demand, because here the disfrets and demand is but one complected act, the one included in the other, and all done at one time and place, viz. upon the land; for the disfrets is in itself a lawful demand, and therefore needs no previous to it, because all that was required by the deed was a lawful demand, which the disfrets in its own nature is.

2 Rol. Abr. 446. Hob. 268, and see Dy. 438.

And there seems to have been formerly another exception admitted, that where the remedy was by way of debt for non-payment, that yet there needed no demand, if the tenant could not pay at any time of the land; because they looked upon the money payable off the land to be in nature of a sum in gross, which the tenant had at his own peril undertaken to pay; but this opinion has been entirely exploded, for the place of payment does not change or alter the nature of the service, but it remains a debt for the same sum as if it had been made payable upon the land; and therefore appears that the tenant was there to pay it, unless it be overthrown by the proof of a demand, and without such demand, and a neglecf or refusai therupon, there is no injury to the leflee, and consequently the estate of the leflee ought not to be deprived. Plow. 70. 4Co. 73. Mor. 408, 598. Ch. Eliz. 445, 451, 453, 457.

But when the power of re-entry is given to the leflee for non-payment, without any further demand, there it seems that the leflee has undertaken to pay it, whether it be demanded or not; and there can be no preumption of his power in his favour in this case; because, by dispensing with the demand, he could put him self under the necessity of making an actual proof that he was ready to tender and pay the rent.

Dy. 68.

There is another exception when the remedy is by dis-

frets, and that is, when the tenant was ready on the land to pay the rent at the day, and made a tender of it; there it seems there must be a demand previous to the disfrets, because where the tenant has flown himself ready on the day by the tender, he has done all that in reason can be required of him; for it would put the tenant to endless trouble to oblige him every day to make a tender; it being altogether uncertain when the leflee will come for his rent, when he has omitted to receive it the day which he himself has appointed by the lease for payment and receipt; wherefore as the leflee must expect the leflee, and he must be ready to pay it at the day appointed for the payment of it, or else the leflee may distrain for it without any demand; for where the leflee has lapsed the day of payment, and was not on the land to receive it, he must give the tenant more time before he can distrain for it; for the tenant shall be put into no trouble when it appears that he has omitted nothing on his part.

Hob. 207. 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

And where the tender was made by the tenant on the land at the day, there a demand on the land is sufficient cient after the day, because the demand in such case is of equal notoriety with the tender, and a parity of reason the tenant ought to take notice of such demand, as well as the leflee of the tender on the land.

Hob. 207.

But if the tenant had tendered the rent on the day to the perfon of the leflee, and he refused it, if it seems by the better reason, the leflee cannot distrain for that rent, without a demand of the tenant, because the demand ought to be equally notoriety to the tenant, as the tender was to the leflee.

Hob. 207. 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

So if the services by which the tenant holds be perfoon, homage, fealty, &c. the demand must be of the perfon of the tenant, because this is only performable by the very perfon of the tenant; and therefore a demand, where he is not, would be improper.

Again, if the rent be feck, and the tenant be ready at the half inlant of the day of payment to pay the rent, and the leflee there to receive it, he must afterwards demand it of the perfon of the tenant on the lands before he can have his affise; because the tenant, by the tender at the day, has done all that was required on his part; and if the grantee might have his affise, after such tender on the day, without a demand of the, person, the tenant might be made a defifter, and damages for the default laid upon him, without any wilful default in him; but in the case of a rent-charge, after such tender of the tenant on the land, the grantee may afterwards demand the rent on the land, because he has his remedy by diftreff, which is no more than a pledge for the rent; and this being to be found and taken of the land, the grantee need only demand his rent where he can find his remedy, which is on the land; but in this case, if the grantee cannot find the tenant on the land to demand the rent, he may, on the next feast on which the rent is payable, demand all the arrears on the land; and if the tenant is not there to pay it, he has failed of his duty, and is guilty of a wilful default, which amounts to a denial; and that denial being a defeafion of the rent, the grantee may have his aflife, and by that aflife recover all the arrears. Cor. Cas. 508. 7 G. 57. 1670. 2 Red. Abr. 437.

But if there has been neither a tender of the rent, nor a demand of the grantee on the day, then the grantee may afterwards demand the rent on the land; because the tenant having omitted to do his duty by a tender on the day, he is till obliged to answer the legal demands of the grantee, which is well made upon the land, because demand by the leflee, tender on the day of payment, the rent is due and payable every day afterwards; and therefore a demand in the same manner as the law requires is sufficient; and consequently the non-payment, after a demand on the land, is a denial and defeafion, for which the grantee may have his remedy as according to law.

If a lease be made referring rent, and a bond given for performance of covenants and payment of the rent, the leflee may sue the bond without demanding the rent; for the bond being only a collateral security for the rent, makes no alteration in the nature of it; but it must still be paid in the same manner, and at the same time and place, as if there had been no bond given; and therefore is subject to the former rules and distinctions as to the demand. Cor. Eliz. 33. Cor. Cas. 76. 1670. 8.

If there be several things demifed in one lease, with several refervations, with a clause, that, if the several yearly rents referred be behind or unpaid in part, or in all, by the space of one month after any of the days on which the same ought to be paid, then that it shall be lawful for the leflee, into fuch of the premises, whereupon such rents being behind or are referred, to re-enter; these are in the nature of diftinct demifes, and several refervations; and consequently there must be different remedies to defeat the whole entail demifed. Vaughan 71, 72.

Also as to the necessity of a demand of the rent, there is a difference between a condition and a limitation; for instance, if tenant for life (as the cafe was by marriage settlement with power to make lease for twenty-one years, so long as the leflee's executors or assign(s) shall duly pay the rent referred) makes a lease pursuant to the power; the tenant is at his peril obliged to pay the rent without any demand of the leflee; because the estate is limited to continue only fo long as the rent is paid; and therefore for the non-performance according to the limitation makes no demand without a tender made to a woman dura/fae fuerit, this is a word of limitation which determines her estate upon her marriage. Vaughan 31, 39. Triftram v. Countess of Baltinglas.

Note: It seems the better way for the leflee to have a clause of re-entry for non-payment of the rent, than a clause that the lease shall be void for non-payment; becaufe if the rent be behind, and the non-payment by the leflee does not avoid the lease; becaufe there must be an actual entry to determine it, to which, as it is said, there must be an actual demand precedent; fo that in this cafe an actual demand does not determine the lease, but only puts it in the power of the leflee to recover it, if the rent be behind the day and ten days after, and for, he may either recover the rent by action of debt, and suffer the lease to continue; or after such actual demand he may by entry defeat it. But if the clause be, that for non-payment the lease shall be void, then if the leflee should undeviety make an actual demand of the rent, and the leflee not be able at that time to pay it, he has thereby actually determined the lease; because there is no re-entry previously to determine an estate already void in itself. Yet even in this case, if the leflee forbeard to make an actual demand when the rent is in arrear, he may recover it by action of debt or diftreff, and to continue the lease, becaufe these remedies, being not in defafture of the grant, the leflee may pursue without an actual demand; but this observation is to be intended only of a lease for years; for in a lease for life, no demand can determine it without actual entry, though the clause there, that for non-payment of the rent the lease shall cease, and be void. Hob. 331. 2 Red. Abr. 439. 2 Med. 264. 3 Ca. 64. Pembatt's cafe.

One makes a lease for years, rendering rent, payable at the two moft usual feasts in the year, or within a month after each of the said feasts, with a proviso, that if the rent be arrear by the space of a month after either of the said days (being demanded in due form) that then the lease shall be void. If the leflee does not pay the rent at the feast-day, but sometime after within the month makes a tender of it at the place and time as aforesaid, if this be refused, the leflee may by entry on the last infant of the last day of the month; but it seems not, because the leflee might have been there on the last infant of that day to have demanded it, and then for non-payment the lease will be void, and consequently such tender before the last infant cannot save it. Dyer 8, 233. 3. 228. 272.

Nicholls prayed the opinion of the court in this case; leflee of tithes (without any barn or foil) rendering rent, with a proviso, that if the rent be not paid, that the leflee should be void, whether the leflee should be obliged to seek the lessee, and demand the rent of him, or that the leflee ought to seek the leflee? And it was held, that the leflee ought to seek the leflee. But it was said, that the lease was ruled before that time, for he that needs, must blow the coals, and at the peril of the leflee the rent must be paid, otherwise the leflee is gone. Nor 145.

3. Of the time of demanding rent, and the place where the demand is to be made.

The time for payment of rent, and consequently for a demand, is such a convenient time before the fun-fetting of the laft day, as will be sufficient to have the money counted; but if the tenant meet the leflee on the land at any time after the fourth day, and tender the rent, that is sufficient tender, because the money is to be paid indefiinitely on that day, and therefore a tender on the day is sufficient. Cor. Lit. 202, a. Dalj. 44. Sav. 253. 4 Lem. 171. 1 Saund. 287.

If a lease is made, rendering rent at Michaelmas between the house of Ellen and five in the plain certain, with a clause of re-entry, and the leflee comes at the day about two in the afternoon, and continues to five, this is sufficient. Cor. Eliz. 15. Ld. Cromwell v. Andrews. The demand may be by attorney. 4 Lem. 479. But the power must be special, for such land and of such tenant. Tull. 37. 11. 30. 30. for when the rent is reserved, upon condition that if it be behind, that the lessee may re-enter, in such case the demand must be upon the most notiuous place upon the land; and therefore if there be a house upon the land, the demand must be at the fore-door thereof, because the tenant is presumed to be there residing, and the demand being required to give notice to the tenant that he may not be turned out of possession without a willful default, for it is no matter to him in the place where the end and intention will be best answered. Co. Lit. 153. 201.
2 Rol. Adr. 428.

And it seems the better opinion, that it is not necessary to enter the house, though the doors be open, because there is a place appropriated for the lawful use of the tenant herein, which no person is permitted to enter without his permission, and it is reasonable that the lessee shall go no further to demand his rent, than the tenant shall be obliged to go, when he is bound to tender it; and a tender by the tenant at the door of the house of the lessee is sufficient, though it be open, without entering; and therefore by a reason of a demand by the lessee at the door of the tenant, without entering, is sufficient. Dalst. 59. Co. Lit. 201. 1 And.
27. 3 Leon. 4. and see Cro. Elia. 15.

But when the demand is only in order for a disaffrfs, there it is sufficient, if it be made on any notious part of the land, because that is only to inform him to his repair of his rent, and therefore the whole land being equally the debtor, and chargeable with the rent, a demand upon it, without going to any particular part of it, is sufficient. Co. Lit. 153.

If a wood be let, referring rent, the demand ought to be made at the gate, or some highway leading through the wood, as the most notious place. Co. Lit. 202.

If a rent-foek be granted out of A. payable at B. the grantee may demand it at A. and if the tenant be not there to pay it, it is a disaffrt, for which the grantee may have his affrt, and a demand at B. had likewise been good, because that, by the express appointment and agreement of the parties, was the place where the rent was made payable. Band. 59. Cro. Elia. 324. 11 Car. 507.

But a demand of the person of the tenant is not suf-cicient off the land, because the demand is required to be made in order to an immediate payment; but no peron is presumed to carry his wealth in a place, but it is reasonably supposed he will be in his place of habitation, or upon the occurrence he is gathered, and therefore the demand of the person off the land being not sufficient to answer the intention of the demand, is useless and insignificant.

If the King makes a lease referring rent, the tenant must pay it without demand, as is laid, either to his receiver for that purpose, or at the receipt of the Exchequer, as well as if by the words of the lease the rent had been made payable at his Exchequer, or into the hands of his receiver; but if the King grants the reverson, the patentee must demand the rent upon the land, because that is the place appointed by law, for the reasons already given, for common reason to demand the rent. 4 Co.

If a rent be reserved payable, at the charge of S. or D. upon condition, it ought to be demanded at both places, because the lessee hath his election to pay it at either place; and therefore to take advantage of the condition, the lesse must demand in each places where by his renunciation he has permitted the tenant to pay it.
A Rol. Adr. 428.

So it had been referred to be paid at or in the church of D. it ought for the same reason to be demanded both within and without the church. 2 Rol. Adr. 428.

If a lease be made of two barns, rent demanded thereon, with condition of re-entry for non-payment, the lessee tenders the rent at one barn, and the lessee demands it at the other, yet the lessee cannot re-enter, because one barn being as notious, and consequently as proper a place as the other for the payment, 'tis presumed that the lessee was at the proper place for payments, unless that profusion be overthrown by a demand; and therefore since the demand was not made at both the barns, there is nothing to destroy the presumption that the tenant was at the proper place ready to pay to the condition; and if the lessee did not demand it at the proper place, he shall not take advantage of the condition. Dyer 239.

2. Of the different kinds of replevins; out of what courts they issue, and of the power and duty of the sheriff.
Replevin may be made either by original writ of replevin at Common law, or by plaint by the flat of Mart, By this flat, enacted 2 Ed. 5, it is provided, "That if the beasts of any person be taken, and wrongfully withheld, the sheriff, after complaint made to him thereof, may deliver them without let or gainfaying of him that took the beasts, if they were taken out of liberties; and if the beasts were taken within any liberties, and the balliff of the liberty will not deliver them, then the sheriff for default of these bailiffs shall cause them to be delivered."
The milchies before this act were the great delay and lofs the party was at by having his beasts or goods withheld from him; as also that cattle, when and how distrained and whether with or without any liberty that had since return of writ, the sheriff was obliged to make a warrant to the bailiff of the liberty to make deliverance; and there was another milchiff when the diftreff was taken without and impounded within the liberty. 2 Iftf. 139. 13 Ca. 31.
To remedy which,
By this statute the sheriff, upon plaint made unto him without writ, may either by parol or precept command his bailiff to deliver the beasts or goods, that is, to make replevin of them, and by these words (posl querimiam f&i fafi) the sheriff may take a plaintiff out of the county court, and make a replevin precinctly, which he is to enter in the court, as it would be inconvenient, and against the feeling of the court, and the owner, for whose benefit the statute was made, should tyrify for his bafliff till the next county court, which is holden from month to month.
And by this act the sheriff may hold plea in the county court on replevin by plaint, though the value be of 20 l. or above; and yet in other actions he shall hold plea where the matter is under 40 l. value. 2 Iftf. 139.

Replevins by plaint are made by the sheriff by force of the above-mentioned statute of Marl. by which he is directed, upon complaint made to him by the party that his goods or cattle are distrained, to command his bailiff (which may be by parol or precept) to make deliverance; and which plaint may be taken at any time, by parol complaint out of court. Corb. 380.

And where therefore in trespas for taking, &c. the defendant saith, this is the place where, &c. was a hundred, and time out of mind had a court of all actions, jur, &c. The question was, If good or not? And the reason of the doubt was, because the county court could not hold plea in replevin at Common law; but were enabled by the statute of Marlebrige, which extends not to the hundred court, which is a court derived out of the county court; but per cur. clearly, Supposing they

The sheriff is obliged to grant replevins in all such superior courts, and punishable by attachment for such misbehaviour. Corb. 381.

And though the sheriff may grant replevins by plaint, and may proceed thereon in his county court, yet if any ting touching his freehold come in question, or any thing demand not be pleaded, the sheriff can proceed no further;

4.

And for the great case in bringing replevins, and as a duty incumbent on the sheriff, it is enacted, by the 12th and 2dof Ph. & Mar. cap. 18. "That the sheriff shall at his first county day, or within two months after he receives the patent, depute and proclaim in the same town four deputies to make replevins, not dwelling 12 miles distant from one another, in pain to forfeit for every month he wants such deputy or deputies 51. to be dividego between the King and the proctor.

3. Of the pledges in replevin, and the proceedings against them.

When the sheriff makes replevin, he ought to take out two kinds of pledges; plégi de préfenduq, by the Commun law, and plégi de retorn o futuro, by the statute of Weym. 2. cap. 2. by which it is provided, "That bailiffs or bailiffs from thenceforth shall not receive of the plaintiff the pledges for the purifying of the faits, before they make deliverance of the diffires, but also for the
the return of the bealls, if return be awarded; and if the party take pledges otherwise, he shall answer for the price of the bealls, and the lord that disfains shall have his recovery by writ, that he shall restore to him so many bealls or cattle; and if the plaintiff be not able to restore, his superior shall restore.

In the conclusion hereof the following cases have been tried, and the opinions holden:

That if the sheriff returns insufficient pledges, he shall answer according to the statute; for insufficient pledges are no pledges in law; and such pledges must not only be sufficient in estate, viz. capable to answer in value, but likewise sufficient in capacity; and therefore insufficiency, false-coverts, persons outlawed, &c. are not to be taken as pledges, nor are persons politic, or bodies corporate.

2dly. If taken by the sheriff, conditioned that if C. B. appear at the next county court, and prosecute with effect for taking, &c. and make return, &c. if return be adjudged, and save harmles for the sheriff, &c. and then, &c. the defendant after oyer pleaded, that at the next county court, return &c. for, he did return, and whereas the same was not moved by recordari, nor did false harms for the sheriff, but doth not say, that no return. baland was adjudged; and upon demurrer the court inclined for the plaintiff; for the defendant should have said, that no return was adjudged at all; and though he prosecuted to the recordari, yet return baland might be made return, &c. and the condition goes to any adjudication of the court.

Upon the return a bond was sued in the sheriff's court in London, and pledges were found de return baland. 1st. If this plaintiff remove according to their Suffolk into the mayor's court, and after into the King's Bench by certiorari, and there oyer of the certiorari being demanded, the party declared in B. R. upon this a return was awarded, and upon an etnagel returned a feire facias went against the pledges in the sheriff's court of London. Upon a demurrer the question was, whether the same be discharged by certiorari; the pledges in the inferior court are discharged, or whether they remain liable to be charged by this feire facias? The court were inclined to be of opinion, that the pledges are not discharged, for the mischief that might ensue; for then the plaintiff might bring a certiorari, and the defendant would lose his pledges; and on the other side, they doubted whether the principal be in court but at his pleasure, and that he is not demandable, and cannot be non-suited; but afterwards at another day it was adjudged, that the pledges were not discharged. 3d. If in the case the plaintiff declared, that he disfavored for 7 l. 10s. rent, referred on a lessee, and that the defendant delivered the cattle without taking pledges; to which the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff in the replie deliv- ered to him 3l. 10s. for pledges, which he accepted; and on demurrer the court held, that pledges being to be discharged by certiorari; the pledges in the inferior court are discharged, or whether they remain liable to be charged by this feire facias? The court were inclined to be of opinion, that the pledges are not discharged, for the mischief that might ensue; for then the plaintiff might bring a certiorari, and the defendant would lose his pledges; and on the other side, they doubted whether the principal be in court but at his pleasure, and that he is not demandable, and cannot be non-suited; but afterwards at another day it was adjudged, that the pledges were not discharged.

In an action was brought upon a bond in replevin to pro- fect his suit with effect, and also to make return, &c. the defendant pleaded, that E. G. did levy a plain in replevin in the court first before the reward of Wyfemister, and that afterwards, and before the suit was determined, viz. on such a day, &c. E. G. died, per quod the suit abated; the plaintiff replied, quod kern &c. remit, that E. G. levied such a plaint against the Defendant, who immediately afterwiser exhibited an English bill in the Exche- quer against the plaintif in that suit, and by injunction hindered the proceedings below until such a day, &c. on which the said E. G. died; so that he did not prosecute his suit with effect; and upon demurrer to this replication the defendant had judgment; for per Holt, Ch. J. this was a prosecution with effect, because there was neither a nonsuit or a recovery against E. G. Carth. 519. Duke of Ormond v. Birley.

There are two sorts of pledges, pliego de proueques, and pliego de return baland; the pledges of prosecuting were at Common law, but the return baland were appointed by Wyfemister, &c. by which statute an ac- tion lies against the sheriff, if he omits to take pledges, or if he takes those that are insufficient; for the party may have a feire facias against the pledges, where the suit is in any court of record; and though in the county court, a feire facias will not lie against the pledges, because the sheriff has the power of taking false facias ought to be grounded on a record, yet there the party may have a preceopt in nature of a feire facias against the pledges. 1. As to the first the court held, that the party disclaiming has by the statute of Wyfemister 2. an interest in the pledges, and if the sheriff omits to take such, or which is the same thing, takes insufficient ones, he is aggrieved, and conse- quently intitled to his action. adly. If in replevin in an inferior court, the condition of the bond is, if he prosecute his suit commenced with effect in the court of record; and so the suit is suspended until the return be adjudged by law, and it happens, that the plaintiff hath judgment in the court below, which is afterwised reversed on a writ of error in B. R. in such cafe, unless the party makes a return, he forfeits his bond; for though he had judgment in the court below, yet the wrong of irreparable injury is done, and cannot be extended to the prosecution of the writ of error, which is part of the suit commenced in the county below; in this cafe, the taking such bond was held to be lawful, and paid to be common practice. Carkth. 428. 1 Show. 450. S. C. Chapman v. Rutter, 153.

In debt in replevin, if taken by the sheriff, he shall answer for the suit, and make return, &c. for the plaintiff, conditioned that if C. B. appear at the next county court, and prosecute with effect for taking, &c. and make return, &c. if return be adjudged, and save harmles for the sheriff, &c. and then, &c. the defendant after oyer pleaded, that at the next county court, return &c. for, he did return, and whereas the same was not moved by recordari, nor did false harms for the sheriff, but doth not say, that no return. baland was adjudged; and upon demurrer the court inclined for the plaintiff; for the defendant should have said, that no return was adjudged at all; and though he prosecuted to the recordari, yet return baland might be made return, &c. and the condition goes to any adjudication of the court.

Comb. 238. Lane v. Fout.

An action was brought upon a bond in replevin to pro- fect his suit with effect, and also to make return, &c. the defendant pleaded, that E. G. did levy a plain in replevin in the court first before the reward of Wyfemister, and that afterwards, and before the suit was determined, viz. on such a day, &c. E. G. died, per quod the suit abated; the plaintiff replied, quod kern &c. remit, that E. G. levied such a plaint against the Defendant, who immediately afterwards exhibited an English bill in the Exche- quer against the plaintif in that suit, and by injunction hindered the proceedings below until such a day, &c. on which the said E. G. died; so that he did not prosecute his suit with effect; and upon demurrer to this replication the defendant had judgment; for per Holt, Ch. J. this was a prosecution with effect, because there was neither a nonsuit or a recovery against E. G. Carth. 519. Duke of Ormond v. Birley.

In an action upon a replevin bond common bail shall be filed. 1. Salt, 99.

There are two sorts of pledges, pliego de proueques, and pliego de return baland; the pledges of prosecuting were at Common law, but the return baland were appointed by Wyfemister, &c. by which statute an ac- action lies against the sheriff, if he omits to take pledges, or if he takes those that are insufficient; for the party may have a feire facias against the pledges, where the suit is in any court of record; and though in the county court, a feire facias will not lie against the pledges, because the sheriff has the power of taking false facias ought to be grounded on a record, yet there the party may have a preceopt in nature of a feire facias against the pledges. 1. Lydm, 278. per Holt, Ch. J. See Comb. 1, 2. Cum. 593.

An action on the cafe was brought against a sheriff for taking insufficient pledges upon a replevin; to which he pleaded not guilty, and a verdict being found against him, and judgment given thereupon in the Court of B. R. it was objected, first, That an action on the cafe was not the proper remedy; adly. Supposing such action lay, that there ought to have been a feire facias first sued out against the pledges. As to the first the court held, that the party disclaiming has by the statute of Wyfemister 2. an interest in the pledges, and if the sheriff omits to take such, or which is the same thing, takes insufficient ones, he is aggrieved, and conse- quently intitled to his action. adly. That a feu facias facies may be brought against the pledges, yet it does not follow from thence, that an action does not lie against the sheriff; and such facies facies, which is only to certify the sufficiency of the pledges, is the extra necessarium in the present case, such insufficiency being set forth in the declaration and found by the verdict. Misc. 12 Geo. 2. 2.

And for the greater security of persons disclaiming for rent, it is enacted by Bat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 10. sect. 23.

That sheriffs and other officers having authority to grant replevins, shall in every replevin of a drefs for rent take in their own names, from the plaintiff and two sureties, a bond in double the value of the goods disclaimed.

Of the original writ, and of the Withernam in replevin.

The original writ of replevin issue out of Chancery, and neither it nor the altius replevin are returnable, but are only in nature of a justicia to impower the sheriff to hold plea in his county court, when a day is given the parties; but the altius replevin is always with this clause of a continuance, and it is a returnable process.

F. N. B. 68. 72.

If a pluris replevin be returned in Michaelsmas term, that the defendant claimed property, and after nothing is done, nor any appearance nor continuance till Everith term after, at which term they appeared and pleaded, and judgment was then given, though no continuance was between Michaelsmas and Everith, yet this is not any discontinuance, because there is no any continuance till appearance; for the parties have not any express day in court, and whereas there is no any continuance, there cannot be any discontinuance.

Rede Mor. 485.

The pluris replevin superseded the proceedings of the sheriff, and the proceedings are upon that, and not upon the plaintiff, as they are when that is removed by recordari, and though there be no summons in the writ, yet it gives a good day to the defendant to appear; and if he does not appear, then a nuus illius, and then a capias.

*Rede Ley. c. 157.

Copias and process of outlawry lies in replevin; for when on the pluris repligari facit the sheriff returns avoria elangata, then a copias in Withernam issue, and on that's being returned nullo bona, a copia illius, and so to outlawry. Copias and process of outlawry in replevin were given by 25 Ed. 3. 17. 6 Mod. 84.

If on the pluris replevin the sheriff return, that the cattles claimed to places unknown, sic so that he cannot deliver them to the plaintiff, then shall issue a Wither- nam directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take the cattle or goods of the defendant, and detain them till the cattle or goods disclaimed are referred to the plaintiff; and if upon the first Withernam a nobil be returned, there are copias and outlawry issue, and so to a copias and exequia. F. N. B. 73.

The writ of Withernam ought to rehearse the cause which the sheriff returns, for which he cannot release the cattle or goods; so that it does not lie upon a bare suggestion, that the beasts are elogned, C. F. N. B. 69, 73.

If upon the Withernam the cattle are referred to the party who eloquent them, yet shall pay a fine for his contempt. 2 Lean. 220. Dyer 280, in the margin.

And as the party is to have the use of the cattle, he is not to have any allowance or payment made to him for the expenses he has been at in maintaining them. Quaerum 24 Ed. 3. 103. 2 Leam. 35.

Seire facias against an executor, reciting, that where replevin was brought against his tefator for a cow, and judgment against him de returno habendo, which was not executed, that he should shew cause why he should not have execution. The executor pleads plea administrativi, upon which the defendant demurred, and Hyde justice said, that upon the judgment the cow is in the custody of the law, and therefore he ought to have execution; but the doubt is, because the replevin is determined by the death of the party; yet by him and Rainford, being only in court, the plaintiff shall have execution, for the defendant cannot be prejudiced, for if the sheriff return avoria elangata, and Withernam is not nullo bona, and execution, and therefore the defendant has his ordinary way to charge the defendant, if he hath made a denouement, and it was adjudged for the plaintiff. *Pulch. 27 Car. 2. in B. R. Suckley v. Green.

W. for a replevin, if the writs be removed by recordari into the King's Bench, the plaintiff does not declare, and upon that a return awarded to H. upon which the sheriff returns avoria elangata, and this Withernam was awarded and executed; then the plaintiff does not declare, and now the plaintiff comes and prays he may be admitted to declare, and pray a delivery of the sheriff's tenement, the defendant not being in the court, the sheriff shall have execution, for the defendant cannot be prejudiced, for if the sheriff return avoria elangata, and there shall be execution, and it was adjudged for the plaintiff, F. B. 27.

The plaintiff, taking the writs returned to him, and no delivery, and the suit De propriete probanda.

At the Common, if the plaintiff in the replevin had been nonnullit either before or after verdict, the defendant who disclaimed should have had return, but not of any replevina; so as the plaintiff after nonnullit might have had as many replevins as he would, which was vexatious and mischievous; for remedy whereof the act of Westm. 2 cap. 2. it restrains the plaintiff from any more replevins after nonnullit, but gives a writ of second delivery. 2 Red. 74.

And if in such writ of second delivery the plaintiff be nonnullit, or if the plea be discontinued, or the writ abates, or if he prevails not in his suit, returns irrepleivable shall be granted. 2 Hyde. 341.

If defendant in replevin his return awarded upon nonnullit in replevin, upon which he issues a writ de returno habendo, upon which the sheriff returns avoria elangata per querentem, and upon this a Withernam is awarded, and upon the Withernam the defendant has set est
The writ of de proprieitate proxima is an inquest of office, and the sheriff is to give notice to the parties of the time and place of the executing of it. Dall. 59, 274. If the defendant for the time and place of the writ of de proprieitate proxima; and this by the nature and form of the writ of second delivery. 2 Rol. Abr. 435.

If a returno habendae be awarded to the sheriff after a writ of second delivery prays by the plaintiff, this a fuperfedeas to the returno habendae, and closes the sheriff's hand from making any return therein; and if the plaintiff cannot have a second delivery, the party has his remedy against him. Dyer 41. Dall. Sh. 275.

This statute of Wifum. 2. gives the writ of second delivery out of the same court, where the first replevin was granted, and a man cannot have it elsewhere; for it is the only form which the writ varies from the place limited as to this by the statute. Plead. 206.

In replevin the defendant avowed, that the plaintiff being non-suited brought a writ of second delivery, whereupon it was moved to stay the writ of inquiry of damages; if per curiam, This is a fuperfedeas to the return habendae, but not to the writ of inquiry of damages; for these damages are not for the thing averred for, but are given by the statute of 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. As a compensation for the expense and trouble the assignor has been at. 1 Saft. 95. and like point adjudged, Palm. 493.

Leach 72. A judgment in C.B. in a second delivery, upon demurrer in pleading the error alleged was, because there was not any writ of second delivery certified, and in nullo eli erratum being pleaded, it was moved not to be material, because it is awarded on the roll, and the parties had appeared and pleaded to it; but it was adjudged ill, and reversed for that cause; for there ought to be a writ, and if it vary from the declaration in the replevin, it shall be abated. Cro. Jac. 424. Newm. v. Moor.

No second delivery lies after a judgment upon a demurrer, or after a verdiic, or confession of the assignor, but in all these cases the judgment may be quashed; and upon a nonsuit, either before or after evidence, a second delivery will lie, because there is no determination of the matter, and there a writ of second delivery lies to bring the matter in question; but in the case of a demurrer and verdict the matter is determined by the confession of the party. 2 Litt. 457.

If the plaintiff's writ abates, he may have a new writ, and is not put to his writ of second delivery. Cam. 122.

If the plaintiff in replevin be non-suited for want of delivering a declaration, if it happened through the plaintiff would have invited him to a writ of second delivery, as sickkens of the person employed, &c., the court will order the defendant to accept of a declaration on payment of costs; otherwise the plaintiff would be re-modified, the writ of second delivery being taken away by the 17 Car. 2. 1 Vent. 64. See Above.

If the defendant in replevin claims property, the sheriff cannot proceed; for property must be tried by writ; and in this case the plaintiff may have the writ of de proprieitate proxima to the sheriff, and if it be found for the plaintiff, then the sheriff is to make delivery; if for the defendant, then he is to proceed no further; but in this case an inquest of office, if it be found against the plaintiff, he may have a replevin to the sheriff; and if he return the claim of property, yet shall it proceed in the C.B. where the property shall be put in issue and finally tried. Cro. Lit. 145 b. F. N. B. 77. Dyer 173.

Cam. 592.

Now, but he who is party to the replevin shall have the writ de proprieitate proxima; so that if upon a replevin the beasts of a stranger are delivered to the plaintiff, such stranger being no party to the replevin, shall not have this writ. 14 Hen. 4. 25. 2 Rol. Abr. 431.

The sheriff is to return the claim of property on the ground of which time the writ of de proprieitate proxima does not issue, for it recites the previous title. Reg. 83. Cam. 595.

Vol. II. No. 122.

6. Of the writ de returno habendae; of returns irrepleivable, and in what manner the sheriff is to return and execute such processe.

The returno habendae is a judicial writ, that lies for him who has avowed the diftres, and proved the fame to be lawfully taken; or where, upon the removal of the plaint into the courts above, the plaint, whose cattle were replevened, made default, or does not declare or prosecute his action; and thereby becomes nonsuited, &c., and by this writ the sheriff is commanded to make a return of the cattle to the defendant in the replevin. 35 Hen. 6. 40. Dyer 280. Cro. Lit. 145.

A bill of which makes conuance may have judgment of a return, and consequently a writ de returno habendae grounded on such judgment. Cro. Ent. 59.

The writ de returno habendae is not a returnable processe. 2 Rol. Abr. 433.

If the defendant hath a return aledged to him, and he fether a writ de returno habendae, and the sheriff return upon the plaintiff, qua ilia aliqui dixit fundit, &c., he shall have a false process against the pledge, &c. According to the statute of Wifum. 2. and if they have nothing, then they shall have a Withernam against the plaintiff of the plaintiff's own cattle. F. N. B. 172.

Return irrepleivable is a judicial writ directed to the sheriff for the return of a part of cattle unjustly taken by another, and so found by verdict, or after a nonsuit in a second delivery. 2 Rol. Abr. 434.

7 Q. It
If the plea be to the writ, or any other plea be tried by verdict, or judged upon demurrer, return irrepealable shall be awarded, and no new relevin shall be granted, nor any second delivery, unless by Writ of Hæfion, 2. Hob. 330. or a writ of Mandate, 2. Inf. 250.

If upon issue joined in relevin the plaintiff does not appear on the trial, being called for that purpose, yet return irrepealable shall not be awarded, as in case of a verdict's being given, but the party may have a writ of second delivery, as well as if in a nonuit before declaration or appearance. 1. Leon. 407.

If a man has return irrepealable, and a beast die in the pound, he may distrain a new; so if the beast die before judgment, Hob. 61.

If return irrepealable be awarded, the owner of the cattle may offer the arrestees; and if the defendant re- fuses to releive, the plaintiff may have the delivery, because the distrains is only in nature of a pledge. 1. Leon. 740.

By the statute of Weylin, 1. cap. 17. If the party who distrains, conveys the distrains into any house, park, cattle or other place of strength, and refuses to releive, the sheriff may take the house and, on return, give it with reful useful open such house, cattle, &c. and make delivery; and this was a necessary law so soon after the irregular time of Hæfion. 3. Inf. 193, 5. &c. 93. Dail. Sb. 373.

If the sheriff returns, that the beasts are inclosed in a park among large woods, or concealed in a stable, &c. there is a further writ of relevin shall be awarded; for he ought to have taken the house and, for this was a denial. F. R. B. 257. Hale's notes.

If the sheriff return, quod mandatui nullius libertinat, &c. qui nullum debet miti reperamini, or that the bailiff will not make delivery of the cattle, these are not good returns; for by the said statute of Hæfion. 2. the sheriff upon such return made to him by the bailiff, ought presently to enter into the franchise, and make delivery of the cattle taken. F. R. B. 157.

If a man for a relevin in the county court without writ, and the bailiff return the writ, that he cannot have view of the cattle there delivered, the sheriff by impress of office ought to inquire into the truth thereof, and if it be found by a jury, that the cattle are inclosed, &c. the sheriff in the county court may award a Wethornam to take the defendant's cattle; and if the sheriff will not award a Wethornam, then the plaintiff shall have a writ out of Chancery directed unto the sheriff requiring the writ, and commanding him to award a Wethornam, &c. and he may have an alias, and after a pluries, and an attachment against the sheriff, if he will not execute the King's command. F. R. B. 158.

If the sheriff return, quod averia elongata ad loca in- cognita, this is a good return, and the party must purifie his writ of Wethornam; but if the sheriff return averia elongata ad loca innotitiam infra custitatum munum, he shall be amerced, for the law intends that he may have notice in his county. Bras. Restor. de Br. pl. 100.

If in relevin the sheriff return, quod averia mortua sunt, that is a good return. Bras. Restor. de Br. pl. 125.

It is a good return, quod nullius libertatis &c. quorumvis atque aliorum, but if the sheriff be not obliged to require this. Dail. Sb. 556. Allen 32.

If the sheriff be shewn a stranger's goods, and he takes them, an action of trespass lies against him, for otherwise he could have no remedy; for being a stranger he cannot have the writ &c. proprio specie praebenda, and were he not obliged to require them, it would be an action of the sheriff to strip a man's house of all his goods; but Keris, seems to hold, that the action lies more properly against the person who shews the goods. 2. Relat. 552. Cum. 596.

If the sheriff comes to make relevin of beasts imprisoned in another county, if the place be inclosed, and has a gate open to the inclosure, he cannot break the inclosure, and enter thereby, when he may enter by the open gate; but if the owner hinders him, so that he cannot go by the open gate for fear of death, he may break the inclosure, and enter there; 20. H. 6. 28. 2. Relat. 543.

If the sheriff is to return, that the cattle are inclosed, or that the person cannot deliver, &c. or that he cannot return, that the defendant nec capte the cattle, because it is supped in the writ, and is the ground of it, which the sheriff cannot falsify, 1. Ld. Raym. 613. 1. Laut. 581. See Hune, Dilectis.

Repliation, (Replicatio) is an exception or answer made by the plaintiff in a suit to the defendant's plea: And it is also that which the complainant replies to the defendant's answer in Chancery, &c. Wifl. Symb. par. 2. The replication is to contain certainty, and not vary from the declaration, but must purifie and maintain the same to be the true declaration; otherwise it is an improper answer in pleading, and going to another matter. 1. Inf. 34. Though as a faulty bar may be made good by the replication; so sometimes a replication is made good by a rejoinder; but if it wants subsidence, a rejoinder can never help it. 2. Ld. Ael. 462.

A replication being entire, and ill in part, is ill in the whole: But if there be three replications, and one of them is superfluous, and the other two sufficient, and the defendant demurs generally, the plaintiff may have judgment upon these which are sufficient. 2. Sumand. 71. 5. Sumand. 338. Where the defendant pleads in bar, and the plaintiff replies in his replication, and the defendant demurs specially upon the replication and the bar is insufficient, if the action be such a nature that a title is yet forth in the declaration or count, as in a form. medon, &c. judgment may be given for the plaintiff upon the insufficient bar of the defendant: And where the title doth not appear till forth in the replication, and that is insufficient, there judgment shall be had for the defendant for the ill replication. Galsb. 138. 1. Laut. 75: 3. Nefl. Abr. 133.

If the bar is naught, and the replication likewise, the plaintiff shall never have judgment: So if there is a va- riance between the declaration and the replication, that there is a verida, &c. Hb. 13. Style 359. And replication concludes either with hac parasita &c. voirisirisque, or to the country. In action on a bond to pay all sums expended about a certain business, &c. on the defendant's pleading he paid all; the plaintiff replied, that he had not, &c. hae parasita, &c. Upon a demurrer it was held the plaintiff ought not to have concluded the bar as an affirmative, and negative; and if he be admitted to aver his replication thus, there would be no end in pleading. Raym. 98. But where new matter is offered in a replication, the plaintiff shall aver is pleas, so as to give the defendant an opportunity to rejoine. 4. Med. 205. Laut. 98. See 19. Vin. Abr. 295. 464.

Repons, (Repouns) is a publick relation of cases judi- cially argued, debated, resolved, or adjudged in any of the King's courts of justice, with the causes and reasons of the same delivered by the judges. Co. Litt. 323. Also when the Chancery, or other courts, refer the case to the Court of Chancery, or another court, for computation, &c. as to a Master of Chancery, or other reference, his certificate therein is called a report. Cowell, edit. 1727.

A report by a Master in Chancery, is a judgment of the court. Per. Ld. C. Parker's Winch's Rep. 653. Tinn. 1720. in the case of Burn v. Barkham. By a banding order of the court of Chancery, made 23. Sept. 1687, the law of 4. W. 4. &c. it was directed, 'That all reports should be filed within four days after the making, otherwise no decree or proceeding had thenceupon; but that the register reporting, that it was sufficient if the report were filed before any proceedings had thenceupon, though not done within four days, might be allowed.' And the court took it to be well enough, though in this case the motion to confirm the report was made the same day that the report was filed. 21. Hin's Rep. 517. Elyer (and Traverses of the B. S. Company) v. Ward.

In contrast, the Irish act (1701) was an act whereby certain forest grounds being made part of upon view, were by a second view laid to the forest again. Monmouth, part 1, pag. 178.

Representation, (Representatio) is a perfonifying of another! And there is an heir by representation, whereof the son, a legatee, a devisee, a devisee, who shall inherit his grandfather's estate, before the father's brother, &c. Bro. Abr. 303. Also executors represent the person of the testator, to receive money and goods.

Reprieves, (from the Fr. Repri{se} ) Signifies to take back, or to restore from the execution and disposing of the body of the person, for not complying with the pre{crib}ed for the time.

Every judge that hath power to order any execution, hath power to grant a reprieve; and oftentimes execution is stayed upon condition of transportation. But no proneros convicted of any felony, for which he cannot have his clergy, at the sessions at the Old Bailey for London or Middlesex, &c. ought to be reprieved but in open felony; and reprieves are not to be granted otherwise, without the King's express warrant, not by order of any justice of judicature. Eliz. 4. 2 H. 4. P. C. 463.

When a woman is condemned for treason or felony, and is to be executed, unless she is found by an equerry or a jury, and is not swayed by the sheriff, or by any one of the judges, or the king, execution shall be reprieved, and the woman reprieved till her delivery; though the shall take this favour but once; and the cannot preserve by this means from pleading upon her arraignment, nor from having judgment pronounced against her on her conviction. 3 P. C. 1724. H. 239. Where it is found by a jury of women, that a woman convicted of felony, is with child, some judges have used to command a reprieve of her execution until a convenient time; i.e. a month after her delivery, and then to be executed, but this is irregular; for the may have a pardon to plead, and be reprieved till the next session. 12 Maff. 10. 1 Hall's P. C. 368, 369.

Requi{f{ies} (Requisita,| from the French Repr{is} , i.e. Receipés, vel capitis rei unius in alterius satisfactionem) is the taking of one thing in satisfaction of another, and is all one in the Common and Civil law. Requisita sp\(\text{d}\)es, &c. &c. are granted, not by the decree of a court, but by the will of the party; and the party can have the thing at any time.

This among the ancient Romans was called Claritas, of the verb claro, i.e. clear clarer is represented. It is named in the statute 27 B. 3. stat. 3. cap. 17. Law of marque, because for one defect of justice in another it is just and necessary to the goods belonging to men of that territory, taken within his own bounds, Cawell, edit. 1727. See Marque.

Requi{s}es, is commonly taken for deductions and duties which are yearly paid out of a manor and lands, as rent-charges, rent-fid, perfons, carollas, annuities, fines of finewards, the half-yearly rents, &c. for the reason here above, when we speak of the clear yearly value of a manor, we say it is so much per annum ultra requir{es}, besides all requirs. Cawell, edit. 1777.

Repugnants, (Repugnant) is what is contrary to any thing laid before. 1st. A deed of seoffment of lands to B. with warranty, provis{e} the warranty shall be void, C. provis{e} to the contrary. In a deed a grant to the premisses, is void; for both being in one instrument where the last clause is repugnant to the first, the last is void; but if the provis{e} leaves any benefit of the warranty to the seof{f}{e}e; if so be, that he shall not vacate, was much as it leaves rebutter to him, it is a good pr{e}vise. And the last time, each warranty may be destroyed. 1st. 66. 6. 86.

Where contraries are in several parts of deeds or fines, the first part shall stand; in wills the last, if the several clauses are not reconcilable: so where a manor is devided in the first part of the will to A. in fee, and after in the same will this manor is devis'd to B. in fee, A. and B. in this case are joint tenants; but if in the last clause are non-reconcilable, that A. shall not have it, then the devise to B. only, is good. 1st. 66. 6. 86.

In contrast to the English, evidence, where direct contraries are for the same thing at the same time, all is void. 1st. 66. 6. 86.

A. made B. and C. executors, provided that C. shall not administer his goods, B. and C. brought debt upon a bond as executors. It was held that the action was too general a release within four days after the award; provis{e} that if either of them disliked the award within 20 days after it be made, and should pay to the other within the said 20 days 10s., then that the arbitration shall be void, the provis{e} is repugnant, and judgment for the plaintiff. 1st. 66. 6. 86.

Lies, or Lye, or Lies, or Lyes, or Lyes, (Lies of Magistrats,) Is the lord's receiving homage of his tenant at his admission to the land. Kitchen, f. 148. See Homage.

Murfes or Reus'd, (Reusifius, from the French resfusit, &c. liberatis,) Is a refusal against lawful authority; as if a bailiff, or other officer, upon a writ do arreft a man for the feudal or common nuisance taking his goods, or procuring his escape; this is a resus in fact. So if one drainat beafts for damage scatant, in his ground, as he drives them in the highway towards the pound, they enter into the owner's house, and he with-holds them there, and he will not deliver them upon demand, this detainer is a resus in law. See St. Co. 2. cap. 12. Coffemun in his book De Confertad. Burg. f. 124. hath the same words coupled with resfusitum. It is also used for a writ which lies for this fact called Brece de resusfits, wherefore you may see both the form and use in F. N. B. fal. 101. Reg. of Writs, f. 125. and New Book of Entries, verb. Reusifius. This in some cases, in matters relating to treason, is treafon; and in matters concerning felony, is felony. Cramp. Tafs. fel. 54. Cowell. Reusifus is the taking away and fetting at liberty against law any driffes taken for rent, or services, or damage-fant; but the more general mention of resus is, the forcible freeing another from an arreft or some legal commitment, which being a high offence, subjects the offender not only to an action at the suit of the party injured, but likewise to fine and imprisonment at the suit of the King. Co. Lit. 160. F. N. B. 226.

If a man drainat cattle, and as he is driving them to the pound they go into the owner's house, and he refuses to deliver them, this is a refuse in law. Co. Lit. 161.

But here we must obverse, that there can be no refuse but where the party has had the actual possession of the cattle, or other things whereas the refuse is supposed to be made; for if a man come to arrest another, or to distraint, and is disturbed, regularly his remedy is by action on the cafe. Co. Lit. 161. a. Lit. Rep. 256. Heft. 145.

If upon a fori facius the sheriff fines goods which are taken away by a stranger, this is not properly a refuse; but for the forfeiture of the goods, by virtue of the fori facius, it is not a good return, but he shall maintain trefpas or trover for them; also the party injured may have an action on the cafe against the wrong-doer. Heft. 145. Lit. Rep. 296. Sheriff of Surry v. Alderton.

If upon a fori facius the sheriff returned that he had seized the goods, but that they were rescued by B. and C. &c. this is not a good return, but he shall be arrested; the party also, at whose suit the execution issued, may charge him by fede facius for the value of the goods. 1 Vent. 21. 2 Sound. 343. 1 Chet. 180.

If the lord drainat for rent when none is due, the tenant may lawfully make refuse; so may a stranger, if his goods be drainat when no rent is due. So if the tenant tender the rent when the lord comes to drainat, and yet he does drainat, or if he drainat any thing not drainatible, as beasts of the plough, when other sufficient diffires may be taken, the tenant may make refuse; so may he if the lord drainat in the highway or out of his fee. Co. Lit. 47. 160. b. 164.

But though drainat be for reason for the diffires, and that otherwife the refuse cannot be unlawful; yet it hath been held in a pare fratrila, that the defendant cannot justify breaking the pound, and taking out the cattle, though the diffires was without cause, because they are now in the actual custody of the law. Salt. 247. Conf.-worth v. Belfall.

There is a difference between a man's being arrested by a warrant on record, and by a general authority in law; for if a capias be awarded to the sheriff to arrest a man for felony, though he be innocent, he cannot make refuse; but if a sheriff will by the general authority committed to him by law arrest any man for felony, if he be innocent he may make refuse himself. Co. Lit. 161.

2. Of the form of the proceedings on a refuse.

It seems agreed, that the refusing a person imprisoned for felony, is also felony by the Common law. 1 Hal. Hift. P. C. 606.

Also it is agreed, that a stranger who refuses a person convicted of felony, and refusal of high treafon, knowing him to be so is in all cafes, guilty of felony. See P. C. 11. 1 f. 455. Whether he knew that the prisoners were so committed or not. Cro. Cas. 583.

To make a refuse felony, the following rules are laid down by Lord Chief Justice Hale; 18. That it is necessary that the felony be in custody or under arrest for felony; and therefore if A. hinder an arrest, whereby the felony escapes, the township shall be amerced for the escape, and A. shall be fined for the hindrance of his taking; but it is not felony in A. because the felony was not taken. 1 Hal. Hift. P. C. 606. 3 Ed. 3. Corom. 333.

For refusing to make a refuse felony, the party refused must be under custody for felony or suspicion of felony; and it is all one whether he be in custody for that account by a private person, or by an officer, or warrant of a justice; for where the arrest of a felon is lawful, the refusal of him is felony; but it seems necessaty that he should have knowledge that the person is under arrest for felony.
...but if he be in custody of an officer, as confable or that, where, at his peril, he is to take notice of it; and so if there be felons in a prison, and A. not knowing of it, breaks the prison, and lets out the prisoners, though he knew not that there were felons there, it is felony. 1 Hal. Hjft. P. C. 606. Cro. Car. 583.

A perfon committed for high treason, who breaks the prison, and escapes, is guilty of felony, unless he lets them also escape whom he knows to be committed for high treason; in which case he is guilty of high treason, not in respect of his own breaking of prison, but of the refcues of the others. 2 Hawk. P. C. 140.

If the perfon were indicted or attainted of several felonies, yet the escape or refcure of such a perfon makes but one felony. 1 Hal. Hjft. P. C. 599. Wherever the imprisonment is so far groundless or irregular, or the breaking of a prison is occasioned by such a necessity, Et. that the party himself breaking prison, is either by the Common law, or by the statute De fran- gentibus prifonem, faved from the penalty of a capital of- fend, a franger who refcues him from such imprison- ment is in like manner also excused; &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 139. A return of a refcure of a felon by the fheriff againft A. is not fufficient to put him to anfwer for it as a felony, without indictment or prefentment, by the statute 25 Ed. 2 Hl. Hjft. P. C. 567.

As in cafe of an efcape, so in cafe of a refcure, if the party be imprisoned for felony, and be refcued before indictment, the indictment muft furinate a felony done, as well as an imprisonment for felony or fupfiction thereof; but if the party be indicted, and taken by a fheriff, and refcued, then the damages only a recital that he was wicked praut, and taken and refcued. 1 Hal. P. C. 607.

But though the refcuer may be indicted before the principal be convicted and attainted, yet he shall not be arraigned or tried before the principal be attainted; but if the perfon refcued were imprisoned for high treason, he may then be immediately be arraigned, for that in high treason all are principals; also it feems that he may be immediately proceeded against for a misprision only, if the King pleafes. 2 Hawk. P. C. 140.

The refcuer of a prisoner for felony, though not within in clergy, yet fhall have his clergy. 1 Hal. Hjft. P. C. 607.

By the 6 Gra. 1 cap. 23. fett. 5. it is enabled, that if any perfon fhall refcued felons ordered for transportation, or affift them in making their escape, he fhall be guilty of felony, and fuffer death without benefic of clergy. See also 9 Gra. 1. c. 28.

A perfon refcued by refcuing perfons in cafes of treafon and felony is usually punifhed by indictment, fo the offence of refcuing a perfon arrested on mefne proccfs, or in execution after judgment, subjects the offender to a writ of refcues or a general action of treafon of et armis, or an action on the cafe, in all which damages are recoverable. Also it is the frequent praftice of the courts to grant an attachment againft fuch wrong-doers, it being the highest violence and contempt that can be offered to the procedes of the court. Co. Lit. 161. Co. Ent. 614. Roff. Ext. 577.

He who refcues a prisoner from any of the courts of Wifinifher-Hall without thiking a blow, fhall forfeit his goods and the prefts of his lands, and fuffer imprifonment during life, but not be his hand, because he did not strike. 22 Ed. 2. c. 13. 3 Hljft. 141.

It is clearly agreed, that for a refcues on mefne proccfs the party injured may have either an action of treafon of et armis, or an action on the cafe, in which he fhall recover for the paff of goods, and falfe imprifonment during life; but not be his hand, because he did not strike. 22 Ed. 2. c. 13. 3 Hljft. 141.

By the cafe, the party injured may have either an action of treafon of et armis, or an action on the cafe, in which he fhall recover for the paff of goods, and falfe imprifonment during life, but not be his hand, because he did not strike. 22 Ed. 2. c. 13. 3 Hljft. 141. 2. Of the form of the proceedings on a refcues.

An indictment of a refcues ought to fe forth the special circumftances of the faé, with fuch certainty, as to enable the defendant to make a proper defence. Dyer 164. That no defcent can be aided by the verdift, 1 Ed. Abr. 781.

And therefore, if an indictment lay the offence on an uncertain or impoffible day, as where it lays it on a future day, or lays one and the fame offence at different days, or lays it on fuch a day which makes the indictment repugnant to itfelf, it is void. 3 Mar. 555. Rad. Ext. 263.

Where an indictment of refcues fet forth that J. S. committed fuch a felony, fuch a day, and year and place, per quod A. B. pradidit J. S. capiti et armis, et in fano culfus, ipfius fecus in domibus, et tunc et ibidem exaudi J. S. builitum et cuftodia, it is made a quare, whether the indictment is not impoffible, because no time of the arreft is alleged in the fame fentence with it; and it is doubtful whether the time of the cuftody, which is alleged in the fame fen- tence by force of the copulae, be applied alfo to the arreft; or it was Dyer that refcued rather to incline to the contrary opinion. Dyer 164. pl. 60.

Alfo it is held in Dyer, that an indictment of a refcues is not good without expressly fiewing the day and year both of the arreft and alfo of the refcues, and that the time of the latter is not fufficiently fiewed by fiewing that of the former. Dyer 164.

jurid hath his remedy againft the fheriff, and the fheriff hath his remedy againft the wrong-doer; for perhaps the fheriff may be dead or infolvent; but herein it hath been held, that if he bring his action againft the party who made the refcure, he may plead it in bar to an action brought by the fheriff; fo if againft the fheriff or his bailiff, they may plead that he had fatisfaction from the party, fo that if he recovers against one, the other is difcharged.

By the statute 2 Will. 3. cap. 5. if it is enacted, That upon pound-breath or refcues of goods dif- trained for rent, the perfon grieved fhall in a special action on the cafe recover treble damages and costs a- gainft the offenders, or againft the owners of the goods if they come to his use.

In an action for a refcure, if the cafe for a refcure, upon this flautte it hath been held, that the plaintiff fhall recover treble costs as well as treble damages, for the damages are not given by the flautte but increafed; an action on the cafe lying for a refcure at Common law. 1 Salk. 205.

An attachment will be granted not only against a common perfon, but even againft a peer of the realm, for refcuing a perfon arrested by due course of law; fo that if the fheriff fhall in any cafe return to the court, that a perfon arrested, or goods feized, or poftfession of lands delivered by him, by virtue of the King's writ, were refcued or violently taken from him, &c. they will award an action of attachment againft the refcuers. Dyer 212. 2 Tn. 39. Salk. 322.

But herein it feems to be the praftice of late, not to grant an attachment in any cafe for a refcure, unlefs the officer will return it; for that it hath been found by ex- perience, that officers will take upon them to fwear a refcure where they will not ventures to return one. 2 Hawk. P.C. 153.

In a late cafe, a diftinction was taken where an at- tachment is prayed for a refcure in the firft instance, and where a rule to frow causae is only faked; in this affidavit of the fach are fufficient; in the other cafe the fher- riff's return is requisite. Trin. 5 Gra. 2. in B. R. Young v. Payne.

Salk. 580. Rix v. Belt.
But it has been since adjudged, upon exceptions taken to an indictment for a recusant, that it was not necessary to allege the place where the recuse was made, and that it should be intended that where the arrest was, there also was the recusant. 2 Ld. Cas. 345. 2 Bulst. 228. S. C. Cranlington's cafe.

An exception taken to an indictment of recusants, that it wanted the words vi & armis or mount fortis, but overruled, it being held by the court, that the word reficous implies it to be done by force.

Cra. Jus. 345. The same exception taken in Cra. Jus. 173, overruled, and there held, that though it were error at Common law, yet it is made good by the statute 37 Hen. 8. c. 8.

An exception taken to an indictment of a recusant from a ferrent at masse, who had taken a man on a plaster in Lincoln, because he did not set forth that the person was taken by virtue of an arrest; but being alleged that he was lawfully arrested, it shall be intended by a good warrant. Cra. Jus. 472. Hert's cafe.

It is said, that an indictment of recusants is not within the statute of additions, and that the naming the person indicted of such a parfit, without giving him any title, is sufficient. 2 Lof. 665. 2 Show. 84.

In the above, an exception to his being, if it were upon an arrest upon meyne procels, and the party has appeared, the court will be easily induced to quash it; so if it be on procels out of an inferior court, tho' the party has not appeared, for no aid is given to inferior jurisdiction.

In an action for a recusant the plaintiff must allege in his declaration all the material circumstances; as that such a writ issued, that he was arrested, and in custody, and that he was recusant, &c. Godh. 175. 1 Lue. 120.

In an action on the cafe for a recusant on meyne procels, the evidence was, the bailiff flowed at the street door, and sent his follower up three pair of stairs in dialogue with the warrant, who laid hands on the party, and told him that he arrested him; but he with the help of some women got from the follower, and ran down stairs, and the defendant hearing a noise ran up, and put the party into a room, locked the door, and would not suffer the bailiff to enter. Holt Ch. J. doubted whether this was a lawful arrest, being by the bailiff's servant, and not in his presence; but said, that the plaintiff must prove his cause of action against the party; that he must prove the writ and warrant by producing sworn copies of them; he must prove the manner of the arrest, that it may appear to the court to be legal, and in point of damage he must prove the loss of his debts, viz. that the plaintiff was innocent, and could not be retaken. 6 Mod. 211. Wilcon & Gaty.

In what cafes the flirriss may return a recusant; of the form of the return, and for what defects it may be quashed.

The diffinition herein laid down in variety of books and cafes is, that on a recusant on meyne procels the flirriss may return the recusant, and is subject to no action; for this on a meyne procels he was not obliged to raile his paffe comites, nor would it be convenient so to do on the execution of every meyne procels. Cra. Eliz. 868. 1 March 4. 1 Jov. 201. 3 Baff. 198. 12 Rec. Rep. 260. 2 Lue. 140. 14 Lue. 130, 131. But the flirriss may, if he pleases, take his paffe to arrest one on meyne procels. Noy 40.

But if the flirriss takes a man upon an execution, as upon a capias ad satisfaciendum, and he is recusant from him before he can bring him to prison, tho' he returns the recusant, yet this still not excepted that he has delivered the body, but he and his do not furrender him, nor pay the condemnation money, and then a capias infites, to which there can be no bail, there is presumed that he will not be forth-coming, because neither he nor his bail have satisfied the judgment; and therefore the flirriss ought to take the paffe comites; and consequently it comes within the rule that he takes the body, but that the paffe is returned; and the party may have an action of escape against the flirriss upon this return; and this is provided by the statute Wylm. 2. rep. 39. which was made to pre-
But Vent. Upon See as Ven. for where the truth is that he was rescued always concludes, that after the rescues made the defendant so oft invent in bullion. 6 Med. 120. Rex v. Wesley.

The return of a rescue was, that the party was in candle of three of the bullions, and that the defendant bullion descended upon one, which the thief called bullion, and for that reason it was qualified. 5 Med. 118.

It had been a great question, and much debated in various cases, whether upon a rescue of a person out of the candle of a thief's bullion, the thief is to return the rescue secundum veritatem facti, or secundum veritatem in lego, that is, that he was rescued out of the candle of the bullion, or out of his own candle being true in law; the bullion's candle being in law the candle of the thief himself; and it seems now agreed that a return either way is good; and herein some books differ.

Where the return of a rescuer was, that for the first in the suit must declare as the truth is, viz. that he was rescued being in the candle of the bullion; but in an indemnity it must be according to the operation in law. 2 Rol. Rep. 263. Hil. 417. 1 Lev. 214. Cuf. Fac. 242. Raym. 161. 5 Med. 217.

And where the thief returned virtute breuis nihil direct: vestiurante A. & B. bullium nisi qui virtute referens suspenderet the defendant, & in cufumia mua habuerunt quaeque sibi et sibi reippeferunt ei ex cufumia bullionem; and this return was on motion quashed; for per Hote Ch. J. when the bullions have arbitrated the party, he is in fact and truth in their candle, but in law he is in the candle of the thief; an answer either way is good, viz. that he was rescued out of the candle of the bullion; or that he was rescued out of the candle of the bullion, and to that fire, of the candle of the bullion, and yet rescued out of the candle of the thief, and yet rescued out of the candle of the return is repugnant. 2 Salt. 586.

It seems that antiently, when the thief returned a rescue, the party was admitted to plead to it as to an indemnity; but the course of late has been not to admit any plea to it, but drive the party to his action against the thief in the candle he returned was false; and hence it is now settled that the return of a rescue is not transferable, but yet it hath been held that the submission to the fine doth not conclude the party grievcd from bringing his action for the false return, if it were so. Refitation, (Refitation) A keeping or providing; as when a man lets his land, he referrus a rent to be paid to himself for his maintenance. Sometimes it signifies as much as an exception; as when a man lets a house, and refers to himself one room, that room is excepted out of the demesne. Growth. edit. 177.

Refugation, (Refugation) Is used particularly for the giving up of a benefice into the hands of the ordinary; otherwise by the Canons it termed Resignation. And tho' it signify all one in nature with the word surrender, yet it is by custome refrained to the yielding up a spiritual living; the real surrender to the giving up of temporal lands into the hands of the Lord. And a refugation may now be made into the hands of the King, as well as of the diocesan, because he hath suprapream authoritatem ecclesiasticam, as the Pope had here in times past. Plowden. fol. 498. Refute, To say or flop: It is mentioned in Matt.

Paris. 515.

Refutation, (Refusttus) Is the yielding up again, or refusing of any thing unlawfully taken from another. But it is most frequently used in the Commonwealth law for the refusal of lands or tenements, that had been unlawfully acquired by fraud or deceit.

As to the refutation of stolen goods, Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 11. enacts, That if any felon or felons hereafter do rob, or take away any money, or goods, or chattels, from any of the King's subjects, from their persons or otherwise, in their realm, and thereof the said felons or felons be indicted, or are accused of theft, or felon, and found guilty thereof, or otherwise attainted, by reason of evidence given by the party so robbed, or owner of the said money, goods or chattels, or by any other by their procurement, that then the party so robbed, or owner, shall be reforted to his said money, goods and chattels;
and that if the justices of gaol-delivery as other justices, shall not apprehend any felon or felons shall be found guilty, or otherwise attainted, by reason of evidence given by the party so robbed, or owner, or by any other by their procurement, have power, by this present act, to award, from time to time, writs of refi-tution for the said money, goods, and chattels, in like manner as though any such felon or felons were attainted at the suit of the party in appeal.

Before this statute there was noaid by way of indictment for the party robbed; for though the inquest, that tried the felon, would, after the finding him guilty, say, that the party robbed had made fresh fault, yet this would be nothing but a restitution of the goods, as appears Fitz. tit. Coron. pl. 460. Hilt. 22 Edw. 3. Before this statute granted restitution upon evidence given by the party against the felon, as it seems, though he never made fresh fault against the felon. Statw. Pl. C. 167. lib. 3. cap. 10. Sargent Hawkins says, that this seems agreeable to practise, and the purport of the first part of the statute; but that if it shall plainly appear to the court, that the party has been guilty of gross neglect in prosecuting the offender, it may reasonably be argued, that he is not indicted to a restitution; for the latter part of the statute, by ordaining, that writs of restitution shall be awarded as though the felon had been attainted in an appeal, seems to imply, that it is a sufficient favour, within the intentions of the makers of the statute, to the prosecutor of an indictment, to give him a like remedy for a restitution of his goods, as the Common law gave to the plaintiff in an appeal; but it is certain, that the plaintiff in an appeal, who appears to have been guilty of such neglect, may, on demand a restitution by the Common law. As the Statw. 31 Edw. 3. says, That any suit or action would contend for will appear the more reasonable if it be considered that it can hardly be imagined to be the intention of the makers of the statute to give the party a greater benefit from a conviction grounded on his own evidence, as a conviction on an indictment may be, than from a conviction on the evidence of others, as a conviction in appeal must be; however, if it shall apply to the court upon the evidence of the trial, or otherwise, that the party has been reasonably diligent in prosecuting himself, he readily grants, that the justices may, if they think fit, in their discretion, award a restitution by a like reasoning inquiry concerning the fresh fault; but this seems to be no more than they may do in any appeal, if they think fit. 2 Hawk. P. C. 171. cap. 23. jelt. 56.

A servant took gold from his master, and changed it into silver; the master shall have restitution of the silver by this statute, cited by Fonner, C. R. 2. fol. 46. in the case of Holdy v. Hitti, to have been adjudged in Han-

A. bolte cattle and sold them at Coventry, in an open market, and immediately he was apprehended by the sheriff of Coventry, and they feized the money; and afterwards the thief was arraigned and hanged at the suit of the owner of the cattle. And by the court, the party, at the suit of the money, notwithstanding the words of 21 H. 8. the words should be held. And the court said, that it was usal at Newport. Ns 128. Harris.'s Cafe.
The words of the flatute are general, that where the thief is convicted at the prosecution of the party robbed, there the party shall have restitution; and takes no notice, whether the goods are sold in a market overt or not; so that by this statute the Common law is altered as to that point. And as for the Bishop of Worcester's case [48. 626, where to a restitution granted at a feellion, and afterwards the property of the right owner] 'tis true the inference of the book is as it is there said; but the main point was not there in question, although in those times there was a doubtfull opinion what the law was. And King's case, he spake with Mr. Lee, a very good clerk who was attended the feellion at the Old Bailey above forty years, and asked him how the practice there was; and he told him, it was doubted till about 4 & 5 Car. 1. and then Justice Jones and several other judges advised about it, and did resolve, that the party who lost the goods and prosecuted the felon to conviction, should have restitution of his goods which were stolen, notwithstanding they were sold in a market overt; and ever since that time, he says, the practice has been accordingly. And if any one pleads to a writ of restitution in such a case, that he bought the goods in a market overt, ever since that resolution, the other party pretty defmdered unto it, and had judgment. And he thinks it to be a very good restitution, whether it be true that the flatute of 21 H. 8. and that it tends to the advancement of justice to make men prosecute felon, and it will discourage persons from buying stolen goods, though in a market overt; for under that pretence men buy these for a small price of persons whom they have reason to suspect, which probably by this resolution will date. Retainer, (From the Latin Retineri) Signifies in a legal sense, a servant but not menial or familiar, that is, not continually dwelling in the house of his master, but only wearing his livery, and attending sometimes upon special occasions. This livery was wont to consist of coats (or hoods) badges, or other furs of one garment by the year, and for many times of the sons and great men, upon defign of maintenance and quarters, and is therefore jutly forbidden by several flatutes; as 1 R. 2. cap. 7. upon pain of imprisonment and grievous forfeiture to the King; and again, 16 R. 2. c. 4. 20 R. 2. c. 1. and 1 H. 4. c. 7. by which the offenders should make random at the King's will, and any knight or esquire thereby duly attainted should lose his fai livery, and forfeit his fee for ever, &c. Which flatute is further confirmed and explained by 2 H. 4. c. 21. 7 H. 4. c. 3. and 8 H. 6. c. 4. And yet this offence was to be so deeply held by Edward the Fourth was necissitated to confirm the former flatutes, and extend them further, their meaning, as appears by 8 Edw. 4. c. 2. and a special penalty of five pounds upon every man that gave such livery, and as much on every one to restrain, either by writing, oath, or promise, for every month. These are the saids called affidati, fci enim dictum qui in aliqui fumetus et paulo recepta jut. And as our retainers are here forbidden, so are those affiants in other countries. But most of the above-mentioned flatutes are repealed by 3 Car. 1. c. 1. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Retaining fee (Mercer retrim) Is the first fee given to any feignant or councellor at law, whereby to make him sure that he will perform the services he is to do. Retractus aquae, Ebb or low water, the retreat of the tide. The expression occurs in Plautus, caron Regis, Pofleb. 30 Edw. 1. apud Cantur. Rat. 38.

Retraction, Is so called, because that word is the effectual word of a //, and is where the plaintiff or defendant comes in person into the court, and he shall be well proceed no further. And this is a bar of all other actions of like or inferior nature, quin fellem adiutum re- nunciat, amplius repetere non potest. Co. on Lit. liib. 2. c. 11. fol. 288. The difference between a nonsuit and a retracit is, that a retracit is ever when the demandant or plaintiff is present in court; but a nonsuit is upon a demand made, when he should appear, and he makes default. Retracit (as we fald) is a bar, so is not a nonsuit, for he may commence an action of like nature again, Cowell, edit. 1727. A retracit is given when he is present in court (as regularly he is ever by intention of law, 'till a day be given over, unless it be when a verdict is given, and then he is but demandable); and this is either privative, when the entry is good, or materiell excusus non valet, sed a sueta tua in contemptum coram fce retracit, &c. or positive, when the entry is good, &c. fce cognitum est ultraerius nihil prosequi, &c. Return. (Return vel returna, from the French Retour, i. regrefus, revenir.) In our law hath two particular applications; the one is, the return of the writ with riiffs and bailiffs, which is only a certificate made to the coutry, that he hath done, touching the execution of their writ directed to him. And this among the Civilians is termed certificatorium; of returns in this sigificance feeks the statute of Wifum. 2 cap. 39. So is

2. 2d. Raym. 329. Camp. 123. Reding v. Rajfyn. A. in consideration of a marriage intended between him and B. and of a marriage portion, made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his heirs till the marriage of his son, and the trustees and their heirs, during the life of A., to support contingent remains, then to the fifth, second and other fons of his body in tail male, then to the heirs male he should have by any other wife, and for want of such issue to the heirs of the body of A. with remainder to his own right heirs; the remainder, or any of the same. 27 C. 372.

So that if one levies a fine to the use of his wife for life, the remainder to the use of his eftate, and the male of his body, and for want of fuch issue, to the use of his own right heir, this limitation to the use of his right heir is merely void, and he hath a reversion, and not a remainder in him. 1. 23 Law. 204. 1. 23. Law. 204. 1. 23. Law. 204.

In like manner, if a man makes a lease for life, or a gift in tail by deed, remainder to another for life or in fee, or to his own right heirs, or to his own right heirs only, this remainder to himself or to his heirs is void, because the fine continued still in him, and then he can't give himself what he had before, and he can't give to his heirs as such what the law gives them by a prior right, to vest at the famine time with his disposition to them. Dyer 9, 91. 20. 1. 23. Law. 204. 1. 23. Law. 204.

If a man makes a foaelfment in fee to the use of himfelf for life, remainder to the heirs male of his own body, this is a good estate-tail, executed in himelf, for the law conjoined his estate for life, and the remainder to the heirs male of his body, to prevent that remainder's being lost by forfeiture, or determination of the particular estate before it can vest, and the limitation is good by way of fee, because it is raised out of the estate of the feoffor, as if they had given it to him in such manner. C. Lit. 22. 20. 1. 23. Law. 204.

If one makes a foaelfment in fee to the use of himself for life, or in tail, remainder to the heirs of the feflor in fee, in the feeft, the reverfe is fo in the coahfessor, that he may in life make a life estate in any other, so that all who come in upon fuch coahfors are in by the coahfor, not by the Lord, for that nothing remains in the lord, but so much as is not disposed of, remains in the coahfessor as strongly as if it had been limited to him. If a man fided of lands in fee, by his will in writing, devifes them to one or life for tail, remainder to his own right heirs, this is void as a remainder, and the heir shall be in of the old reverfe by default, because immediately upon the death of the ancestor the reverfe depends to the right heirs, and so prevents his taking by the disposition of the will. Reviving Revocation. Is a word metaphorically applied to rents and achoons, and signifies a renewing of them after they are null and void; and which fee divers examples in Bract, tit. Revivings of Rents, Attains, &c. fol. 29. See 19 Vin. Abr. 228—230.

Revivo, or Bill of Revivor, is where a bill hath been exhibited in Chancery against one who, answerws, and before the cause is heard, or if heard, before the decree is given. And where a bill of revivor must be brought, that the former proceedings may stand revived, and the cause be finally determined. Cowell, ed. 1727.

Revocation, is a destroying or making void a deed or will, which exciited before the act of revocation: And a reviewing and new declaration, a deed made pursuant to some proofs contained in a former deed or conveyance, giving power to revoke or call back some thing granted; and by a new declaration to create a new estate of the lands, after which revocation and declaration the land shall fitly accordin. 1 Wood's Convey. ed. edit. 754.

There were no powers of revocation at Common law, but a man may have a condition of re-entry. But now these proofs, containing power of revocation, are creat into voluntary conveyances, and are become very frequent, and pass by rolling of uses according to the flat, 27 H. 8. cap. 10. for being coupled with an ufe, they are void. There may be good, and not sufficient for the former estates; as if one feid in fee covenants to fland feid to the ufe of himself for life, and after to the ufe of his fon in tail, with divers removers over; provided, That he may revoke any of the said ufe, and if afterward he revokes them, he is feid in fee again without entry or claim. But in the case of a feestament or other conveyance, whereby the feeoffice or grantee is in by the Common law, such proofs would be merely repugnant and void. Co. Lit. 237. a. That it would be void to destroy the feestament, but it might be good as to revoking the ufe to which the feestament was made. 1 Wood's Common. ed. 753.

Right, (Just.) In general signification includes not only a right, for which a writ of right lies, but also any title or claim, either by virtue of a condition, mortgage or the like, for which no action is given by law, but only an entry. Co. on Litt. lib. 3. cap. 8. f. 445. There is jus proprietatis, a right of property; jus possessorii, a right of possession; and the just proprietarius et possessorius, a right both of property and possession; and this was anciently called jus duplicatum: For example, if a man be difeased of an acre of land, the difeisce has just proprietarius, the difeisce has jus possessorius; and if the difeisce relate to the difeisce, he hath jus proprietarius et possessorius. Co. on Litt. lib. 2. sect. 447.

Gilbert, Treat. of Ten. 18. fays, That the difeisce has only the naked poffeffion, because the difeisce may enter upon the poffeffion, and all others pthree the difeisce has right, and in this respect only can be said to have the right of poffeffion; for in respect to the difeisce he has no right at all. But when a defcendent is caft, the heir of the difeisce has jus possessorius, because the difeisce cannot enter upon his poffeffion, and evict him, but is put to his real action, because the freedom is caft upon the heir; and fays, that the notions of the law do make this title to him, that there may be a perfon in being to do the feudal duties, to fill the poffeffion, and to answer the actions of all poffeffors whatever; and since it is the law that gives him this right, and obliges him to these duties, antecedent to any act of his own, it must defend such poffeffion from the act of any other perfon whatever, till such poffeffion be evicted by judgment; which being also the act of law may destroy the heir's title. Riot, and unlawful assembly. Riat, (riets and riwem, from the French riette, good non solam risam et jurgiam significat, fed vinculum etiam, quo plura in unum, tfeclarium uiuer, colligantur.) Signifies the for- cible doing of an unlawful thing by three, or more persons pented together for that pufpoe. Whil. Sacub. part 2. tit. Indiltments, fol. 67. J. in delivering the opinion of the court faid, That the books are obscure in the definition of riots, and that he took it, that it is not neceffary to fay they pftenbeled for that pufpoe; but there must be an unlawful pffenbeled, and as to what act of poffeffion or trefpafs, fuch an act as will make a trefpafs will make a riot. If three come out of an alehoufe, and go armed, it is a riot. 3 H. 7. 1. Per Holt Ch. J. in delivering the opinion of the court. 11 Med. 116, 117. The Queen v. Selby.

Serjeant Hawkins fays, A riot seems to be a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons, or more, affembling together of their own authority, with an in- tent mutually to affiff one another against any who shall oppofe them, in the execution of some enterpife of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the fame in a violent turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended was of itself lawful or unlawful. Hawk. P. C. 155. cap. 65. f. 1.

Serjeant Hawkins fays, A riot seems to be, according to the general opinion, a disturbance of the peace by pefonns affembling together with an intention to do a unlawful thing, which, if they execute it, will make it a riot; and actually making a motion towards the execution thereof: But by some books, the notion of a riot is confined to fuch pffenbeled only, as are occafioned by some grievance common to all the company, as the inclofe of land in which they all claim a right of common. &c. However, inasmuch as it generally affifts with a riot, as to all the ref of the above-mentioned particulars, requisite to confiftute a riot, except only in this, that it may be a complete effence without the execution of the intended enterpife, it seems not to re-quire any further explication. Hawk. Pl. G. 158. cap. 65. f. 5.

Serjeant Hawkins fays, An unlawful assembly, according to the common opinion, is a disturbance of the peace by pefonns barely affembling together, with an intention to do a thing, which, if it was executed, would make them rioters, but neither actually executing it, nor making a motion towards the execution of it; but he fays this to be much too narrow a definition; for any meeting whatsoever of great numbers of people with fuch circumstances of terror, as cannot but endanger the public peace, and raise fears and jealousies among the king's fubjects, seems properly to be called an unlawful assembly; as where great numbers, complaining of a common grievance, meet together armed in a warlike manner, in order to consult together concerning the most proper means for the recovery of their interests; for no one can foresee what may be the event of fuch an assembly. Hawk. Pl. C. 158. cap. 65. f. 9.

If a man be in his house, and he hears that f. will come to his house to beat him, he may well make an assembly of people of his friends and neighbours to affift and aid him in safe keeping his perfon. Fer Fatient Ch. J. Br. Rfts, pl. 1. cites 21 H. 7. 39.

But if a man be menaced or threatened that if he comes to the market of B. or to W. that he shall be beat, he cannot make an assembly of people to affift him to go there, and he is in safeguard of his perfon; for he need not go there, and he may have remedy by suery of the peace; but the house of a man is to him his caflle and his defence, and where he properly ought to abide, Br. Br. Rfts, pl. 1. cites 21 H. 7. 39. Per Finex Ch. Jutifce.

Dalt. Tyf. cap. 147. cites S. P. Hawk. Pl. G. 158. cap. 65. fol. 10. cites S. If a number of people affemble together in a lawful manner, and for a lawful enterpife, as for electing a mayor (as it was in this cafe) or the like, and during the affemblcy a fudden affay happens, this will not make it a riot ab initio; but it is only a common affay. Vol. II. No. 123.
If a number of people assemble in a riotous manner to do an unlawful act, and a person, who was upon the place before upon a lawful occasion, and not privy to their first design, comes and joins himself with them he will be guilty of a riot equally with the rest. Per Holt Ch. 1635, 1660, &c. it is to agree. Ld. Raym. Rul. 1665, Trin. 2 Ann. Grangemouth Corporation's case.

Holt Ch. J. thought an assembly might meet together with such circumstances of terror as to be a riot. 2 Salk. 594, 595. pl. 4. Trin. 6 Ann. in the case of The Queen v. Solley & al.

If few people assembled lawfully without any ill intent and in an affair, none are guilty but such as act; but if the assembly was originally unlawful the act of one is imputable to all. Per Holt Ch. J. 2 Salk. 595. 6 Ann. at nisi prius in Middlesex. The Queen v. Ellis.

It seems agreed, that a number of persons, being met together at a fair, or market, or church-ale, or any other lawful and innocent occasion, happen on a sudden quarrel to fall together by the ears, they are not guilty of a riot, but of a sudden affair only, of which none are guilty, but those who actually engage in it; because the design of their meeting was innocent and lawful, and the subsequent breach of the peace happened unexpectedly without any cause. And though circumstantial cause may be said, that if persons innocently assembled together, do afterwards upon a dispute happening to arise among them, form themselves into parties, with promise of mutual affiance, and then make affair, they are guilty of a riot, because upon their confederating together with an intention to break the peace, they may as properly be said to be assembled together for that purpose from of their confederacy, as if their first coming together had been on such a design; however, it seems clear, that in an assembly of persons met together on any lawful occasion whatsoever, a sudden proposal should be flarted of going together in a body to pull down a house or in- closure, or to do any other act of violence, to the disturbance of the publick peace, and such motion be agreed to and executed accordingly, the persons concerned cannot but be rioters, because their associating themselves together for such a new purpose is no way extenuated by their having met at first upon another. Hawk. Pl. C. 156, 157. cap. 05. f. 3.

Statute concerning riot, &c. with adjurations. Stat. 34 Ed. 3. cap. 1. enacts, that justices of peace shall have power to refrain evil-doers, rioters, and all other barretors, and to take and chastise them, and carry them before the law.

This statute has been literally construed for the advancement of justice; for it has been resolved, that if a justice of peace find persons riotously assembled, he alone without staying for his companions hath not only power to arrest the offenders, and bind them to their good behaviour, or imprison them if they do not offer good bail, but that he may also authorize others to arrest them by a bare parol command without other warrant, and that by force thereof the persons so commanded, may pursue and arrest the offenders in his absence as well as presence. It is also said, that if a justice of peace be sick, and hear that persons are riotously assembled, he may send his servants to him, and bring them to him; and that if he hear that persons are riotously together in a certain place, and go thither and find none there, he may leave his servants behind him with a command to arrest them, when they shall come. Alto it is said, that after a riot is over, any one justice of peace may send his warrant to any who was at the riot, and also that he may send him to go, till he shall find saries for his good behaviour. 1 Hawk. P. C. 160.

But it seems to be agreed, that no one justice of peace hath any power by force of this statute, either to record a riot upon his own view, or to take an inquisition thereon of a riot, or to be one justice of peace proceeding upon this statute, shall arrest and carry a person as a rioter, if he seemeth that he is liable to an action of tres- pas, and that the party arrested may justify the refusing of himself, because no single justice of peace is by this statute made a judge of the said offence. But if a riot shall be committed by persons armed in an unmanly manner, contrary to the statute of Northampton, and any other statute for the maintenance of the peace, and the said statute, feize the armour and imprison the offender, and make a record of the whole matter, such a record cannot be traversed, because it is made by one acting in a judicial capacity, as appears more at large in the chapter of ariays: and for the same reason, if a justice of peace proceed upon the statute of 35 Geo. 2. against rioters, and offenders, and take upon him, or any other justice of peace, or any other person, or persons, view record a riot, which shall be committed in the making of any such forcible entry or detainer, a riot so recorded cannot be traversed, as hath been shewn in the foregoing chapter. Also if a justice of peace acting as a judge, by virtue of any statute whatsoever, empowering him to do, make a record upon his view of a riot committed in his presence, such record shall not be traversed; for the law gives such an uncontrovertible credit to all matters of record, made by any judge of record as such, that it will never admit of an averment against the truth thereof. 1 Hawk. P. C. 160. 13 H. 4. cap. 7. sect. 1. If any riot, assembly or rout be made against law, be made, the justices of peace, or two of them, and the sheriff, shall come with the power of the county (if need be) and arrest them; and the said justices and sheriff shall have power to record that which they find done in their presence against law; and by the record such offenders shall be convicted in the court according to the statute of the six and twelfth. If any persons or oligarchies be departed before the coming of the justices and sheriff, the fame justices, or two of them, shall diligently inquire within a month after, of such riot, assembly, or rout, and shall hear and determine the fame.

Sect. 2. If the truth cannot be found, then within a month next following the justices or two of them, and the sheriff, shall certify before the King and his council all the deeds and circumstances thereof, which certificate shall be of like force as the preceptment of twelve men; upon which certificate the offenders shall be put to answer, and they which be found guilty shall be punished after the discretion of the King and his council.

Sect. 3. If such offenders traverse the matter certified, the certificate and traverse shall be sent into the King's Bench to be tried and determined; and if the offenders do not come before the King and his council at the first command, there shall be made another, directed to the sheriff, to take the offenders if they may be found, and appearing them in the day before the council, either in the King's Bench, or in the King's Bench, or in the Chantery in time of vacation, within three weeks then following; and in case the offenders come not, and the proclamation made and returned, they shall be convic of the riot, assembly or rout.

Sect. 4. The justices of peace dwelling nigh where such riot, assembly or rout, shall be made, together with the sheriff, and also the justices of aide for the time that they shall be peace acting or officin, in pursuance of the fame statute, every one upon pain of 100 l. T. and three others were convicted of a riot, upon view of two justices of the peace, and the sheriff of the county, contra formam statut. 13 Hen. 4. cap. 7, and they were fined by the justices; and upon a writ of error brought, the King agreed, that the defendants were convicted by view of the justices. adz, That the sheriff did not join in setting the fire, whereas the statute says, that the sheriff shall be joined with the justices in the whole proceedings; and for these errors the judgment was reversed. Raym. 386. Tit. 32 Cor. 2. B. R. The King v. Temple & al. 1 H. 7. After the statute was taken before two justices of peace only, without the sheriff or under-the- sheriff; riff, but because it appeared to be taken a month after the riot end'd, the committee held it clear by good reason this statute.

Where the conviction of a riot is made on this statute upon view only, there the sheriff or under-sheriff must be present; but it is not necessary where the conviction is upon an inquisition taken after the riot is end'd. And this is the difference.

Garth. 383. 3 Tin. 8 W. 3. 3 Salk. 593. S. C. accordingly. 2 Salk. 95. 3 S. C. accordingly.

The law by necessary implication and the nature of the attendance on the view is, that they may raise the poff comitatus to suppress the rioters, which need not when they are diuerfed, the justices having a lawful jurisdiction.

An information against three justices of peace, for not making inquiry of a very great riot done by several persons, in burning hedges, &c. within a month after the fact done: And because the statute says nothing of any complaint or notice being to be made, or given to them, it was moved by some, that they were bound by law to take notice at their peril; but divers justices were of a contrary opinion.

Ido quoque bene the words of the statute of 3 H. 4, cap. 7. and the law. But the reporter says, it seems reasonable that notice or complaint be made to them; so for is the statute of R. 2. of for the justices to take their inquiry by force of these statutes, must be reckoned according to the computation of a lunar or of a solar month; however, it seems to be agreed, that if the justices give their charge to the jury, and it is said that if they do but award a precept for the returning of the jury within a lunar month, they may take the verdict after. And as to the cause being regularly attached in them within the time prescribed by the statute shall be proscribed, as all other causes ought, with such convenient dispatch as to the judges thereof shall seem proper; and the statute, by obliging the justices to make speedily an inquiry, meant not to hurt them in the execution thereof.

Tho' this statute be mandatory, that the inquisition shall be taken within a month, under a penalty in the neighbouring justices, yet after the month it is still discretion in the justices to take an inquisition, &c. And that by construction of the last clause of this statute which says that the mention of execution of this act, in pain of 1001. and it hath ever been the practice to take such inquisitions out of fections.

Carthew 35. The King v. Ingram, S. C. and P. Comb. 423. and the time is only mandatory.

The justices of peace dwelling nightly See 4. of the 32 Act 19. H. 7. It is not necessary that the next justices only should move a force, but all the justices of the county are bound to it: And these words in the statute, viz. that the next justices, are put but for convenience, and the more speedy execution of justice.

Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown 165. 166. cap. 65. sed, 45. &c. The ferjeant says, that in the construction of this clause of the statute, the following opinions have been holden, 1. That no justice of peace is in danger of incurring the penalty thereof unleas he dwell in the county wherein a riot happens. 2. That any justicess of peace, who do not dwell nearest to the place do actually execute the statute, they excuse all the rest. 3. That if the justices, whose dwellings are nearest at the time of the riot, or one of them, happen to dwell within the month, those whose dwelling is thereby become the nearest, are bound to execute the statute in the same manner as the others were. 4. That notwithstanding these justices only, who dwell nearest, are liable to the penalty of the statute, the justices on the nearest occasion to supply their default, they are not liable at all. 5. That if the two justices, or one of them, do their duty in executing, or endeavouring to execute the statute, they shall not incur any penalty by a default of the sheriff, &c. either in refusing to appear, or to return a jury, &c. &c.

That the said justices, &c. shall not avoid the penalty by recording the riot without committing the parties, 72. That no justice, &c. is subject to the penalty of the statute, on account of a petit riot, but only of such as are notorious, and in nature of insurrections and rebellions.

Sibb. That if a justice of peace, &c. had no express notice given him of the riot, he shall be excused, unless it were so very flagrant, that by common intention every one dwelling near it could not but have notice thereof. 97. That the acquiescence or agreement of the parties aggrieved is no excuse to the justices, because they ought, &c. of offices, to make the inquiry, and make proclamation whether any shall give evidence; and for that reason they, &c. may bind fuch of the parties grieved, as shall refuse to prosecute their complaint, to their good behaviour.

Stat. 2 Hen. 5. &. 1. cap. 8. sect. 1. If default be found in the said justices of peace, or justices of affile (named in the statute 3 Hen. 4. cap. 7. and the sheriff or under-sheriff of the county where such riot, assembly or rout, shall be made, touching the execution of the said statute; at the instance of the party grieved the King's commissiion shall go out under his great seal, to inquire as well of the truth of the caufe, and of the original matter, as of the defaults of the justices, sheriff or under-sheriff, to be directed to indifferent persons, at the nomination of the chancellor; and the commissioners shall fend into the Chancery the inquests before them taken, and the coroners shall make the panel for the time that the sheriff, that is appoised in default, shall stand in his office, which coroners shall return no perons but such which have lands to the value of 100l. by the year; and the coroners shall return upon the perons impannel'd at the first day signifies to 20l. and at the second day 40l. and at the third day 100l. And at every day after the double at least; and if default be found in the coroners touching the return of such perons impannel'd, or touching the return of perons, every one of them shall pay to the King 40l. and that the perons of him and the sheriff or under-sheriff shall make the panel. And the Chancellor, as soon as he may have knowledge of such riot, assembly or rout, shall cause to be sent the King's writ to the justices of peace and to the sheriff, that they put the statute in execution, upon the pain contained in the same; and tho' such writ come not to the justices or sheriff, they shall not be excused if they make not execution of the statute.

Sect. 2. Provided, That the justices and other officers shall do their offices at the King's cost, by payment to be made by the sheriff by indentities bey the sheriff and the justices and other officers and rioters attainted of great and heinous riots shall have one year's imprisonment, and rioters attainted of petty riots shall have imprisonment, as beft shall serv to the King and his council; and the fines of such rioters shall be by the said justices increased, and put in greater sums of money than they otherwise would be. And the several people in the county shall be affistant to the justices, &c. the same artificers, sheriff or under-sheriff, when they shall be reasonably warned, to ride with them to refer such riots, &c. upon pain of imprisonment, and to make fine and ransom to the King; and bailiffs of franchises shall cause to be impannel'd sufficient persons, upon pain to lose the the King 40 l. And like ordinances and pains shall hold place in cities, boroughs and other places which have justices of peace.

Sed. 2. A. S. 28. c. 4. s. t. 1. of murders, manslaughter, robberies, batteries, assemblies of people in great number in manner of insurrection, and other rebellious riots, if any person come into Chancery, and make complaint, that any such felon or offender fly or withdraw him, a bill shall be made for the King; and the Chancellor, after such bill to him delivered, shall be duly sworn that such bill and the writ thereunto shall have power to make a writ of capias at the King's suit directed to the sheriff, returnable in Chancery at a certain day; and if the persons be taken by the sheriff, or yield them in the Chancery, such persons shall be put in ward, or to mainprize; and he shall fend to inquire of such offences; and if the sheriff return in writ of capias, and the persons be not yielded them in the Chancery, the Chancellor shall cause to be made a writ of proclamation directed to the sheriff, returnable in the King's Bench, that he make proclamation in two counties, that the persons named in the writ shall come to answer to the matter comprised in the bill, upon pain to be convol'd; and in every such writ of proclamation shall be contained the substance of the bill, and if they come not at the day, then they shall be convol'd.

Sed. 2. Provided that the fuggellions of such riots be witnessed to the Chancellor by letters under the seals of two justices of peace and the sheriff, before the writ of capias shall be granted, in which writ the matter comprised in the bill shall be as well expressed as in the writ of proclamation; and if such cause happen in the County paleine of Lancastcr, or elsewhere in any franchise where there is a Chancellor, the Chancellor of England shall cause to be sent by the King's writ to the Chancellor of such county or franchise, all the fuggellions in the bill comprised, commanding him to make execution; so always that the King's writ do not run out of the Chancery of England into such county or franchise otherwise than hath been used. Made perpetual, 8 Hen. 6. c. 14.

Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 14. sed. 1. the said statute 3 Hen. 5. c. 9. shall be kept.

Sed. 2. Provided that it be witnessed by two justices of peace, that the same common runneth in the counties of the same riots, before the writ of capias be awarded. Provided also, that if such cause happen in the county paleine of Lancastcr, or elsewhere in a place infranchised, where there is a Chancellor, the Chancellor of such county or franchise shall be intrusted, for the cause contained in the writ to be witnessed by a justice, or the leutenant of a justice, and the sheriff of such counties paleine or place infranchised, shall have like power to award a capias, and a writ of proclamation, as the Chancellor of England hath.

Stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 13. If any riot, rout or unlawful assembly, be committed, the sheriff having a precept directed to him shall return 24 perons dwelling within the mile, whereof every one of them shall have lands within in the hundred to the yearly value of 20 l. of freehold, or 30 l. 8 d. of copyhold, or of both, to inquire of the said riot, rout or unlawful assembly; and he shall return upon every peron impaneled in suits, at the first day 20 l. to be paid within 40 days, and if defaully found shall be found in the sheriff for returning of other persons, &c. the sheriff shall forfeit to the King 20 l. and if the riot, rout or unlawful assembly, be not found by the jury, by reason of any maintenance or embracery, the justices and the sheriff shall in the certificate certify the names of the maintainers and embracers, with their misdemeanors; upon pain of every of the said justices, and sheriff or under-sheriff, to forfeit 20 l. if they have no reasonable excuse, which certificate shall be of like force as if the matter were found by verdict of twelve men; and every peron proved to be a maintainer or embracer in the same shall forfeit to the King 20 l. and as well the maintainers as the embracers shall be committed to ward by the direction of the justices.

Stat. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 5. sed. 1. If any persons, to the number of twelve, being unlawfully assembled to the disturbance of the peace, and being required by one justice of peace, or by the sheriff or his under-sheriff, or by the mayor, &c. of any city, &c. by proclamation in the King's name, to disperse themselves, and depart to their lawful business; if any refuseth, shall riotously continue together by the space of one hour, such proclamation, such continuing together to the number aforesaid shall be felony without benefit of clergy.

Sed. 2. The form of the proclamation shall be in manner following, viz. the justice of peace, &c. shall, being among the rioters, or as near to them as he can falsely comply with, command them to disperse while proclamation is making, and then shall openly make proclamation in these words, or like;

O UR Sovereign Lord the King chargeth and commandeth all persons, being assembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably return to their habitations, without further delay, upon the pains contained in the act made in the first year of King George, for preventing tumults and riotous assemblies.

God save the King.

And every such justice, &c. on notice of such unlawful assembly, is to retort to the place, and make proclamation in manner aforesaid.

Sed. 3. If such persons so unlawfully assembled shall, after proclamation made, not disperse themselves within one hour, they shall be lawful to every justice, sheriff, &c. and every high and petty confabulator or other peace officer, and for such other persons as shall be commanded to be assisting to such justice, &c. (who are empowered to command all his Majesty's subjects, of age and ability, to be assisting) to seize such persons and carry them before a justice of peace; and if such persons shall be killed or hurt by reason of their assisting the persons so dispersing or seizing them, such justices, &c. shall be indemnified.

Sed. 4. If any such persons so riotously assembled shall unlawfully demolish or pull down, any church or chapel, or any building for religious worship certified and registered according to the act 1 W. & M. cap. 18. or any dwelling houses, barn, fable or out-houses, it shall be felony without benefit of clergy.

Sed. 5. If any peron thall with force oppose, or in any manner willfully hinder or hurt, any persons who shall begin to proclaim, whereby such proclamation shall not be made, such offenders shall be adjudged felons without benefit of clergy; and all persons so unlawfully assembled, or the number of twelve, to whom proclamation ought to have been made, if the same had not been hindered, shall, if they continue together an hour after such hinderance knowing thereof, be adjudged felons without benefit of clergy.

Sed. 6. If any church, chapel, &c. shall be demolished or pulled down by any persons so unlawfully assembled, the inhabitants of the hundred shall yield damages to the person damnsed by such demolition, which may be recovered in any court at Westminster against any two inhabitants, such action for damages to any church, &c. to be brought in the name of the rector, &c. in trust for rebuilding and repairing such church, &c. and the judgment being given for the plaintiff in such action, the damage recovered shall, at the requent of such plaintiff, &c. be levied upon the inhabitants, and paid to such plaintiff by such ways as are provided by 27 Eliz. c. 13. for reimbursing any money recovered by any party robbed; and if such church, &c. shall be in any city or town, that is either a county or itself, or is not within any hundred, such damages shall be recovered against two or more inhabitants of such city or town.

Sed. 7. This act shall be read at every feessions and at every leet.

Sed. 8. No peron shall be prosecuted for any offence contrary to this act, unless prosecution be commenced within the time in which the offence committed.

Robbery is a felony by the Common Law, committed by a violent assault upon the person of another, by put-ing him in fear, and taking from his person his money, or other goods of any value whatsoever. 3 Jul. 68. c. 16.

refits and is overpowered without being under any fear at all, it is not the lea robbery upon that account; and the prisoners were discharged of the indictment. But afterwards an inditement was found against them, and prosecuted at the expense of the crown on the representation of the judges, for which the principal persons, brought before the special jury in the robbery bill were charged. On this indictment we were discharged; and the court gave judgment, that they be all set in and upon the pillory twice; that they stand committed for seven years afterward. One of them (Egan) lost his life in the pillory, through the relentment of the paper. And on that account, the others did not stand a second time. But they were tried in Negroe to be clofely confined in pursuance of their sentence. 96, 34, fept. 9.

The words of the inditement, violenter & selenie eptit, must be understood that there is an actual taking in deed, and a taking in law, and that may be when a thief receives, &c. For example: If thieves rob a true man, and finding but little about him, take it, this is an actual taking; and by means of death compel him to swear upon a book to fetch them a greater sum, which he does and delivers it to them, which they receive, this is a taking in law by them, and adjudged robbery; for fear again to take the oath, and the oath and fear continuing, the making them swear, is a taking in law; and in this case there needs no special inditement, but the general inditement (Quod violenter & selenie eptit) is sufficient. And so it is, if at the first the true man for fear delivers his purfe, &c. to the thief. 3 legit. 16. cap. 10.

Sargent Hurdins says, it seems clear that he who receives my money by my delivery, either whilst I am under the terror of his affault, or afterwards while I think myself bound in confidence to give him it by an oath to that purpose, which in my fear I was compelled by him to take, may in the eye of the law, as properly be said to take it from me, as he who actually takes it out of my hand with his own hands. Herch. Pl. C. 96. cap. 34. fept. 4.

This word (eptit) neceffarily implies, that the thief must be in poifion of the thing tribal. For example: If the bag or purfe of the true man be fenthen to his girdle, &c. and the thief, the more easily to take the bag or purfe, cuts the girdle, whereby the bag or purfe falls to the ground, this is no taking; but the thief had never any poifion thereof, & fie de fimilibus: But if the thief takes up the bag or purfe, and in thriftving had let it fall, and never took it again, this had been a taking, because he had it in his poifion; for the continence of his poifion is not required by law. 3 legit. 16. cap. 16. S.P. 34, fept. 4.

Though I do not say that he is guilty of robbery, he is highly punifhable by fine, and imprifonment, &c. for so enormons a breach of the peace.

The words of the inditement are (a perfon) &c. If the true man, seeking to escape for the safeguard of his money, calls it into a buff, which the thief perceiving, takes it: This is a taking in law from the purfe, because it is done at one time. 3 legit. 16. cap. 16. S.P. And so if he drives my cattle in my preffence out of my purfe, or takes my hat which fell from my head, he may be indicted as having taken things from my purfe. Herch. Pl. C. 96. cap. 34. fept. 8.

If the true man had call'd off his furcoat, or other uppermost garment, and the fame laying in his prefence, a thief affails him, &c. and takes the furcoat, this is robbery; for that which is taken in his prefence, is in law taken from his prefence. 3 legit. 16. cap. 16. And so it is of the hoife of a true man, which flands by him: Ecl. Pl. C. 8. cap. 34. fept. 10.

Upon not guilty pleaded to an inditement the evidence was, that P. &c. met W.S. & M.T. in the highway, where they endeavoured to rob them, and for that purpose drew their swords and offered to strike them, therupon W.S. rode away one way, and P. pursu'd him, and M.T. went another way, and P. &c. followed him and rob'd him out of fight or hearing of P. Ed. 3. c. 11. 2 H. 6. 559.—But in 3 Lev. 320, it is said, that upon search of the parliament roll it appears, that the statute of Wintons gives only forty days to the country, and that after that time, it was adjudged, where the plaintiff brought an action on the statute of Wintons, and declared that he was robbed, and none of the robbers taken within forty days, according to the said statute; and with this the modern precedents agree, as Raft. Ext. Cas. 351. Hen. 8. 2 Tho. Broc. 141. 2 Sal. 376.

The statute of Wintons gives the action against the hundred; but by subsequent statutes, such as 27 Ed. cap. 13. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. Several alterations and additions have been made therein, which we shall consider under the following heads.

It seems to be admitted, that no kind of robbery will make the hundred liable, but that which is done openly, and with force and violence; and that therefore the private stealing, or taking any thing from the party does not come within the statutes which make the hundred liable, because the hundred is not liable because they did not prevent the robbery, nor because they did not apprehend the robbers, which in private felonies, and of which they had no notice, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for them to do. 7 Co. 6, 7. 2 Sal. 674.

Alfo it hath been adjudged, and is admitted in all the books which speak of this matter, that a robbery in a house, whether it be done by night or by day, does not make the hundred liable: The reasons whereof are, that every man's house is in law esteemed his castle, which he himself is obliged to defend, and into which no man can enter, to see what is doing there, without his leave; also being done in a house, the inhabitants of the hundred cannot be deemed to have notice of it, so as to be able to apprehend the offenders. 7 Co. 6. 2 Sal. 674.

But if a person be assaulted in the highway, and carried into a house, and there robbed, it seems the hundred shall be liable; for otherwise the provision made by the statute would be null. 1 Sid. 263. and see 1 Sal. 674. 4 Fost. 137.

Also it does not seem necessary, that the robbery should be committed in the highway, nor alleged to have been so by the plaintiff in his declaration. 4 Fost. 159. may be in a private way, may be in a copiece; and in both cases the hundred shall be chargeable. 2 Sal. 674.

Therefore where upon the statute of hue and cry the plaintiff desired, and quod quandam persona ignata, et any quandam locum vagatur, &c. Fair-milgate, infra parochiam, &c. &c. alleged him, and robbed him of so much money, and there being a verdict for the plaintiff, it was moved in arrest, that any quandam locum might be meant of a robbery committed in a house, garden or wood, for which the hundred is not liable, being only obliged to guard the highways: But it was held, that the declaration was good, especially after verdict, because it must be intended that this was given in evidence; otherwise the plaintiff would have been non suite: Also the court held, that without the help of a verdict, this declaration had been good; and that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege, that the robbery was committed on the highway, more than that it was committed by day, and not by night; and that all the ancient precedents were accordingly. Corb. 71. 3 Med. 252. 1 Show. 60. Comb. 150. S. C. adjudged between Tang and the inhabitants of the hundred of Telford.

3. On what day, or time of the day, the robbery must be committed, and what hundred shall be liable.

It had been resolved by three judges against one, that a robbery on a day or a night, the plaintiff should charge the hundred, and that the purifying of robbers who violate the Sabbath, was so far from being a profanation of that day, that that it was a work of charity and justice: also that several persons, such as physicians, chirurgeons, midwives, &c. were necessitated to travel on that day, and it was but reasonable that they should be provided in their journey.

2 By the 27 Eliza. 2. cap. 7. par. 5. it is enacted, "That if any perfon or perfons whatsoever, which shall travel upon the Lord's day, shall be then robbed, that no hundred, or the inhabitants thereof, shall be charged with, or answerable for, any robbery so committed; but the perfons or perfons to robb'd, shall be be-halfed of hundred, and then for the said robbery, any law to the contrary notwithstanding. Neither the inhabi-Gent of the counties and hundreds (after notice of any such robbery to them, or some of them given, or after hue and cry for the fame brought,) shall make or cause to be made fresh suit and perfect after the offen-dee of horftemen and footmen, as by the 27 Eliza. is provided; upon pain of forfeiting to the King's Majesty, his heirs and successors, as much money as might have been recovered against the hundred by the party robb'd, if this law had not been made.
It is clearly agreed, that for a robbery committed in the night the hundred is not charged because they cannot be preterite to have notice thereof, so as to be able to apprehend the robbers. 7 Co. 6. a. Millborne's cafe. 2 Infl. 669.
But yet it is not necessary that the robbery should be committed after sun-rise, and before sun-set, and that therefore if there be as much day-light at the time that a robbery is committed, or may be inferred to have been committed, though it be before sun-rise or after sun-set, the hundred shall be liable. 7 Co. 6. a. Bell's cafe. Cra. Jas. 106.
1 And. 158. 1 Lev. 577. Sav. 33.
Also it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege in his declaration, that the robbery was committed in the day, time, and not in the night: But if it seems, that if upon the evidence it turns out to be, as to have been committed in the night, he cannot have a verdict. Carb. 71. Comb. 150.

3 Med. 258. 1 Show. 60. S. P. admitted.
Also it hath been held, that if robbers drive or oblige the waggoner to drive his wagon from the highway by day, but do not rob or take any thing till night, that yet this is a robbery in the day-time so as to charge the hundred. Sid. 265. Forsett. 150.
By the statute of Winchester it is enacted, "That if the robbery be done within the division of two hundreds, both the hundreds and the franches within them shall be answerable.
If robbers affault a person with an intent to rob him in the night, and he escapes and flies into another, whether he is pursued by the robbers, and there robbed, the last hundred shall be liable. Hatton 125. Dean's cafe; per cur.
So where by special verdit it was found, that the plaintiff was travelling in the highway in the hundred of A. where he was set upon and carried into the hundred of B. and robbed in a copse in the highway of this hundred; it was adjudged that the hundred of B. should be liable, for that there the robbery was committed, and not before. 2 Salt. 614. Forsett. 157. S. C. Cooper v. The Hundred of Bogningley.
If one be taken in the hundred of A. and carried into the hundred of B. in a hole there, viz. a manorhouse, and robbed, or taken in the day-time in A. and carried to B. and there robbed in the night, it is said that there is no remedy against either hundred; these cafes not being provided for by the statute. 2 Salt. 615.
By the 27 Eliza. cap. 13. par. 2. Reciting that the inhabitants of B. did not procuse the hue and cry brought to them, because those hundreds only are liable in which the robberies have been committed, it is enacted,
"That the inhabitants and resiitants of every or any such hundred (with the franches within the presidell thereof) wherein negligence, fault or defect of pursit and fresh suit after hue and cry brought to be, shall answer and satisfy the one moiety or half of all and every such sum or sums of money and damages, as shall be recovered or had against or of the said hundred, with the franches therein, in which any robbery or felony shall at any time hereafter be committed or done; and that the same moiety shall and may be recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information in any of the Queen's Majesty's courts or places wherever she shall think fit, and the clerk of the peace for the time being, of or in every such county within this realm, where any such robbery and recovery by the party or parties robb'd shall be, without naming the christian name or surname of the said clerk of the peace; which moiety so recovered shall be reduced within the hundred of the inhabitants of the said hundred where any such robbery or felony shall be committed or done."

4. Who is to bring the action, and make oath of the robbery; and of the notice to be given thereof.
If a servant be robbed, in the absence of his master, of his master's money, it is clear that tie may maintain an action for it against the hundred, but then the servant must make oath that he knew not any of the robdjudged.
Also the servant being robb'd in his master's absence, may himself maintain an action against the hundred, and may declare that he was pofffed ut de bonis suis propriis. 56.
And though the jury find that he was robbed of his master's money, yet shall he recover for the servant is poffsed ut de bonis suis propriis, against all, and in respect of all, both the man and the servant. 2 Salt. 615. 1 Mod. 30. Comb. 263. S. C. Comb. y. 125.

And S. C. cited.
If a servant be robbed in the presence of the master, the master must sue; and the oath of the master is sufcient. 2 Salt. 613. per cur.
By special verdict it was found, that the plaintiff sent his servant to Smithfield market with fat cattles, where he left them for 108 l. and sealed up 106 l. in four bags, and delivered them to T. S. a quaker, who travelled with him towards home, and they were both robbed; and the servant made oath of the robbery, according to the statute; but that the quaker refused to be sworn; and in an action brought by the master it was held, that as to the 40 l. taken from the servant he should recover; but that as to the 106 l. taken from the quaker, he could not, for want of an oath according to the statute; and that the oath being enquired merely for the benefit of the hundred, who were oppriessed by pretended robberies, the court could not depart from the express words of the statute. Carb. 145. 2 Salt. 613. 1 Show. 64. 3 Med. 287. S. C. Aitnow v. The Hundred of Eltham.

But it seems, that the servant who delivered the 106 l. to the quaker, and was present at the robbery, might maintain an action in his own name for all the money; and that his own oath would be sufficient; and that he might declare upon the taking away the money from the quaker as his servant, who in truth was fo for this time. Carb. 145. 613. per cur.
One Jones and his wife and servant, travelling to-together, were all robbed of his money, and Jones alone brought the action for the whole money against the hundred, as well for what was taken from his wife and servant as from his own person, and he alone, without his wife or servant, made oath of the robbery, all which was allowed. But if he in any special verdit, it was adjudged that his oath alone was sufficient within the intent of the statute; and although it was further found, that the servant of Jones who was robbed with his master, knew one of the robbers whole name was Lane, yet Jones had his judgment. Carb. 145. Jones v. Hundred of Brumgford.

So where one Bird a laceman of Colliton in Devonshire, in coming to London with his servant, they left the usual ufal great road between Brentford and Hammarsmith, and rode through a by-lane near Seijant Maynard's house, to avoid the dust, and in that lane the fervant was robbed, in the presence of his master, of a box of lace which was behind him on the back of the horse, to the value of 1200l, and Bird the multer alone made oath of the robbery, and brought the action; and by the opinion of the Ch. J. Holt the oath of the multer was sufficient, because being present, the goods were in his possession; for the possession of the fervant in the presence of his master's multer, the parties that committed recovered 1200l, and had execution. Carth. 147. Bird v. The Hundred of Offulfine cited.

If A. and B. travelling together are robbed of a sum of money, to which they are both jointly intituted, they may both join in action against the hundred; jezif if they had separate and different interests. 1 Dyer 370. a. p. 59.

By statute 37 Eliz. c. 13. par. 11. it is enacted, "That no person or persons that shall happen to be robbed shall have or maintain any action, or take any benefit of the actions which make the hundred liable, except the same person and persons fo robbed shall, as much as in them lies, by give notice and intelligence of the fact done or robbery committed unto some of the inhabitants of some town, or hamlet, near unto the place where such robbery shall be committed."

In the construction of this clause of the statute it hath been held, "That if a person be robbed in a highway in divers hundredestum, he need not give notice to the inhabitants of each hundred, but notice to either of them is sufficient. Cro. Jac. 675. Eliz. v. The Hundred of Specknor and Jewlworth, adjudged."

That alleging notice to have been given at a village near to where the robbery was committed is sufficient, though such village happens to be in a different county; for that strangers are not obliged to take notice of the division of counties. Cro. Car. 41. adjudged, or in a different hundred. Cro. Car. 379. adjudged.

That though it be the bell courte to allege, that notice was given at the place where the robbery was committed, or at some village near the place, yet that notice near the hundred, or near the division of the hundreds where the robbery was committed, is sufficient; and that this shall not be intendment of the most remote part of the hundred, especially a verdé. Cro. Car. 41. adjudged.

If several persons are in company at the time of the robbery, it is said, that notice given by any one of them is sufficient. 1 Show. 94.

It hath been resolved, that though the notice given be five miles from the place where the robbery was committed, that it is sufficient; the reason wherein is, because that the party, who is a Franger to the country, cannot have connusance of the nearest place or town. March 11. Sir John Compton's cafe.

Also if the party robbed give notice with as much convenient speed as may be, though he be otherwise remis in not pursuing the robbers, or refuses to lend his horse and provisions, he shall not lose his action for this, near the hundred be executed. March 11. 2 Leon. 82. S. P. agreed per cur." And now by the 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. felt. 1. it is further enacted, "That no person shall have or maintain any action against any hundred, or take any benefit by virtue of the statutes of Winstan, or 27 Eliz. or either of them, unless be, he or they shall, over and besides the notice already required by the last of the above-mentioned statutes to be given of any robbery, with as much convenient speed as may be, alter any robbery on him, her or them committed, give notice thereof to one of the constables of the hundred, or to some constable, borf-holder, or other person a fit and proper person for this, for the benefit, use, and help of the village, hamlet or tithe, near unto the place where such robbery shall happen, or shall leave notice in writing of such robbery at the dwelling house of such constable, or describing in such notice to be given or left as aforesaid, so far as the nature and circumstances of the cafe will admit, the felon or felons, and the time and place of the robbery, and also shall, within the space of twenty days next after the robbery committed, cause publick notice to be given thereof in the London Gazette, or other publick paper, for the better searching and discovering of the nature and circumstances of the cafe will admit, the felon or felons, and the time and place of such robbery, together with the goods and effects, wherein he, the or they or was were robbed."

5. Before robbing the oath must be taken, and where the party must give bond for payment of costs, in case he do not prevail.

By the 27 Eliz. c. 13. par. 11. it is enacted, "That the party robbed shall not have any action, except he or they shall file, within twenty days next before such action to be brought, be examined upon, his or their corporal oath, to be taken before some justice of the peace of the county where the robbery was committed, inhabiting within the said hundred where the robbery was committed, or near unto the same, whether he or they do know the persons that committed the said robbery, or any part thereof, or upon examination, it be confesed, that he or they know the fact or facts committed in the said robbery, or any of them, that then he or they so confessing shall, before the said action be commenced or brought, enter into sufficient bond by recognizance before the said justice before whom the said examination is had, effectually to prosecute the same person and persons who have committed the said robbery, by indictment or otherwise, according to the due course of the law of this realm."

In the construction of this clause of the statute, the following points have been holden; That if the party does not know the robbers at the time of the robbery committed, he need not, or he is not bound to, know them afterwards, it is not material. March 11.

It was holden by three judges against one, that the party's swearing that he did not know the robbers, without adding, nor any of them, is not sufficient; because not pursuant to the statute, and because on such equivocal oath the party cannot be purified for perjury. May 21. Bateman's cafe. 3 Lev. 375. S. P.

It hath been adjudged, that the oath may be taken before a justice of the county, though not in the county at the time of administering it; as where a robbery was committed in Berks, and a justice of that county refusing in London, the party was sworn before him according to the statute, and the oath was held sufficient; for the justice acts only as a ministerial officer, and as appointed by the statute, and not in a judicial capacity as a justice of the peace. 1 Jener 259. Helter v. The Hundred of Benlafur.

If in an action on the oath of hue and cry it be alleged, that the oath was taken after a justice of peace of Yorkshire, this will be sufficient, altho' objected, that there is no such justice; because that in every riding they have several commisions. See 2 Sid. 45.

As to giving bond for payment of costs, by stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, "That before any action shall be commenced, the party shall not lose his action for this, nor shall he lose his action for this, if the party, or the officer of the county wherein such robbery shall happen, or the clerk of the pleas of that court wherein such action is intended to be brought, or their respective deputies, or before the sheriff of the county wherein the robbery shall happen, and enter into a bond in the hundred, or high constables of the hundred in which the robbery shall he committed, in the penal sum of one hundred pounds with two sufficient sureties to be approved of by such chief clerk, secondary, filizer, or clerk of the pleas, or their respective deputies, or the sheriff of the county, with condition for securing to such high constable or high constables (who are hereby empowered) an entry or entry of such person's appearance, and also to defend such action,) the due pay-ment of his or their costs, after the same shall be taxed by the proper officer, in cafe that he, the or they (the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such action) shall happen to be nonnuit, or shall discontinue his, her or their action, or in case that judgment shall be given against such plaintiff or plaintiffs on demurrer, or that a verdict shall be given against him, her, or them.

And it is further enacted, by the said statute, that when any such bond as above-mentioned shall be entered into before the said sheriff, such sheriff shall immediately certify the same, writing his name, or the name of the said clerk, or the defendant, or to the flazer of the said county wherein such false-robbery shall be committed, or his deputy; in case the action be intended to be brought in the court of Common Pleas; or if in the court of Exchequer, to the clerk of the Pleas, or his deputy; and which certificate shall be delivered by the party or parties robbed to the said chief clerk or secondary, or his or their deputy, or to such flazer, or his deputy, before any process shall issue for the commencement of such suit as aforesaid; and such chief clerk, secondary, flazer, or clerk of the Pleas, or their respective deputies, or the said sheriff, shall not take any greater fee or reward for making, nor shall any such clerk, secondary, flazer, or clerk of the Pleas, or their respective deputies, take any greater fee or reward for receiving and filing such certificate, than two shillings and fourpence, which certificate shall be delivered by the party or parties robbed to the said chief clerk, secondary, flazer, or clerk of the Pleas, or their respective deputies, and sheriff, as aforesaid, are hereby required to deliver over gratis (upon reasonable request made for that purpose) all and every such bonds, to be by them respectively taken pursuant to this present act, to the high constable or high constables to whose use the same shall be taken as aforesaid.

6. At what time the action is to be brought; what evidence will maintain it, and what shall exceed the hundred.

By the 27 Eliz. c. 13, para. 2, it is enacted, That no perfon or perons robbed shall take advantage of the statutes, to charge any hundred where any such robbery shall be committed, except he or they or he robb'd shall commence his or their suit or action within one year next after such robbery committed.

In the construction whereof it hath been holden, That if a perfon be robbed the 9th of October 13 Geo. 3d and so laid, and the teffe of the writ be the foth October 14 Geo. 4th that this is not pursuant to the statute; and that in this action, which is penal against the hundred, there is no reason to exclude the day on which the fact was committed; nor such contexts to be done in protections and the involvement of deeds, which have always received a benign interpretation.

In an action on the statute of hue and cry, the plain-tiff made oath according to the statute, and within twenty days brought a writ and brought bond, and being suspicious, let it fall, and after the twenty days took out a new one, without making any oath anew, or entering any continuances between the said writ and that; and the court held clearly, that the second writ was not brought according to the statute; for so they said, that proviso in the statute would be to no manner of purpose.

An action was brought by the master, on the statute of Winton, for a robbery committed on his servant, in which he declared of an assault and battery done to himself, (though then 50 miles from the place,) also that he made oath that he did not know any of the perons; the chief clerk, or such as he made record; and the jury appeared at the bar ready to try it; but being for other business adjourned to another day, the plaintiff observing his mislake moved to amend, by declaring of a robbery on his serv- ant, &c. and it appearing that the year in which the action must be brought was expired, and consequently the action must be left if not allowed, the court, after long debate and consideration of former precedents, ad- mittid him to amend.

And it seems that from the necessity of the case, the party himself that was robbed is to be admitted as a witness, but then his testimony must be corroborated by collate- ral proof and circumstances, and such as may induce a jury to believe that a robbery was actually committed, and that the party left what he declared for.

But now by the 5 Geo. 2, cap. 16, rectifying, That by the laws then in being, the peron or perons robbed may not be a witness, the action to be brought against the hundred, as a witness to prove the fact; that money, goods or effects whereof he, she, or they, was or were robbed; and yet no peron inhabiting within the said hundred, can be admitted as a witness for or on behalf of the said hundred, by reason of the interest he or she may have in the consequences of the said action, which is commonly very considerable; therefore it is en- acted, That in any action already brought, or to be brought, against any hundred, any peron inhabiting within the said hundred, or any person thereof, shall be admitted as witness for or on behalf of the said hundred, in the same manner as if he or she were not an inhabiting thereof, but refused in any other hundred what- ever.

By the statute of Winton 13 Ed. 1, cap. 1. & 28 Ed. 3, cap. 11. the robbers must be taken within forty days after the robbery committed; also by the said laws it was necessary that all the robbers should be taken, to execute the hundred, but 1st Lev. 569. 3 Lev. 320. Dyer 37c. a. 1. 2 S7. 1. & 3. But now as to this latter matter, by the 27 Eliz. cap. 13. para. 2. it is enacted, That any robbery is, or shall be hereafter committed by two, or a greater number of malefactors, and that it happen any of the said offenders to be apprehended by pursuit, to be made answerable to the said former mentioned laws and statu- tes, or according to this act, that then, and in such case, no hundred or commune shall in any wise incur or fall into the penalty, loss or forfeiture mentioned either in this present act, or in any the said former statutes, also the resjudie of the said malefactors shall happen to escape and not to be apprehended; any thing in this sta- tute, or in the said former statutes, to the contrary not withstanding.

If a robbery is committed, and hue and cry made, and afterwards, within the forty days, an inhabitant of the hundred finds one of the robbers in the presence of a judge of the peace, who charges him with the robbery, and that the peron who that he shall have no alter- coming, this is a taking within the statute; for being in the presence of the justice, it must be understood that he was in his custody and power, and therefore not necessary to lay hold on him.

In an action on the statute of hue and cry, and within twenty days brought a writ and brought bond, and being suspicious, let it fall, and after the twenty days took out a new one, without making any oath anew, or entering any continuances between the said writ and that; and the court held clearly, that the second writ was not brought according to the statute; for so they said, that proviso in the statute would be to no manner of purpose.

By the 8 Geo. 2, cap. 16. it is enacted, That no hundred, or commune therein, shall be chargeable by virtue of any of the statutes, if any one or more of the fe- laons, or felons wherein such robbery shall be committed, be apprehended within the space of forty days next after public notice given in the London Gazette, as by the statute is provided.

And by the said statute 8 Geo. 2. to the intent that hue and cry may be made with more diligence and effect, and the robbers apprehended within the space of forty days, it is enacted, That any peron or perons, who shall ap- prehend such felon or felons within the time herein be- fore limited for that purpope, whereby the hundred hath been actually apprehended or discharged from such an action as aforesaid, shall, upon due proof thereof, upon oath made before two judges of the peace, (which oath the said judges are hereby also empowered and required to administer,) be intituled to the reward of 10l. which fum fam shall be raised upon the hundred by a taxation and affirmative, to be made, and to be levied, and collected in the same manner as the other sums of money, by this present act appointed to be raised upon the hundred, are directed to be affixed, levied and collected; and such sum of 10l. which shall be so raised, shall constitute a double for the hundred for the performance of the duties of the peace, within ten days next after the same shall be levied and collected, to the use of the person or persons who shall be thereto intituled, as a reward for having apprehended such felon or felons as aforesaid; and such justices shall, upon reasonable request made for the same, and shall deliver to the person or persons who shall, upon such request, be intituled to such reward, shall not thereby be rendered incapable to be a witness in any such action.

7. How the money is to be levied, and each hundred to contribute to the charges.

By the 27 Ed. cap. 13. par. 14. reciting, that although the whole hundred, where robberies and felonies are committed, with the liberties within the precincts thereof, and the liberties without the precincts bowing to the party robbed his damages; yet neither left the recovery and execution, and by for the party or parties robbed, is had against one or a very few persons of the said inhabitants, and he and they so charged have not herefore had any means or ways to have any contribution of or from the residue of the said hundred where the said robbery is committed, to the great importation of them with such recovery or execution is had, by theo. 5. of the said statute it is enacted, that after execution of damages by the party or parties so robbed had, it shall and may be lawful (upon complaint of the party or parties so charged) to and for the said justices of the peace, within the hundred, and in the liberty, and for the constables of every parish within the hundred, and also for the constables of every town, parish, village and hamlet, in the liberty, shall, by virtue of this present act, have full power and authority, within their several limits, rateably and proportionably, to tax and assize, according to their abilities, every inhabitant and dweller in every town, parish, village and hamlet, for and towards the payment of such taxation and affirmative, as shall be so made upon every such town, parish, village, and hamlet, as aforesaid, by the said justices: And that if any inhabitant of any such town, parish, village and hamlet, shall obstinately refuse and deny to pay the said taxation and affirmation, fo by constables, constables, headboroughs, or head-boroughs, taxed and assized; that then it shall and may be lawful to and for the said constables and headboroughs, every of them, within their several limits and jurisdictions, to distraint all and every person and persons, inhabitants, and to collect and recover, as aforesaid, the said taxes and contributions for the same, and they and their successors in office, and that they and their successors in office, may do and cause to be done what they shall please, as aforesaid, respecting the said taxes and contributions.
as the costs and damages of him, her or them recovered shall amount to, and to the use and behalf of the said high costable or high conflables, for so much as his or their expenses in defending the said action shall amount to, of which the said high costable or high conflables shall give in an account, and make due proof upon oath, to the satisfaction of the said justices, before any such then and thereupon shall be fixed for the reimbursement of such high costable or high conflables (which oath the said justices are hereby impowered and required to administer), and shall in such expenses have no further allowance toward paying an attorney to defend the said action, than what such attorney's bill shall be taxed at by the proper officer of the said action (which shall be taxed in accordance with the said statute made, 27 Eliz. in order thereby to reimburse such high costable or high conflables such taxed costs, as by reason of such infolvency he or they shall not be able to recover and receive of and from the plaintiff or plaintiffs in the action, or his or their securities, as afoforeaid.

And it is further enacted, "That the several sums of money, which shall be so rated and asfessed, and levied and collected as afoforeaid, for the reimbursement of the expenses necessarily sustained by any high costable or high conflables in defence of an action brought against the hundred upon the statutes afoforementioned, or either of them, in case of any judgment given against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, shall be paid within ten days after such collection, unto the said justices, or one of them, to the use and behalf of such high costable or high conflables, to whom the said justices shall, upon request, pay and deliver over the same."

And it is further enacted, "That the justices of peace, by whom such taxations and assennents as afoforeaid shall, in pursuance of the said statute made in 27 Eliz. and also of this present act, be afoforeaid, shall limit and appoint, at their discretion, some certain reasonable time within which such taxations and assennents shall be levied and collected, which time shall not exceed thirty days; and also that any such officer or officers, who are to levy and collect such taxations and assennents as afoforeaid, shall refuse or neglect to levy and collect the same within such time, as shall be limited and appointed by the said justices of the peace for their doing thereof, or shall refuse or neglect to pay and deliver over the sums of money so levied and collected, to the said sheriffs, and also to the said justices, in such manner as the same, or the several cases herein afoforementioned are respectively directed to be paid, within the respective times herein before limited for such payment thereof; every such officer shall, for every such refusall or neglect, forfeit double the sum appointed to be by him levied and collected as afoforeaid.

By statute 22 Geo. 2. cap. 24. No perfon shall recover against any inhabitant of any hundred, in any action on any of the statutes of hue and cry, more than 200 l. unless the persons robbed, at the time of such robbery for which such action is brought, be in company at two at least, and the same shall be in being foh forty days.

By statute 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. sect. 34. No writ of execution against the inhabitants of any hundred on any judgment obtained by virtue of any act of parliament shall be levied on any particular inhabitant of such hundred; but the sheriff shall on receipt of every such writ, cause the same to be produced to two justices of peace, as is directed by statute 20 Geo. 2. cap. 16. sect. 4. and upon the said justices shall as is directed by the said act, cause a taxation to be made and collected for paying the cost and damages recovered by the plaintiff, and all such necessary expenses as any inhabitants of such hundred shall have been at in defending such action, the said taxation to be levied upon the inhabitant of such hundred, as is directed by the said act, and the demands of all such inhabitants be being first taxed, and the sums so collected shall be returned to the action by the said act directed to be paid to the sheriff, and by him paid over to the persons intituled to the same, without deduction or fee.

Rules of Court. Attorneys are bound to observe the rules of the court, to avoid confusion; also the plaintiff and defendant in a cause are at their peril to take notice of the rules made in court touching the cause between them. The common law makes a rule for a thing which may be done by the ordinary courts; and if the court be informed that they have made such a rule, they will vacate it. Mich. 23 Car. 2. B. R. And it a rule made by the court ground upon an affidavit, the other side may move the court against the affidavit. If the court shall bring an action upon the affidavit and rule made, that the affidavit may be read, to put the court in mind for what reasons they made the rule, and whether there be stronger reasons for the vacating of it, than there were for the making of it, or not. 2 Lil. 494. Where a rule of court is made, and it is not drawn up and entered before the continuance day of the case, then the party in whom the rule will not draw it up afterwards until the court be moved, and shall again order it to be entered. For breach and contempt of a rule of court, an attachment lies; and if a rule of court is made between parties by their consent, though the court would not have made such rule without their consent, yet if either party refuse to obey such a rule, made the court, will upon motion grant an attachment against the party that disobeys the rule. Hil. 1655. But generally an attachment is not grantable for disobedience to any rule, unless the party hath been served with it personally; not for disobeying a rule at nisi prius, till it is made a rule of court; nor for disobeying a rule unless the party be checked, if he be not entered. Salary, (Salarium) Is a confideration or recompence made to a man, for his pains or industry bestowed on another man's business. The word Salarium at first signifies the rents or profits of a Sale, hall or houfe. In Gajenoe they now call the rents of noblemen Salsi, as we do houls. It afterwards fecd for any wages, flippd, or annual allowance. Coxeil, edit. 1727.

Sail (wendiis) Is the transferring the property of goods from one to another, upon valuable consideration. And if a bargain is that another shall give me $l. for such a thing, and he gives me earneth, which I accept, this is a perfect sale. Wood's infl. 216. On sale of goods, if earneth be given to the feller, and part of them are taken away by the buyer, he must pay the refidue of the money upon fetching away the reft, but no other time is appointed as the earneth given binds the bargain, and gives the buyer a right to demand the goods; but a demand without paying the money is void: And it has been held, that after the earneth is taken, the feller cannot dispose of the goods to another, unless there is some default in the buyer; therefore if he doth not take away the goods, and pay the money, the feller ought to require him to do so; and then if he doth not do it in convenient time, the bargain and sale is diffolvd, and the feller may dispose of them to any other perfon. 1 Salk. 113.

A feller of a thing is to keep it a reasonable time for delivery: But where no time is appointed for delivery of things fold, or for payment of the money, it is generally implied that the delivery be made immediately, and payment on the delivery. 3 Salk. 61. Where one agrees for wares fold, the buyer must not carry them away before paid for; except a day of payment is allow¬ ed him by the feller. Nay 87. It is laid a perfect bar¬ gain and sale between private, will be good, though the parties are of an execution that is against him; and doth sell the goods to prevent the falling of it upon them. 3 Spep. Abr. 115. A sale may be of any living or dead goods in a faif or market, be they whofe they will, or however the feller come by them; if made with the caution required by law: But if one fell my goods unduly, to another person, they are again. Dott. and Stodd. 328. Perk. feft. 93. If a man affirms a thing fold of it is such a value when it is new, this is not actionable; but if he actually warrants it, at the time of the sale, and not afterwards, it will bear an action, being part of the contract. 2 Greys, 368, 630. 1 Rot. Abr. 97. See Sales and Extrascts, 5 Geo. 3. Abr. 274.

This page is not clearly legible due to the quality of the image. It appears to be a page from a book discussing legal and historical matters, possibly from a work on English law or history. The text is fragmented and contains references to various historical and legal figures, as well as terms such as "privy seal," "house of Lords," " peers," and "Commons." The content includes discussions about the rights and privileges of certain groups, such as the nobility, and it references various legal and constitutional issues.

Due to the quality of the image, a precise transcription of the text is not possible. The page seems to discuss the rights and privileges of certain groups and their ability to act with impunity, possibly in reference to historical events or legal cases.
